MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

(From the issues of the Nashville Banner of June 24 and June 25, we take the following report of the meeting of the General Board of Education, which was held in Nashville last week.)

The Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South, closed a two days' session in this city to-day (June 24) at 1:30 o'clock. Bishop Hoss was the presiding officer, and all the members of the new Board appointed at the meeting of the General Conference at Oklahoma City were present with a single exception. The Board appropriated $18,000 for ministerial education, this sum to be placed in the hands of the Educational Commission for distribution. No appropriation was made for Vanderbilt University, but $11,400 was set aside for Paine College, and $2000 was appropriated to Lane College. Rev. H. C. Howard, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, was elected Secretary of Ministerial Relief and Supply, and Mr. W. E. Hogan was elected Assistant Secretary of Education. The sum of $9000 was authorized to be paid Vanderbilt University, being the balance due its theological department up to the close of the present session. The Board adopted a formal reply to the statement recently issued by the Vanderbilt Trustees, which though temporarily withheld from the public, was given out by its chairman, Bishop Hoss, on Thursday, June 25.

Board's Reply

The Board of Education's reply is in the nature of an exception to and a protest against the action of the Board of Trust in refusing to submit the names of trustees-elect to the Board of Education for confirmation. It is alleged that about sixteen members of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust had been elected but not submitted for confirmation prior to the meeting of the General Conference at Oklahoma City. The Board of Education challenges the correctness of various statements made in the resolutions of the Board of Trust.

The reply to the Board of Education follows: To the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assembled in special session at Nashville, Tenn.: Your committee to whom was referred the matter of confirming the Trustees of Vanderbilt University, begs leave to report as follows:

First—On June 8, 1914, Dr. Stonewall Anderson, as Secretary of the Board of Education of said church, addressed a communication to Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, Nashville, Tenn., containing, among other things, the following:

"You have doubtless noticed that the General Conference committed to the Board of Education the matter of confirming members of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University. I notice the annual meeting of the Board of Trust is to be held prior to June 23. Will you kindly send the names of all the members of the Board of Trust who have not been confirmed to the Board of Education, in order that it may confirm or reject the members elected to fill vacancies on the Board at the meeting called for June 23, 1914?"

Second—On June 16, 1914, W. R. Cole, Secretary of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, addressed Rev. Stonewall Anderson, Secretary, the following communication:

"Nashville, Tenn., June 16, 1914.—Rev. Stonewall Anderson, Secretary Board of Education, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.—Dear Sir: I beg to transmit herewith a certified copy of a resolution adopted by the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University at its session on June 16, 1914, referring to the recent action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, touching Vanderbilt University. Kindly acknowledge receipt.

Respectfully,

(Signed) "W. R. COLE,
"Secretary Board of Trust, Vanderbilt University."

Third—Enclosed in this communication was a newspaper clipping to which was attached a certificate of correctness by W. R. Cole, Secretary of the Board Trust. (This communication is identical with the one published in the Nashville papers of June 16.)

All the foregoing have been carefully considered by your committee.

Inasmuch as the Board of Trust has, by its action, refused to submit any trustees heretofore elected by it to this Board for confirmation or rejection, and has already announced its action by publication in the daily newspapers of Nashville, it would seem to have been unnecessary for that Board to do more than simply notify us that they refused to submit trustees to this Board for confirmation. In this connection, however, the Board of Trust has undertaken to make assertions with reference to its own action, the action of the Church, and the decision of the Court in the recent litigation.

We are not in the least minded to indulge in a belated controversy that could yield no good results, but we do feel called upon to reply briefly to some of the matters set forth in the foregoing action of the Board of Trust.

Court Decision.

As to the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee, we do not need to be informed that it is the law of the land and must be obeyed. As men of ordinary intelligence we are fully aware of this fact. At the same time we reiterate our respectful but solemn belief that the decision in question does not meet the justice or the equities of the case. It is as certain as anything can be that the university was projected by a convention of delegates from several Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; that the committee which was appointed to apply for the charter was appointed on the principle of Conference representation, so many from each Conference; that these incorporators were named by the decree of the court in the charter itself as "representatives" of said Conferences; that they at once took the charter granted them by the decree of the court, describing them as "representatives" of their respective Conferences, back to the Board of Trust for acceptance or rejection, and that the Board of Trust in August, 1872, accepted said charter which described the incorporators as "representatives" of said Conferences respectively; that they also took the charter to the Annual Conferences for acceptance or rejection, and at the same time resigned their places on the Board, in order that the Annual Conferences might have the opportunity of directly electing their own representatives, which was done; that at one of the earliest meetings of the re-organized Board they published themselves as "the organs and agents of the Conferences;" and that for nearly forty years nobody ever once intimated anything to the contrary. At the end of that time, on the bare technicality that the lawyers for the incorporators had failed to mention their representative character in their petition for a charter, the Supreme Court decided that the incorporators had acted all along in their individual capacity.

We are also forced to deny categorically the statement in the published action of the Board of Trust that the Church is responsible for the existing misunderstanding.

The very beginning of the trouble was the effort of the Board in 1905 to repudiate the charter of the university and to declare as mere surplusage the Memphis resolutions, which the Supreme Court of Tennessee in the present case has affirmed to be the very "articles of foundation" of the university.

This was followed at the same time by the action of the Board of Trust in attempting to take out a new charter, which eliminated the Memphis resolutions; nowhere mentioned the connection of the university with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; nowhere recognized any rights of the Church in the University, and which—if it had not been successfully prevented by the agencies of the Church—would have resulted at that time in the total loss of the university to the Church. This action was taken shortly after the establishment of the Carnegie Foundation and following an indirect but unsuccessful effort to obtain the benefits of that foundation, this failure being due to the fact that Vanderbilt University was a denominational university, to which the benefits of the Carnegie Foundation were not accessible.

Challenge Statement.

We also challenge the correctness of the statement of the Board of Trust that—"This Board is not responsible for the present situation, for prior to the institution of said suit it never refused to submit for confirmation the names of new members elected by it." The fact is, as shown by the records of the Board of Trust, that in June, 1910, said Board passed a resolution refusing to submit the trustees then elected to the Board of Education for confirmation, rescinded its then existing by-law requiring that all trustees-elect be submitted to the Board of Education for confirmation or rejection and resolved thereafter to elect them without submission to any representative body of the Church. It was more than four months thereafter, to-wit, on the 25th of October, 1910, that the Church, having been completely ousted of any control or recognition by the Board, instituted the suit attempting to sustain and enforce its rights.

We enter our protest against the constant proclamation that the Church has been a sort

WHAT A GATHERING THAT WILL BE.

"What a gathering of the ransomed that will be,
When the blest who sleep in Jesus.
At his bidding shall arise
From the silence of the grave, and from the sea,
And with bodies all celestial they shall meet him in the skies—
What a gathering and rejoicing there will be.

"When our eyes behold the city with its many mansions bright,
And its river, calm and restful, flowing free,
When the friends that death has parted shall again in bliss unite,
What a gathering and a greeting there will be."

THE STEVENSONS REST TOGETHER.

By Samoa's lonely mountain the ashes of Mrs. Robert Louis Stevenson will soon be interred beside the body of her husband. In deference to her last wishes, her children, Lloyd Osbourne, the author, and Mrs. Strong, the daughter who was referred to so caustically in Mrs. Stevenson's will, will take the urn containing the ashes to Samoa, where Stevenson went in vain search for health, and there deposit them in the tomb on the summit of Mount Vaca. This grave is almost inaccessible, being reached only by a tortuous mountain path. However, it is where Stevenson wished to be buried.

Already on the door of the tomb is the verse which he wrote as his epitaph:

Under the wide and starry sky,
Dig the grave and let me lie.
Glad did I live, and gladly die,
And I laid me down with a will.
This is the verse you graved for me:
Here he lies where he longed to be:
Home is the sailor, home from sea,
And the hunter home from the hill.

Under this will now be inscribed the stanza which in his last days he wrote for his wife:

Teacher, tender comrade, wife;
Fellow-farer, true through life;
Heart whole and soul-free
The August Father gave to me.

Stevenson's wife was his bulwark of inspiration, and he loved her tenderly. She, too, was devoted to him, and nursed him patiently, just as she assisted him most earnestly in the preparation of his excellent literary work. Her influence is potent through all of his numerous writings. It is fitting, therefore, that they should be placed side by side in death, in compliance with their wishes. The thousands of readers of Stevenson—those who read him while young, and who read him with even more appreciation now that they are grown-ups—will be interested in the sentimental, but entirely appropriate act of the author's two stepchildren.—Jackson Daily News.

PROSPERITY—MATERIAL AND SPIRITUAL.

By Rev. C. C. Selecman.

The material and the spiritual are next door neighbors, as is illustrated by the relation of the mind and the body. The material is as necessary to the success of the spiritual as man's body is necessary to his present life. The Church of Christ is the only institution in the world that undertakes to carry on its campaign by means of voluntary contributions from its members. No purely commercial institution would be bold enough to undertake such a program, and yet the Church is employing thousands of skilled laborers; inaugurating educational and missionary campaigns; building hospitals and orphanages, and endowing colleges and training schools. Her real estate holdings amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, and annually she is expending colossal sums.

It is therefore to be expected that some definite method should be suggested in the Word of God for the support of this vast enterprise, and it is our purpose to discover that plan and apply it to our own lives. The Old Testament Church was supported by the tithe. In the New Testament, St. Paul directed his followers to lay aside a certain definite proportion of their incomes upon the first day of every week. In the New Testament, every one is instructed to give—the poor and the rich. Jesus immortalized the widow who gave her pittance into the treasury of the temple. Upon the first day of the week, that is, at a definite time, proportionate giving was suggested. People were to give as God had prospered them. And cheerfulness in giving was commended: "not grudgingly," said the great Teacher, "or of necessity, for God loves a cheerful giver." The followers of Jesus were encouraged to believe that if they sought first his kingdom, they should be prospered materially and spiritually. "All these things shall be added unto you," was the promise of the Master.

In the last chapter of the Old Testament the prophet declares if we bring all the tithes into the storehouse that God will open the windows of heaven and pour out upon us an uncontainable blessing. This is the same prophet that says that those who refuse or fail to bring the tithes into the storehouse are robbing God. What some people call stinginess, the prophets call robbery. We do not need so much a gospel of generosity as a gospel of common honesty. This army of ministers and missionaries who are serving Jesus Christ do not desire to be considered objects of charity, but feel that what they receive in the matter of salary or support is in return for their lives of service.

St. Paul said to the Macedonian Church, "If I have ministered unto you in spiritual things, it is a great thing if you minister unto me in material things." In other words, St. Paul had given to the Macedonians vastly more than they were giving to him. The gospel of Jesus Christ is enriching the world. Lines of trade and commerce follow the missionary. These conditions of peace and industry are necessary to material prosperity and are guaranteed and perpetuated by the influence of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The obligation to support the Church, therefore, is no mere sentiment. The appeal of the Church is not to charity, nor even to generosity. It is an appeal to the sense of justice. If the Church of Jesus Christ is worth while, every man who enjoys its blessings, either directly or indirectly, should join in its support, and we have the promise of his Word that if we honor the Lord with our substance, then shall our barns burst with plenty.

VANDERBILT, THE APOSTATE.

(The annual literary address at the Commencement of Emory and Henry College, in Virginia, this year was delivered by Dr. S. A. Steel. His subject was "The South's Part in the Making of the Nation." The following extract from the address, referring to the separation of Vanderbilt University from the Church, will be of interest to our readers. Dr. Steel sees in the action of Vanderbilt University in breaking away from the Church which founded it in order to obtain money, a symptom of a most dangerous tendency, a tendency to substitute the principle of commercialism as a rule of action for the moral ideal of conduct. That this principle should prevail in one of the great institutions of learning in the South, and be asserted in such a spectacular way, as in the Vanderbilt case, is a just reason for alarm to all those who understand the relation that the modern university sustains to society, and who believe that godless education is the ruin of the State.)

The South has contributed to the Nation a noble example of fidelity to that ideal of civilization which puts the moral above the material interests of society.

Let me illustrate it. Not long after the surrender at Appomattox, Gen. Lee, who like all Southerners, was impoverished by the war, was offered a salary of fifty thousand dollars a year to be president of some business concern in New York. When he declined it, the men representing the business told him his duties would be very light, as what they wanted was his name. The noble man blushed visibly and asked them what he had ever done to lead them to think that his name was for sale at any price. Lee, sir, turned aside from the path that led to wealth and ease to accept a position that barely supported him, but which enabled him to devote his life to serving the higher welfare of his country. That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Take another example. After the war closed many Southerners went to live in New York City. They wanted a preacher whose ability and eloquence would command the respect of the metropolis, and they offered a Methodist minister in Virginia, ten thousand dollars a year in gold to accept the place. But like Lee, James A. Duncan was guided by far higher considerations than making money. He declined the call to accept a salary of fifteen hundred dollars as president of Randolph-Macon College, where he could help his struggling people to rebuild their desolated country, thus giving to the institution and to the youth of the land an ideal of disinterested devotion to duty worth more than all the gold in the vaults of New York. That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Take another example. When forty years ago I left this college to become chaplain of the University of Virginia, one of the professors in that institution was offered three times the salary he was receiving to accept a chair in a Northern university. But though hardly able to make buckle and tongue meet on what he was receiving here in the South, he declined the offer, saying, "Virginia needs us now." That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Take another example. There is a name held in high honor among us, and around whose memory gather associations very grateful to those who knew him. He had access to the lords of wealth; his position put him where he could easily make money; had he cashed his opportunities, he might have died a millionaire. But he lived for higher ends, his heart was set on nobler aims, and he wrote in his will, "I die poor." Bishop McTyeire died poor, but he kept the faith of his people, and fulfilled the apostolic boast, "as poor, yet making many rich." That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Take another example. It is said that when Mr. Carnegie decided to give a million dollars to establish a hospital in the South, the offer was made to Sewanee, on condition that it would become independent of the Episcopal Church. It was a tempting offer, for vast power is stored up in a million dollars applied to education and our Southern institutions are sadly in need of money. But the offer was declined with the statement that Sewanee considered her ideal of Christian education worth more than all the wealth of Carnegie. It was a noble answer, worthy of the South and of Leonidas Polk and Quintard, and the great Church that founded the institution. That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Take another example. When the same offer was made to Vanderbilt University, on the same condition that it would renounce its connection with the Church, and the trustees of Vanderbilt accepted it, the Bishops of the Methodist Church, in the exercise of their legitimate authority, vetoed its acceptance. This action was endorsed by the unanimous voice of the Methodist Church, and commended by the religious press of all denominations throughout the country, because the situation created a square issue between the principle of Christian as against non-Christian education. In refusing to accept Mr. Carnegie's money on the condition which he attached to it, the Methodist Church was faithful to the fundamental principles of our civilization. That, sir, has ever been the ideal of the South, to put manhood above money.

Mr. President, since the South has always put manhood above money, and its noblest leaders have refused to exchange its ideals for vulgar wealth, in accepting Mr. Carnegie's money on the condition he demanded, Vanderbilt University has broken with the traditions of our people, repudiated the ideals of our civilization, exalted money above manhood, adopted that utilitarian philosophy which makes self-interest the rule of conduct; traded off its spiritual assets for stocks and bonds; and expelling religion from its halls, has set up the golden calf as the divinity at whose shrine it will bow down and worship. Sir, the fact that this money was offered by a man known to be hostile to the principle and policy of Christian education, which has always been recognized as fundamental in our American conception of society; the fact that it was accepted on the stipulated condition that the university would become independent of the Church; the fact that the university was willing to take dishonorable advantage of legal technicalities to falsify history, defeat justice, and pervert equity in order to obtain the money; above all, because it illustrates the bitter hostility of the university to the Church, the fact that it celebrated its victory over the Church with loud and boisterous revelry, and mocked and jeered, with rihald jest and sarcastic sneer, as, at the mandate of the court, and with bowed head, the white-robed spirit of Christian education, departed from its halls—these facts, sir, leave us no room to doubt that in its heart Vanderbilt University has renounced its loyalty to the spirit of the South. It is hereafter to be known as Vanderhilt, the apostate.

Let it be remembered, sir, that the triumph of Vanderbilt was the triumph of non-moral over Christian education; that what it celebrated with such jubilant and unseemly demonstration was the legal divorce of learning from religion; that what it gained was the triumph of lawless and anarchic freedom over the principle of ordered and rational liberty which is the very foundation of American democracy; that it means that Vanderbilt University has expelled Christianity as the presiding genius of the institution; and that McTyelre's stately figure, as the patron spirit of the academic grove, has been toppled from its pedestal by ruthless hands, and in its place is reared a modern Mephistopheles; and instead of the benignant smile that encouraged Christian culture, the students of Vanderhilt are hereafter to have the inspiration of a sneer!

Mr. President, what can the Nation expect from education divorced from religion? What, sir, but corruption can flow from a source that barter truth for gold, which, by ingenious legal legerdemain, incorporates falsehood in its very constitution, and possesses an ethical standard so low as to celebrate its successes with such vulgar orgies as marked the end of the Vanderbilt contest with the Church? Well, sir, does Mr. Williams, the editor of the Roanoke Times, say in commenting on the Vanderbilt case, "When we send into the world a human being with only a trained mind, and a certain amount of information, we have produced a dangerous monster. The better its intellectual equipment, the more of a menace to society it is."

There was never a time, sir, when America needed as much as it needs to-day to be reinforced in its higher centers of power with a sense of moral responsibility. The Republic now faces the perils under which the great empire of Rome sunk into ruin. It is at peace with all the world, and its power is respected by all nations and feared by many. Unparalleled material prosperity abounds from sea to sea. The lust for wealth and luxury and sensuous pleasure is universal. The energy, enterprise, intelligence and progress of our people are the wonder of the age. Sir, there is only one way to avert from our great republic the doom that overwhelmed the world-empire of antiquity, and that is to hold it steadfastly loyal to that ideal of Christian civilization which makes "a man more than fine gold, even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir."

This is no time, sir, when a deluge of materialism is surging around us, and the love of money is honey-combing every department of our life, and the very foundations are being assailed, and the "age is crammed with menace," to expel religion from our halls of learning and convert our schools and universities into breeding places of intellectual monsters. The world, sir, is looking to America for the spiritual leadership of the race. And some of us had indulged the hope that the great institution of learning founded at Nashville by the faith and courage of the Methodist Church would be a potent ally in the work of making a larger and a better America. But in this we have met a sad disappointment. Seduced by gold from its allegiance to our Table Round, Vanderbilt University has proven a traitor knight. Dominated by the commercial spirit of the age it has violently wrenched itself away from its Christian associations, and become only a training school for intellectual animals. It has betrayed all the ideals of our people and contradicted the whole past of our history. In the light of the bonfire on its campus, sir, where its students danced "the Bishop's squirm" around the honored graves of McKendree and McTyelre, and yelled in loud and reckless revelry, the noble conduct of Lee and Duncan in preferring duty to Northern gold seems like the folly of irresponsible idiots! It is certain that we can never expect such nobility from men trained in a school which makes gold the criterion of success.

Over the entrance to Vanderhilt University henceforth let one melancholly word be written, "Ichahod!" for the glory has departed! Rich in money, but poor in character and discredited in all the circles of the world's best thought; like an ungrateful son who, to win an estate, renounces his family, forges the credentials of his ancestry, falsifies the sacred registry of his baptism, and swears he does not know the mother who bore him; no longer a temple of truth, at whose shrine the eager acolyte of knowledge kneels to receive his consecration to the highest ends of life, but an intellectual pawn-shop, whose appropriate emblem is the sign of three brass balls, and the legend, "non virtus, sed pecunia," shining brightly, but with the hateful light that allures only to destroy the youth of our land with its atmosphere of poisoned thought; proud, puissant, and splendid in its livery of gold and with its gilded lance, but with the "har sinister" on its shield, and "grosser grown than heathen, spitting at its vows," Vanderbilt University may no longer ride in the lists with those who would redeem the realm.

"Alas for Arthur's greatest knight, a man
Not after Arthur's heart!"

Mr. President, there is no greater danger that threatens us now than that which lurks in the capitalistic influence of American academic endowments that seek to alienate our educational institutions from the Church. Sir, the unregulated liberty which the opponents of Christian education demand is a deadly peril to our country. It is the freedom of the ship without a pilot; the freedom of the spirited horse, harnessed, but with the bridle off; the freedom of the anarchist with the dynamite bomb; the freedom of Diderot and Voltaire, of Rousseau and the Encyclopedists, enthroning the goddess of reason as its divinity and reaping the Reign of Terror as its result. "France," sir, "had seen a light; preached a gospel all men's good." But her ideal of liberty was license which repudiated religion, closed the churches, and declared itself independent of God; and "Celtic Demos rose a Demon, shrieked, and slaked the light in blood!" Such is the freedom, sir, sought by those who would bribe the priests of knowledge to turn traitor to the Church, and steal from sacred altars the hallowed fire of God!

Mr. President, Mr. Carnegie's policy in excluding denominational schools from the benefit of his munificent gifts to education is dictated by a view of the Church at once erroneous and superficial. It is erroneous, for it assumes that denominational schools are maintained for sectarian ends, which is not true; and it is superficial, for it is based on a non-moral theory of human society. The Church, sir, is based upon the fact that this is a rational world; and that there is a moral order in the universe, conformity to which is the necessary condition of life. It holds that moral principles are more important than intellectual truth for the conservation and development of man, and that it is better to starve than steal. The Church is, therefore, the conservator, and guide, and inspirer, and promoter of the moral life of the race. Subtract it from the sum of things, and what is left is a negligible trifle, not worth sending to the scrap pile! Its truth is the postulate of the universal reason; the vitalizing affirmation of the spiritual consciousness of the race; the scientific synthesis of the infinite phenomena of transcendental experience; the everlasting moral imperative of conscience; and the indestructible foundation of the social order, deep as eternity and strong as the throne of God!

Mr. President, it is amazing that a man of Mr. Carnegie's intelligence and benevolent spirit should take such an attitude toward the Church. Sir, the faith it fosters is the illumination of the world, the inspiration of humanity, the source of the moral enthusiasms of the race, and the dynamic of progress. Its spirit is the constructive power of civilization, and its horizon is infinite. It is lifting the submerged millions of mankind into light; extending the luminous and "far-flung" lines of its redeeming work by the wide invasions of its truth into "all the dark places of earth's heathen races;" undermining the huge tyrannies of materialism by the persistent penetration of spiritual forces into the innermost recesses of the world's life; substituting the pallid negations and devitalized moralities of agnostic and infidel thought with the efficient verities of a living Christian experience as the inspiration of social progress; everywhere making men familiar with its lofty watchwords of liberty, brotherhood, democracy, purity and peace; keeping humanity in touch with God; and laughing to scorn, with the dread mockery of divine contempt, the inane speculations of infidel philosophy and the idle oppositions of science falsely so-called!

Mr. President, the future belongs to the Church. It always has belonged to the Church. Indeed, sir, the Church alone has a future that means anything to man. The petty denominational differences which have distracted Mr. Carnegie's attention and misled him to affront its moral dignity and assume an unfriendly relation to it, are but surface agitations, and like the ever-tossing billows of the sea, do not disturb the deep underlying unity and validity of its mighty life. Sir, these very agitations are a proof of its power, the clang and clash of a conflict with the forces of evil that will not cease till truth is triumphant over all its foes. The Church, sir, is divine, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Its radiant spires will point the faithful heavenward, and its message kindle the fires of immortality in the hearts of the children of men when the proudest monuments of infidelity are in the dust, and the owl shall hoot, and the wolf shall howl, and the satyr dance, and the serpent hiss amid the long-forgotten ruins of Vanderbilt University! Sir, let us remember the vision of the Milvian Bridge and its flaming legend, "In hoc signo vinces," "in this sign conquer," and identify ourselves more closely still with that moral order of the world which puts manhood above money; for in that ideal are the potency and promise of the progress of the race!

"The shouting and the tumult dies,
The captains and the kings depart:
Still stands God's ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget!"

Church News

It is reported that Bishop A. W. Wilson may visit Europe in the near future.

Dr. A. C. Dixon, formerly of Chicago but for the past three years pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London—Spurgeon's Church—is now conducting an evangelistic mission in Norway.

Bishop E. H. Hughes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is stated to have been a tower of strength to the prohibition cause in Southern California, where lately it has had some notable triumphs.

The Commencement sermon of Wofford College this year was preached by Bishop Collins Denny, whose discourse is reported to have been a most appropriate and illuminating one. Bishop Denny is one of the ablest and most scholarly of our chief pastors.

At its recent Commencement Trinity College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Plato T. Durham, a distinction which was well merited. At the same time the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon the Hon. Lee S. Overman, one of North Carolina's United States Senators.

Dr. Maitland Alexander, of Pittsburg, Penn., the new Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, is a grandson of Dr. Archibald Alexander, one of the founders of the Princeton Theological Seminary. The Alexanders have had a large part in the history of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

The number of Salvation Army members on the ill-fated Empress of Ireland when she went down in the St. Lawrence River was 140. Of these only twenty were saved. These workers were on their way to the World Congress of their organization in London, and when that great gathering came together a memorial service in honor of those who perished was conducted in the famous Albert Hall.

Through Bishop McConnell, who lectured at the Seashore Divinity School last week, we learned that Bishop W. P. Thirkield, who has been in the North for several weeks, has recently been quite ill. We trust that he will speedily overcome the maladies that have been afflicting him and be able to resume his work at an early date. The Bishop's summer home is at Marshfield Center, Mass.

The National Executive of the American Anti-Saloon League has created a National Legislative Committee composed of Dr. James Cannon, Jr., of Blackstone, Va.; Dr. A. J. Barton, of Waco, Texas, and the Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, of Columbus, Ohio. Dr. Cannon is the chairman of this important committee, and will be much about Washington in the interest of pending legislation for the next few weeks. Methodists have always been in the forefront of the battle against the rum traffic.

Bishop Mouzon's address for the present will continue to be San Antonio, Texas. Addressing the St. Louis Christian Advocate, the Bishop says: "I shall keep my residence in San Antonio until I shall have held the Conferences on the Pacific Coast, when I shall move to Dallas in order to co-operate more fully with the work of the Southern Methodist University and in order to be nearer the center of this great Southwest."

In a letter to the Texas Christian Advocate, Bishop J. H. McCoy wrote as follows: "The welcome I am receiving to the presidency of the Texas Conferences is beyond anything I have experienced. It would warm the heart of a wooden man. I am planning to spend practically all of the summer and fall going over my episcopal district. I realize that I have an enormous task and that I shall need to look carefully at first hand into many situations." Bishop McCoy has distinguished himself as a field worker ever since his election to the episcopacy.

The Western Methodist (Little Rock) thus refers to a recent visit from Dr. W. F. McMurry: "That great big 'Church Extension Idea' that the Southern Methodist Church has dressed up in a fat man's clothes, with a wealth of gray hairs on the head, an encouraging smile on the face, and a thousand church building enterprises in the heart, called at our office last week while in the city looking after the building troubles of some of the local churches." This description fits our hustling Church Extension Secretary most admirably. Dr. McMurry has built up the work of his department until it now challenges the admiration of Southern Methodists everywhere, and it is steadily growing.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District Conference convened on the morning of June 11 at nine o'clock in the splendid new church at Queensboro, Shreveport, with the presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Coleman, in the chair. The opening address by Brother Coleman was of a very helpful character. It was on the subject of "Pastor-teachers—Their Requirements."

There was a good showing of delegates, though not as many laymen as there might have been. J. Cude Rousseaux and W. F. Roberts were elected secretaries.

The reports from the pastoral charges indicated that there were very many more additions to the Church on profession of faith than were reported at the last Conference, and also that some very successful meetings had been held at hitherto difficult points. There were also reports from various quarters as to the recent and intended erection of church buildings. The district trustees were authorized by the conference to locate, and build or buy a district parsonage.

Our educational interests were well cared for by Brother Paul M. Brown and the heads of our two schools, Dr. R. H. Wynn and Professor R. E. Bobbitt. Plans are being wisely laid for increasing the equipment of these institutions, and in the reports of the work many encouraging features were noted.

The Seashore Divinity School was well represented by the presiding elder and Dr. Wynn, both of whom are on its Board of Directors, and an offering in cash and subscriptions was made for this work amounting to $31.50.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan spoke of the work in our Home for the Church's children. Those cared for there under his direction are not only looked after physically—no deaths have occurred—but they are also cared for spiritually and intellectually. They are brought to Christ and taught to work for Him.

The character of the following local preachers was passed and their licenses were renewed: W. R. Strickland, John Boyd, Q. R. Henry, and A. D. Barlow. The licenses of T. C. Aubrey and J. L. Pitkin were not renewed.

Lewis L. Spinks was licensed to preach. The character of A. C. Holder was passed, and at his request he was recommended for re-admission into the Annual Conference.

The following lay delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: W. A. McKennon, L. M. Harris, R. E. Bobbitt, and S. H. Porter; alternates, S. P. Peters, W. S. Phillips, V. L. Fulton, E. L. Joiner.

The Presiding Elder appointed the following licensing committee: George S. Sexton, Henry T. Young, E. K. Means, F. J. McCoy, and J. C. Price.

A resolution of thanks to the hospitable people and the pastor, Rev. F. J. McCoy, of the Queensboro Church, was adopted by a unanimous vote. The preachers will also remember pleasantly the banquet given them by the Shreveport laymen.

South Mansfield was selected by a small majority over Vivian as the next place for the next meeting of the conference.

Besides Rev. T. H. Morris, who preached the opening sermon, the other brethren who preached were Revs. Geo. S. Sexton, R. W. Tucker, E. K. Means, and J. C. Rousseaux.

J. CUDE ROUSSEAU, Secretary.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

The Commencement exercises of Whitworth College, May 17-19, marked the close of a successful session of this honored institution. Everything passed off according to previous announcement and the exercises measured up to those of former occasions. Rev. B. F. Jones, D.D., of Moss Point, preached the Commencement sermon; Rev. T. B. Clifford, of McComb, preached the annual sermon before the College Y. W. C. A., and Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D.D., of Hazlehurst, delivered the literary address. The appreciation of the services rendered by these brethren was evidenced by the close attention given and the many words of commendation spoken. The students' recitals the week preceding Commencement and the grand Concert on Monday evening of Commencement week were of a high order and indicated the thorough work accomplished by both teachers and students. Fifteen young ladies received diplomas and several were given certificates of graduation in special departments.

The Mississippi Conference has every reason to feel proud of Whitworth College. A great work is being done for the young womanhood of our Church and State, and with the loyal support of our preachers and the Methodists of the Conference, it can be made one of the greatest institutions in the South. Dr. Cooper, the worthy president, is giving the best part of his life to this great work and deserves the co-operation of us all.

The contract will soon be let for the New Center Building, which is to be completed by the opening of the session in September. This will be an up-to-date building, with fine equipment and all the modern conveniences. With the completion of this building, there will be three new buildings on the campus representing an investment of more than $40,000. Had the Methodists of our Conference responded to the generous offer of the Lampton Brothers and the earnest efforts of Dr. Cooper as they might have done, larger things would have been accomplished and a greater Whitworth would have been assured.

We do not hesitate to commend this institution as worthy of the patronage of our people. A good faculty, a well organized musical department, a well arranged course of study, beautiful and comfortable buildings, healthful surroundings, a fine religious influence, and a Christian minister as President, make this a most advantageous and safe place for our girls, and it should appeal to the fathers and mothers who contemplate sending their daughters to college.

Brookhaven, Miss.

MEETING OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

of pauper beneficiary of the Board of Trust in the matter of the education of its young preachers. Whatever the Board has done in that direction, it has done not of its own will, but under the categorical and mandatory direction of the third Memphis Resolution, which expressed the mind of the men who projected the university and which the Tennessee Supreme Court has declared to be valid and binding. This resolution cannot be ignored except by the reckless defiance both of the language of the charter and of the decision of the Supreme Court. Moreover, we wish to repeat and emphasize the fact which we are determined shall never be forgotten, namely, that every dollar of the money spent on the Theological Department of the University was procured, not through the agency of any trustees, nor with the knowledge of any trustee, but absolutely and solely through the agency of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, acting in his capacity as a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or through the gifts of Methodist people made for that specific purpose.

Except to Interpretation.

The Board of Trust has undertaken to construe and interpret the action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Oklahoma City in May, 1914, and to declare the legal results that follow therefrom.

We except to the interpretation placed upon the action of the General Conference and to the resolutions and actions of the Board of Trust passed thereon, and hereby enter our solemn protest against the action of the Board of Trust in refusing to submit trustees elected to the Board of Education for confirmation or rejection.

We furthermore call attention to the fact that about sixteen Trustees of Vanderbilt University had been elected by the Board but had not been submitted to the General Conference, or to its Board of Education, for confirmation or rejection prior to the meeting of the General Conference in May, 1914, though two full months had elapsed since the decree of the Court requiring them to take that step, and, that although cognizant of the time and place of the meeting of the Board of Education, to wit: On May 2, 1914, the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, disregarding the decree of the Supreme Court in the recent litigation and the rights of the Church, failed to submit any of the Trustees elected but not confirmed, to the Board of Education, and proceeded with its meeting, and we hereby enter our exceptions to and protest against this action of the Board of Trust. Respectfully submitted,

E. E. HOSS,
P. D. MADDIN,
B. P. TAYLOR,
JOHN R. BOND,
T. L. CLARKE,

Committee.

This report was unanimously passed by the Board.

E. E. HOSS, President,
ANDREW SLEDD, Secretary,

On June 7 the Oak Lawn Church, of Dallas, Texas, of which Rev. C. M. Simpson is pastor, closed the first half of the current Conference year, when the following report was printed in the Bulletin of that congregation: "All current expenses have been paid in full up to date; $7500 has been spent on the new church enterprises; the attendance at Sunday school has been more than doubled; all other departments have been characterized by vigorous activity, and 105 persons have been received into the Church, making a net gain of 97." Since this report was published the number of additions to the Church has been increased to 121. Evidently this son of Mississippi College and ex-Mississippian is doing a great work in the Lone Star State.

Secular News and Comment

It is estimated that the sale of automobiles during the year 1914 will probably reach the $600,000,000 mark.

President Wilson has appointed Mr. Malcolm Franklin, of Columbus, Miss., collector of customs at the port of Honolulu at a salary of $5000 a year.

According to Commissioner Claxton, the latest census shows that there are in the United States 5,500,000 persons above ten years of age who cannot read or write.

At its recent Commencement—the 167th—Princeton University conferred degrees on 232 persons. The gifts to this institution during the past scholastic year amounted to $612,524.

The number of Indian students matriculated in American colleges is stated to be over 80. From three to nine are in attendance upon each of the following universities: Yale, Harvard, Columbia, Michigan, Pittsburgh, Northwestern, Chicago, Illinois, Iowa, Washington, Wisconsin, and California.

The following is the record of the State Charity Hospital at Jackson, Miss., from January 1, 1914, to June 1: Number of patients admitted, 828; number of operations performed, 417; number of deaths from disease, 45; number of deaths following operations, 31; operative mortality, 7.5 per cent.

It has been announced that President Wilson will attend and take part in the opening exercises of the Panama Canal next March. In company with his Cabinet, he is expected to pass through the great waterway on the battleship Oregon, and after reaching the Pacific Ocean to proceed to San Francisco.

The bill pending in the Louisiana Legislature which forbids municipalities to maintain restricted districts was engrossed and passed to its third reading on June 23. A motion to postpone this measure indefinitely was lost by a vote of 41 to 46. It will be a great achievement for the State if this proposed legislation is finally adopted.

Hereafter persons owning automobiles in New Orleans will not have to secure a license, nor will chauffeurs have to stand an examination before being allowed to operate them. This change, which is due to an enactment of the State Legislature, was against the wishes of the Mayor of the city. It is likely now that the permissible speed-rate will be considerably reduced.

A magnificent arch, constructed with $100,000 appropriated by Congress, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies at Valley Forge, Pa., on June 19 as a memorial to the officers and privates of the Continental Army who went through the memorable winter campaign with Washington in 1777. This arch was designed by Prof. P. M. Cret, of the University of Pennsylvania, and is said to be modeled after the famous Arch of Titus in Rome.

The final figures show that the cotton crop of 1913 amounted to 14,156,436 500-pound-weight bales, which is the largest ever grown except that of 1911. It was the most valuable crop ever raised, the lint cotton being sold for $887,160,000, and the seed for $156,600,000, making a total of $1,043,760,000. One of the significant developments in cotton production last year was the raising of 22,838 bales in the Imperial Valley, in Southern California, and of 2229 bales, most of which was of the Egyptian variety, in Arizona. It is thought that the cotton industry will probably take on larger proportions in these two States in the future.

The Bar Association of Caddo Parish recently held a meeting to consider ways and means for the suppression of the spirit of mob violence, which has lately manifested itself in three attempted lynchings in Shreveport. This is a matter well worth deliberating upon; nothing is more dangerous than a mob, and it is quite as apt to do the wrong thing as it is the right thing. In our opinion, the courts themselves, because of their delays and uncertainties, are largely responsible for the disposition of the people to take the punishment of alleged criminals into their own hands. Here we think are the evils to be remedied by our lawyers if they wish to make lynchings less frequent.

The late James Campbell of St. Louis provided in his will that practically all of his large estate, estimated at from $35,000,000 to $40, 000,000, shall ultimately go to the establishment and maintenance of a medical school in connection with St. Louis University, a Jesuit institution. This property, however, will not become available until the death of the decedent's wife and daughter, and not until twenty-one years after the death of the latter in case she should marry and have children. The authorities of the institution in order not to delay the proposed great enterprise are considering the advisableness of borrowing money with which to get it under way. With such an endowment, it is predicted that this medical school will finally become one of the best equipped institutions of the kind in the world.

SOUTHWESTERN STUDENTS' CONFERENCE.

The Southwestern Students' Conference has just closed a most successful session at Monte Ne, Arkansas, lasting from June 12 to June 21. Students were in attendance from all colleges in the four States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma, in addition to many professors and prominent speakers from these institutions; the delegation from Hendrix College was especially strong and reflected much credit upon their alma mater.

The denominational statistics of the Conference were as follows: Methodists, 26; Presbyterians, 26; Baptists, 23; and other denominations scattering. Among the Methodists who were in the faculty were Dr. O. E. Brown of Vanderbilt University; Prof. A. M. Trawick, International Y. M. C. A. Secretary in the Social Service Department; Mr. W. H. Morgan, International Y. M. C. A. Secretary for the South and Executive Manager of the Conference; Rev. W. W. Alexander of the Tennessee Conference; Mr. F. M. Steger of A. and M. College of Texas; and Dr. A. A. Kern of Millsaps College.

No one agency is doing as much to render clean and wholesome the life in the colleges of the Southwest as the Southwestern Students' Conference and its influence radiates out into every college in that section. As a direct result of the Conference seven of the choicest men there volunteered for the foreign field, while others were led to choose the ministry as a life calling. It is gratifying to find that the Methodist Church is doing its full share in this movement, whose object is to conserve for the Master's service the students of the Southwest.

LOUISIANA EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Louisiana State Epworth League which met in annual session in Shreveport in the First Methodist Church, June 17-21, 1914, was a great blessing to our people, and the delegates also affirmed that the many benefits derived would enable them to render far better service in their home chapters. We did not carry out the program in order, as the team sent out from Nashville were delayed in reaching us because of belated trains.

We were very fortunate to have as the team assigned to us by the central office, Dr. E. H. Rawlings and Rev. J. M. Culbreth. Very few changes were made in the suggested program gotten up in the central office, but with such able leaders for institutes and addresses the whole was of a very high order and was calculated to give valuable training for service. Dr. Geo. S. Sexton, our pastor, who is so well known in League work, aided greatly by conducting one period of institute work, and his sermon on Sunday morning was a great inspiration.

To Dr. Rawlings we are grateful for stereopticon views of the League's new special, the Congo Mission in Africa. The aim of the Leagues is to support Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Stockwell, of the Lake Charles (La.) chapter, who are now in that field.

Miss Miriam Atkins, the Third Vice President of the State League, was chairman of all recreations, giving a reception on the opening night, an auto ride the first afternoon, and a picnic supper on the Centenary College campus the next afternoon.

The Junior League service held in the Noel Memorial Church Sunday afternoon left many impressions that will never be forgotten. We make special mention of the leaders, who were Martha Crowder, Harriet Edwards, and Gussie Gibbs, together with a blackboard drill on the catechism by Bessie Marks. Luther's Cradle Hymn was sung by Thelma Cain. Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Binford, superintendents who labor so faithfully in this special work, will ever have monuments built in the hearts of the membership of that church.

The regular topic for the senior devotional meeting was used by Mr. J. F. Cox, who was assisted by Mr. R. O. Coopender and others on Sunday evening just before the consecration service conducted by Dr. Rawlings. In the latter many delegates and others responded to Dr. Rawling's request for expressions of benefits. The crowning feature came in the after service in the chapter room when a spiritual love feast was held of voluntary prayers and good-byes.

Mrs. Randall Hunt gave a most interesting address on "Alcohol's Relation to Society," using maps and charts. Resolutions were sent from this meeting to the State Legislature in session at Baton Rouge requesting that alcoholic liquors be denied shipment into dry territory.

There was a great vacancy which we hope will not occur next year, and that was Dr. F. S. Parker's absence. We hope at our next meeting to have the same team and Dr. Parker.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows:

President, Rev. H. W. Jamieson, New Orleans; Second Vice President, Miss Myra Price, Lake Charles; Third Vice-President, Mr. R. O. Coopender, Alexandria; Fourth Vice President, Miss Clara Chalmers, New Orleans; Field Secretary, Mrs. Sudie J. Lingle, Shreveport; Treasurer, Mr. E. P. Griffin, Mansfield; Era Agent, Mr. Robt. Magee, Kentwood; Junior Superintendent, Miss Ruth Coles, Estherwood; Superintendent Knights of Ezelah, Mr. S. Mayo, Lake Charles; State Organizer, Mr. John D. Saint, New Orleans.

The next session will be held in New Orleans, June 19-22, 1915.

I rejoice to be back in the work I so much love, and with the corps of officers named I feel sure that we will regain the losses of the past two years, and make progress that will be telling.

MRS. SUDIE J. LINGLE,

Field Sect'y. Louisiana Conference Epworth League.

A COMMITTEE ON LESSON COURSES.

The General Sunday School Board at its meeting in Oklahoma City, Okla., on May 23, 1914, created a Committee on Lesson Courses composed of Dr. E. B. Chappell, Dr. J. A. Rice, Dr. W. P. Few, Dr. O. E. Brown, Prof. Bruce Payne, Dr. J. J. Stowe, and Prof. R. G. Peoples.

The duty of this Committee, as defined by the Board, is (1) to make a thorough study of Sunday school courses, special Sunday school courses for our college students, and courses for parents; (2) to study the best method of co-operation on the part of the Church with the public schools in religious education; (3) to study the matter of selecting proper Sunday school libraries both for pupils and for officers and teachers.

Dr. E. B. Chappell, Sunday school editor, was elected a member of the International Lesson Committee representing the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

In these modern days, with distance almost annihilated, the home minus a telephone is figuratively cut off and isolated.

Household duties, social requirements, pleasure and entertainment, sickness and business are all more or less dependent upon the telephone.

Lonesome moments may be turned into pleasant conversation with friends and relatives in the next block or the adjoining State.

Marketing and shopping may be done without effort from one's own home.

"THE LITTLE CHURCH AT HOME."

There is a habit among church members which is rapidly becoming a scandal. There are thousands of church members who have been living, let us say, in New York, Boston or Philadelphia, for a quarter of a century and whose membership is still in Pennsylvania, Maine, or Virginia. These people float from church to church; they enjoy a sermon here and there, but they never have a church home. They have become "church tramps," having no sense of obligation to attend any church in particular. Often they stay away from church altogether. They claim that the little church at home needs the money they can afford to give, but often we have wondered if the little church at home really gets much from the members who have lived away from it, and who have neglected their Christian obligation for years and years. If the "little church at home" gets much money from such people it fares better at the hands of its passing members than some larger churches within our knowledge. In many instances these absent members have ceased to communicate with the home church, their names having probably been erased, and they have been lost to the denomination and probably to the work. Pastors who hold on to the names of their absent members are in part to blame for this state of affairs, but whoever is to blame, it is a shameful state of affairs.

If this paragraph comes under the eye of those who have a loved one living far away from home, we trust that it will be the occasion of a letter in which this paragraph will be inclosed.—Watchman-Examiner.

A SUNDAY AT PONTOTOC.

Dear Brother Meek: Excuse me for asking for a little space in the columns of the Advocate again. It is a great privilege to preach the Gospel of the Son of God. If you can't preach it yourself, how helpful and inspiring it is to hear it preached! We had a great day Sunday. There were three Methodist preachers in the pulpit, or rather two and a fragment. Rev. D. R. Wasson, who has entitled himself "my little hired man," preached at the 11 o'clock hour. "Show us the Father," was his theme, or rather his text. He made a fine impression. Brother Wasson has a well trained intellect, a love for souls, and is a spiritual man. Such a man just needs time to develop into a leader of men in the Church of God.

Brother G. W. Bachman, who has been thirty years at the same appointment, was the other preacher. He fills the space behind the sacred desk well with his magnificent presence. He closed the morning service in his usual well poised way. Grand old veteran of the Cross! He is as courageous as a lion and as simple and tender as a child. What a prayer he prayed! It was a real prayer. There was no effort to preach on his knees or to inform God, but praise and thanksgiving flowed from his lips as naturally as water from a spring.

At the evening hour of worship Brother Bachman took his text from what he called a neglected and little appreciated portion of the Scriptures, the Book of Revelation. He dwelt a little while on the mysteries of the book and called attention to the fact that the largest part of it is very easily understood. Then he took up John's vision of the triumphant Church, using Rev. 8:9. He did not preach a textual sermon, but covered the whole passage and references, drawing a vivid picture of that great and glorious event—the triumph of redeeming grace through Jesus Christ. How deftly he can quote the most appropriate hymns at the right place. The people said, "That's the kind of preaching we were all raised up on." The pastor and assistant pastor felt ashamed, really penitent. God helping us, we will do better.

Brother Bachman has done a great work for his Lord and Church. May his human vision be entirely restored! The eyes of his understanding are bright and sparkling, and growing brighter every day.

I do not know whether I will ever again vote to superannuate another aged minister if he can walk around and preach like many who have been superannuated. Let the young men wait—work their way through college. The Church ought to help our young probationers more. May God bless our great Church. The outlook for Methodism, educationally and otherwise, is very encouraging, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. If I did not believe that God is with us as a Church, I would quit right now.

W. D. WENDEL.

THE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

As chairman of the Second Year Committee of the Louisiana Conference, and in answer to a question of one of the undergraduates, I desire to notify the members of the Class of the Second Year that, under the latest enactments of the General Conference, persons taking the Correspondence course must come before the Committee. I personally advise all the members of the Class of the Second Year to take the correspondence course as a means of getting the very best out of the course and doing the very best work. The following is taken from the General Conference Daily of May 20, page 103.

"Paragraph 641, Answer 2. All ministerial candidates are strongly urged, before entering the traveling connection, to secure if possible a thorough collegiate and theological training. A certificate of graduation from a secondary school of good standing may be accepted by the Examining Committee in lieu of the English branches prescribed in the course for candidates for admission. In the case of English-speaking Conferences, the course for undergraduates shall be taken with the Correspondence School or at a Preachers' Institute having the Conference courses of study as part of its work, and in each case an official statement testifying to that fact shall be presented to the Conference Examining Committee. (In the last sentence the word 'shall' was amended to read 'may,' and the reading of the paragraph will be 'may be taken with the Correspondence School,' etc.) On presentation of such statement the Examining Committee shall test the applicant's knowledge of the course of study and shall report on the same to the Annual Conference; provided that a certificate from a standard college of our Church, or from other than Methodist Colleges of equal grade, may be accepted in lieu of any or all collegiate subjects prescribed for Conference undergraduates; and a certificate from a Theological Seminary, or from the Biblical department of a standard college that equivalent work has been done, may be accepted in lieu of the Biblical and theological subjects prescribed for candidates for admission or for Conference undergraduates."

The class of the Second Year of the Louisiana Conference will please take notice of the above and be governed accordingly. No examinations will be conducted by the Committee of the Second Year between now and the Conference session. The chairman of this committee was homharded four or five times during the last Conference year by an undergraduate demanding examinations at interim by correspondence. Our persistent brother, not satisfied with the pre-Conference homhardment, sent us a post-Conference communication, notwithstanding the fact he failed to be on time to meet the Committee.

Chairman Com. Second Year of the Louisiana Conference.

MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Monroe District Conference convened in its forty-fifth session at Winnsboro on June 16th, 10 a.m., with Rev. Wm. Schuble, P. E., in the chair. The usual business of a district conference was transacted. The President presided with ease and dignity. The reports by the pastors were optimistic. The Sunday school work was reported very favorably and finances as receiving due attention. The revival season is hardly on, but Brothers Randie, Miller, and George reported helpful revivals.

The statements of the pastors evidenced quite a lot of material improvement. The charges named show the following improvements: Winnsboro, Rev. D. C. Barr, pastor, has just completed a commodious and up-to-date parsonage; Farmer-ville, Rev. A. J. Cohorn, pastor, has built an elegant parsonage; Mangham, Rev. A. D. George, pastor, has purchased a parsonage; Calhoun, Rev. R. H. Bamberg, pastor, has made splendid improvements on the parsonage; Rayville, Rev. A. I. Townsley, pastor, has put $500 worth of improvements on the parsonage; Oak Grove, Rev. G. D. Purcell, pastor, has moved a church three-quarters of a mile, to a more advantageous site; Bonita, Rev. W. J. Newsom, pastor, has rebuilt one church; West Monroe, where the writer is pastor, has built an annex to the church. These are some of the chief improvements.

The following "connectional men" were present and left us strong messages: Rev. R. W. Vaughan gave an excellent report of his orphanage work. The Conference passed resolutions commending Brother and Sister Vaughan for their work and pledging them support. Rev. P. M. Brown, Educational Secretary, spoke in behalf of the educational interests, and in a strong way presented the urgent needs of Centenary College. The charges of the district made pledges of from $10 to $200 each for immediate relief. Rev. W. W. Drake addressed the conference, stressing the need of our French Mission work. A collection was taken to assist in the work.

The preaching done by the following brethren was thought-provoking and edifying: Revs. A. I. Townsley, R. W. Vaughan, P. M. Brown, and W. W. Drake.

The Conference passed strong temperance resolutions and wired the same to Rev. A. W. Turner at Baton Rouge.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: R. O. Randle, Jr., C. M. Noble, J. R. Henry, and D. L. Cumpston. Alternates: S. D. Rinehart and A. H. Carter.

M. H. Honeycutt and S. N. Jordan were licensed to preach. S. N. Jordan was also recommended for admission on trial. S. W. B. Colvin was recommended for readmission. A. R. Bets was recommended for recognition of elder's orders from the Congregational Church.

Rev. D. C. Barr made a splendid host, and the good people were lavishing in their entertainment. Resolutions expressing thanks for the same were passed. The conference adjourned sine die on the evening of the second day.

H. W. LEDBETTER, Secretary.

PASTOR'S CLAIMS FOR SALARY.

The Methodist Episcopal Church everywhere will be interested in the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington relative to the legal claims of a pastor against a Church for his salary. A Congregational pastor joined the Church and was appointed by a district superintendent pastor of a charge. His salary was estimated and part was paid, but the fruit crop having failed the Church was unable to pay him the remainder. He sued the Church. The case was carried to the Superior Court at Spokane. The Court decided against the Church and, with much unnecessary dicta, ordered the account to be paid with costs. Bishop Cooke, the resident Bishop, was appealed to. The Bishop took the ground that the decision of the Court was subversive of the government and constitutional rights of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States and that it established a precedent destructive to the rights and the privileges of the Church in the whole Northwest. He, therefore, ordered an appeal to be taken to the Supreme Court of the State, with the result that the Supreme Court has just reversed the decision of the Superior Court and sustained every contention of the Church. This is a notable case, far-reaching, and of vast importance to Methodism in the Pacific Northwest.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MY COUNTRY'S FLAG.

By Helen M. Richardson.

My country's flag! My country's flag!
I love your colors true—
Your stripes of white, your stripes of red,
White stars on field of blue;

I will salute you as I pass;
And honor you where'er
I see your red and white and blue Wave proudly in the air.

THE CROCODILE'S FRIEND.

A man was once traveling in the country where the big crocodile lives. There he saw a wonderful sight, which few men have seen.

One day, as he was rowing along a pretty river, he noticed a long way off a large crocodile, twelve or fifteen feet long. It was lying asleep under a bank which was about ten feet high, right near the edge of the river. He did not want to scare the crocodile, so he stopped rowing when he was still some distance away. Then he looked carefully at the place, so as to make sure he could find the exact spot again.

Getting out of his boat, he walked from the shore and went way around on land, so as not to arouse the animal from his nap. At last he tiptoed quietly along the bank just above the creature's head. Stooping down, he peeped over the bank, and there lay the crocodile only ten feet below him.

As the man watched, he noticed a bird near him called the ziczac. It is a cousin of the plover, as large as a pigeon, and grayish in color. Up and down the bird was walking, keeping near the crocodile's nose. Suddenly the ziczac saw the man, but did not fly away, as most birds would have done. Much to the stranger's surprise, it jumped up from the ground about a foot and screamed, "Ziczac! ziczac!" as loudly as it could, knocking itself against the crocodile's face two or three times. It seemed to think that the creature was in danger and ought to be warned.

The noise and the taps against his face aroused the big animal, and he started up. He saw the man on the bank above looking at him, and so, jumping into the air, he dashed into the water. His huge body made such a splash that it scattered the mud all over the poor traveler. In an instant more the crocodile was out of sight.

The traveler waited a while to see whether the animal would return; but at last gave him up, and went back to his boat. He never forgot that big, ugly crocodile and his true little friend.—What To Do.

THREE ORPHANS.

By Edward W. Frentz.

The Bradfords had been settled in their summer home nearly a week when Louis, looking up from his book one afternoon a little before sunset, saw a small brown head pop out from under the corner of the carriage house.

At first the only thing he could think of was a rat, for he had heard his father say at breakfast that rats had been getting into the grain. But he kept very still, and in a little while the head poked out farther, and then the whole body followed, and he saw that the animal was much larger than a rat. In fact, it was as large as a full-grown cat or a small dog. It had a round, fat body covered with grayish-brown hair, and a broad head with small ears that hardly showed at all.

With little runs of a foot or two at a time, the creature ventured farther and farther away from the corner of the house; and then, to Louis' astonishment, it stood up on its hind quarters, with its forepaws hanging down in front, and looked all about, to see whether it was safe to go any farther. But just then Louis leaned too far forward in his eagerness to see, and his book slipped to the floor of the piazza with a loud slam. At that, the strange animal flashed back out of sight into his hole so quickly that it looked like a mere brown streak.

When Louis told the gardener what he had seen, the old man laughed, and said he guessed it was only a woodchuck, and that they would see him again before long; but although Louis watched for several days, he saw nothing more of the brown head or the fat, round body.

But one morning he waked very early, and looking out of his window, saw the woodchuck feeding in plain sight on the grass plot behind the house.

In the corner stood the little rifle that had come to Louis' older brother as a Christmas present, and on a shelf near by stood the box of cartridges. Louis had been allowed to use the rifle when he was with his brother, but had never tried it alone. Now, he thought, his chance had come.

Very quietly he slipped over to the corner, took down the box of cartridges, and slipped one of them into the rifle. Then, barefooted, he tiptoed down stairs, carefully slid the bolt of the back door, and stepped out. Stealing to the corner of the house, he looked round. Yes, the woodchuck was still there, and still feeding! It had not been alarmed.

Louis raised the little rifle slowly, rested the barrel against the corner of the house, took careful aim, and pulled the trigger. At the report he saw something flop, and ran to the edge of the grass plot. There lay the woodchuck, still now, and looking up at Louis with glazing eyes, as if to say, "Why did you do it? Have I ever harmed you?" And then the eyes closed, and the woodchuck was dead.

Louis went back to the house; but instead of feeling proud of what he had done, he began to ask himself why he had done it, and he could not find any good answer.

To be sure, he had heard the gardener say that woodchucks destroy garden vegetables; but when he looked, after breakfast, he could find none that seemed to have been nibbled; and when he went to see what the little animal had been eating when he shot it, he found only a patch of clover.

"What about the young ones?" asked the gardener that noon.

"Young ones?" asked Louis. "What young ones?"

"Why, that old woodchuck had a family. There are three young ones in the hole under the carriage house. I saw them all out together the other day," said the gardener.

"Will they starve to death?" asked Louis, much troubled.

"I'm afraid they will, unless somebody kills them—or feeds them."

Louis asked no more questions. That afternoon he went to work with a spade at the corner of the carriage house. It took him until nearly night, but when he finished, he had three little balls of fur, with frightened black eyes that watched every move he made. The gardener found an old squirrel cage in the loft, and into it they put the three orphans, with a big bunch of fresh clover; and in the morning the clover was gone.

That is the way Louis got his little family. Two or three times a day he had to feed them, but he felt paid when he saw how quickly they began to lose fear of him. In a week he could take them out of the cage and handle them as he could the kitten, and in two weeks they would run all round the yard, picking a dainty clover leaf here and a little sorrel there, but always ready to come running when he whistled to them. It always made him laugh to see them sit up first, when he whistled, to see where he was before they started.

Never did any other family of orphan woodchucks fare so well! Besides the clover and the sorrel, there were tender leaves of lettuce, and the juicy pods of peas, and bits of carrot. All of the family grew round and fat, as their mother had been, and all of them followed Louis around; and whenever the cook would let them, they would crawl in behind the stove and cuddle together and sleep.

When September came, and it was time for Louis to go back to school, the three orphans, now big enough to take care of themselves, were taken to the pasture, and set down beside a beautiful hole in the ground. But since then Louis has never taken a rifle in his hand without first stopping to ask himself what he was going to do, and why.—Youth's Companion.

PROUD OF A PATCH.

A poor boy, with a large patch on one knee of his trousers, was laughed at by a schoolmate, who called him "Old Patch."

"Why don't you fight him?" cried one of the boys; "I'd give it to him if he called me so."

"Oh," said the boy, "you don't suppose I'm ashamed of my patch, do you? For my part, I'm thankful for a good mother to keep me out of rags. I'm proud of the patch for her sake."

A patch is better than a hole, and patched garments which are paid for are more comfortable than new ones which make a man afraid to meet his tailor.—Sunday School Advance.

THE WICKED WORLD.

It's a wicked old world, I've heard you say,

A wicked old world, and I'll agree;

That trouble and sorrow block the way,

And the sunshine is often hard to see.

It's a wicked old world, but tell me, son,

Are you trying to make it a better one?

Are you adding your sigh to the mournful chant,

Or are you lifting a song of cheer?

Are you lending your voice to the tone of cant,

Or are you scattering sunshine here?

It's a wicked old world—but the work you've done,

Has it helped to make it a better one?

Did the word you spoke tend to stop the tears?

Did your hand raise some one who chanced to fall?

Did the hope you preached put an end to tears?

Did you rush to aid when you heard the call?

It's a wicked old world, alas! my son,

But have you made it a better one?

OUR GREATEST WORK.

The summer months constitute the revival season in the rural sections of the South, and within the next two months hundreds of evangelistic meetings will be held among our congregations. The Church is doing no greater work than this, though attempts are sometimes made to belittle it. To be sure, some of those who will make professions of faith, have made them before and have fallen from grace, and they may in the future do the same thing. But this does not discredit the genuineness or value of the work. Most of those who finally reach heaven will doubtless do so after repeated backslidings and renewals. By all means, let such services be conducted in faith and with intense earnestness. No church or community should be allowed to pass through the year without a revival campaign. From such meetings come most of the converts and new members that keep our Church going. The strength of Southern Methodism is chiefly in its country and village congregations, and its mightiest upbuilders are its plain preachers who believe in the old-time gospel and who proclaim it as the veritable Word of God without apology. Continue to press the battle, brethren, and keep penitents coming to the altar and shouts of praises upon the lips of your people. Without being aware that you are doing it, you are exercising the greatest power that operates among men and you are largely saving the day for Christ and his Kingdom. The world does not rightly appraise your service, and the Church too often underrates it, but the Master does not; nor will he in the glorious hereafter.

A CHARACTERISTIC OF THE EARLY METHODISTS.

The Methodists in the beginning of their history were a much persecuted people. The very name by which they finally came to be known and which is to-day honored around the world was originally a designation coined to stigmatize them. The chief reason that they were disliked and ridiculed was no doubt the fact that they stood for and insisted upon a deeper and more consistent personal piety than was desired by the generation then upon the stage of existence—worldliness hates, and has ever hated, true holiness. But this was not the only reason for their unpopularity. Sir Robertson Nicoll, the scholarly editor of the British Weekly, in a recent issue of that journal incidentally states another characteristic that tended to stir up hostility against them, as follows:

"The anger against the early Methodists was largely provoked by their sympathy with the poorest classes. Their critics wrote about the poor in a tone of loathing and contempt which would be impossible now. Every one knows of the letter of the Duchess of Buckingham to Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, on the impertinence of Methodism and its outrage on good breeding in reducing all ranks to the common level of sinners. 'It is monstrous to be told,' says her Grace, 'that you have a heart as sinful as the common wretches that crawl the earth.' When the Prince of Wales inquired why he had not seen Lady Huntingdon lately at his Court, he was answered: 'She is praying with the heggars.' These utterances were not exceptions, but represented the general feeling. The vagrant classes were regarded as creatures that crawl on the earth, as vermin that must be hunted down."

Thus it will be seen, according to this eminent authority, that their attitude of sympathy and helpfulness toward the poor, the outcast, and the suffering was a distinguishing characteristic of Wesley and his first followers. This was part of their glory, and the Methodists of this age should follow in their footsteps and make it no small part of theirs. The Salvation Army workers, or no others, for that matter, should be allowed to live in closer and more constant touch with the destitute and unfortunate ones of the race than the representatives of Methodism. A Church can die with "too much respectability." The mission of the disciples of Jesus is to minister to the sick and needy—to save the lost. Whenever any band of Christians begin to become aristocratic and exclusive, they have lost the spirit of the Master, and no matter what else they may do, "Ichabod" might well be written upon their temples. There is but one way to the Master's favor and the highest glory for either an individual or a Church, and that is the way of service. And they who commit themselves most freely and unreservedly to that way and go the furthest in it to succor and rescue the perishing, will be accounted the worthiest and given the richest reward in the last great day.

"LET US GIVE OUR OWN CHURCH A CHANCE."

The following utterance by Dr. E. G. B. Mann, the vigorous Editor of the Central Methodist Advocate, is so sensible in its suggestions and so timely that we take pleasure in reproducing it on our editorial page:

"We believe the time has come to settle down with the doctrines, name, polity and principles of our own Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and give the Church a fair chance. If we do not soon do that we will not have a Church. It will have been swallowed up in fluctuation and change."

"We have heard so much reference to a provincial name, and have had so much suggestion of change in nearly every feature of our polity until the situation is becoming critical. We believe our Church should look less to her form and ceremony and more to her heaven-born mission."

"God has called our Church into existence for a great purpose, and she has had a great message, and has done a great work. She is not compelled to lower her banner in the presence of any organized Church in point of the purity of her doctrines or the success of her efforts. No Church of all history has accomplished more in the same length of time than she has."

"We are willing to retain the name, cling to her honored history, stand by her tried principles, defend her incomparable polity; hold on to her altar of prayer, ring out her old-time testimony, and give her a fair chance. Her name is no more provincial or sectional than that of the Dutch Reformed, the Greek Church, or Church of Rome. The name she has will serve well enough, if she will only maintain her straightforward reputation, and continue to call men to righteousness and true holiness. Her preachers should quit giving heed to strange propositions, and her membership should not aspire to the form and glory of her neighbors, but both preachers and people should maintain a sound doctrine and life, and deliver the force of her influence upon the world as never before."

"Let us no longer be listening to proposed changes, and thus halt the progress of our great Church. God has given us a place, let us hold it; he has given us a message, let us deliver it. He has given us a work to do, let us do it!"

THE NATION'S BIRTHDAY.

This number of the Advocate is issued on the eve of the Fourth of July, the anniversary of the Nation's birthday. As a rule, we do not believe in holidays and we think that the tendency to multiply them is a regrettable one; but we have always thought that it is right and proper to commemorate the issuance of the Declaration of Independence which marked the beginning of the history of our country as an independent republic, by suspending business operations on its anniversary and making it an occasion for retrospection and the revival of patriotic memories. We fear, however, that the day is not put to as wise a use as it once was, and that its true significance is not now as fully realized as it ought to be. The fires of patriotism ought never to be allowed to die down or to burn low. They are as much needed in times of peace as in times of war. Our country has never confronted graver problems than it does to-day, and the demand for an intelligent and loyal devotion upon the part of its citizens is most urgent and imperative. We are threatened by no foreign foe from without, but gigantic evils from within are menacing the welfare of the Nation.

It is incumbent upon every man beneath our flag to interest himself in public affairs and to seek conscientiously and faithfully to discharge his duties to the State. And true patriotism must specially concern itself with moral questions, for upon them more than anything else depend the national prosperity and the permanence of our free institutions. It was immorality that wrecked the republics and empires of the past, and it still has in it the germ of inevitable destruction. He who would save his country should stand for an open and uncorrupted Bible, for the maintenance of the Christian Sabbath, for the Church and the Sunday school, and for the worship of God in the homes of our people. Christian men laid the foundations of this great Government, and only Christian men can preserve it. It is, therefore, our conviction that our churches ought to take more interest in the celebration of the glorious Fourth and utilize it to a larger extent for teaching wholesome lessons of patriotism and for deepening the sense of civic obligation.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The Seashore Camp Meeting will begin on Wednesday, July 8, and close on July 15. The preaching will be principally done by Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn., who is the chief Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. All ministers present will be furnished free entertainment, and other persons can secure accommodations at a reasonably low rate. It is earnestly hoped that there will be a large attendance upon these services and that the occasion will be one of spiritual interest and power. Why should it not be? The Lord has wonderfully blessed his people at this historic gathering place in past years; and is he not still the same, and are not their needs equally as great as in days ago? We sometimes hear it said that the time for camp meetings has past, but this is not true. In many parts of the country they yet flourish and at them hundreds of precious souls are saved. So, if the conditions are properly met at the Seashore Campground this summer, God will make bare his mighty arm and new converts will be brought into the kingdom and believers will be refreshed and lifted to higher heights of experience.

Pray earnestly for the success of these services and, if possible, go and take part in them. If you will do this in the right spirit, you will both be blessed yourself and make yourself a blessing to others. Here is an opportunity for personal workers to do something for the Master. "He that winneth souls is wise," and they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Greene County (Miss.) Herald states that Dr. Beverly Carradine, of St. Louis, will conduct a ten days' revival campaign at Leakesville, Miss., beginning on July 10.

Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, went to Nashville, Tenn., last week to attend the meeting of the General Board of Education, of which he is a member.

The Brandon (Miss.) News reports an interesting meeting in the Methodist Church at that place, in which the pastor, Rev. O. S. Lewis, was assisted by Rev. O. C. SeEVERS of Meridian.

Writing from Bunkie, La., under date of June 26, Rev. E. G. Wood says: "I am in the midst of a good meeting with Rev. R. S. Waiton, which we are holding four miles from Bunkie, on Bayou Claire."

The Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, Miss., of which Rev. W. G. Henry is pastor, is holding its evening services during the heated season in a near-by public park. This arrangement is reported to be giving fine satisfaction, the congregations so far having been large and quite attentive.

We make grateful acknowledgement to Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, of Zwolle, La., for 17 subscriptions to the Advocate, forwarded on June 23. Brother Rousseaux is one of the live wires of the Louisiana Conference, and he is making proof of his ministry in his present field. He serves a good people and reports that his work is progressing favorably.

Rev. W. W. Holmes occupied the pulpit of the Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans last Sunday evening and delighted his congregation with a stirring message. He was formerly pastor of the Carrollton Church and has many ardent friends and admirers among its members. Brother Holmes paid the Advocate office an appreciated call Monday afternoon and had many good things to say concerning his flock at Ruston, La.

A card from Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., bearing date of June 27, reads as follows: "Our little Dorothy has been at a sanitarium in McComb City for ten days. We hope that she is some better, but cannot yet tell what the final outcome will be." Let the readers of the Advocate continue to remember this anxious father and mother and their stricken little one at the throne of grace.

Rev. C. F. Emery, of Vicksburg, Miss., has our hearty thanks for a club of six subscriptions. Brothery Emery continues to carry the work successfully forward in the historic Hill City.

One of the B. A. graduates at Millsaps College this year was Mr. John Hendrix Mitchell, a son of Rev. J. H. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Corinth (Miss.) District. Mr. Mitchell is a young man of much promise.

The Commencement sermon of the Scooba (Miss.) High School was preached a few days since by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss. It scarcely needs to be said that it was an appropriate and uplifting message.

Rev. Robert Randle, of Eros, La., who is one of the solid men of the Louisiana Conference, was in New Orleans last week to visit a daughter residing in the city. He favored the Advocate office with a much appreciated call on Thursday, June 25.

Rev. L. T. Sargent of Greenwood Springs, Miss., is having success in his work. He is diligent in looking after all the interests of the Church, including the Conference organ. He gave us a club of six subscribers a few days since, for which we extend him our thanks.

Rev. T. J. O'Neill, the capable president of Port Gibson Female College, reports the outlook for the next session of that institution to be very encouraging. We predict that this school will have a career of widening usefulness under Brother O'Neill's direction and leadership.

We are pleased to know that Rev. S. M. Thames, of Hernando, Miss., who lately has been physically indisposed, is steadily improving. Rev. E. S. Lewis, of Oxford, Miss., conducted a series of revival services for Brother Thames last week, in which considerable interest was manifested.

In a business note to the Advocate office, Rev. J. W. Bell, presiding elder of the Aberdeen District, adds the following statement: "My work is progressing nicely. We had a great District Conference. Four young men were licensed to preach. Bishop Murray preached twice, to the delight of every one."

Rev. J. B. Williams, of Ponchatoula, La., writes as follows: "The work is progressing favorably at all four of our preaching places. The people are kind to us, and I am much pleased with my charge." We have never known a preacher to serve in the field now occupied by Brother Williams who did not have kindly things to say of his parishioners.

The address of Mrs. Sudie J. Lingle, who has again been made Field Secretary of the Epworth Leagues of the Louisiana Conference, is 1215 Oakland Street, Shreveport. Mrs. Lingle is an enthusiastic Leaguer and may be counted upon to press the work committed to her hands with vigor and energy. Let our pastors give her their hearty co-operation in building up this needed arm of service throughout the State.

At the recent meeting of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, the following trustees voted against cutting loose from the Church and refusing to let the Board of Education exercise longer the right of confirmation: Dr. E. B. Chappell, of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. W. J. Young, of Richmond, Va.; Mr. J. R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn.; Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., and Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, La.

Our esteemed friend, Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, pastor of the Main Street Methodist Church of Water Valley, Miss., sent us a club of 8 subscriptions on June 23. It is needless to say that we appreciate this good service in behalf of the Conference organ. It is Brother O'Bryant's habit to look faithfully after all the interests of the Church, and he never fails to give a good account of himself in whatever field he labors.

We expect within the next month to bring out two special editions of the Advocate. One will be a Missionary Edition, which will be issued under the direction of Rev. W. W. Drake, Missionary Secretary of the Louisiana Conference, and the other will be an edition devoted to our woman's work, which will be issued under the direction of Mrs. R. F. Harrell, of Centerville, Miss., who edits so acceptably the Woman's Department of the Advocate.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., has been invited to lead in the discussion of "The Duties of the Examining Committees" at the Educational Conference to be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., August 4-7. It is to be hoped that Brother Lipscomb will find it possible to attend the Conference and perform this service, since he is one of the best equipped young ministers in the Church and is quite capable of handling the subject assigned him in an illuminating manner.

A Sunday School Conference, under the auspices of the General Sunday School Board of the M. E. Church, South, will be held at Lake Junaluska, July 22 to August 2, 1914. Many of the finest Sunday school workers in the South will take part in the exercises of this Conference, and it will furnish a rare opportunity for persons who desire to equip themselves for more efficient service in this great department of our Church work to familiarize themselves with the best methods that are known.

Rev. C. T. Floyd, of Abbeville, Miss., says: "Everything is moving along nicely in my charge. We are endeavoring to get things in readiness for the revival season, when we are expecting great things from the Lord, who never fails to do his part when we meet the conditions." Our Brother is right. The Heavenly Father is always on the giving hand, and when there is a spiritual dearth the fault is ours—not his. We trust that Brother Floyd's desire for a revival throughout his charge will be fully realized.

Of his work at Cockrum, Miss., where he is in his fourth year, Rev. R. I. Collins says: "Things are moving upward and onward here. We have a fine prayer meeting at Cockrum, which is often led by young people. Sometimes there are 50 or 60 in attendance. We recently had our 16th Children's Day on this charge, which makes one for each church each year. I have sent to the Sunday School Board during my quadrennium here $112, making $28 a year, an annual average of $7 for the Sunday school of each church."

In a letter forwarded on the 25th ultimo, Rev. V. C. Curtis, one of the Sunday school field secretaries of the North Mississippi Conference, whose home is in Grenada, stated that he had been ill in bed for a week, but that he was convalescent and hoped soon to be all right again. We regret to know that this faithful worker has been on the sick list, and we trust that ere this he has been able to don the harness again and take up his important duties. Brother Curtis is making his influence strongly felt for good among the Sunday schools of his Conference.

The pulpit of the First Methodist Church of Gulfport, Miss., was filled last Sunday at 11 a.m. by Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala.; and on Monday night Evangelist J. B. Andrews, of Siloam Springs, Ark., who had just concluded an excellent meeting at Moss Point, preached to a good audience in the same house of worship. Brother Andrews is a favorite in Gulfport, having held a fine meeting there last winter. It is also due Brother Bowen to say that his sermon and visit were greatly enjoyed by Brother Burton and his people.

Bishop Candler preached a strong and helpful sermon at the Seashore Campground Tabernacle last Sunday morning from the text, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matthew 16-18.) A large congregation listened to the Bishop's masterful discourse, and fervent "amens" were frequently heard during its delivery. Bishop Candler also preached at the evening hour on the Sabbath and remained over to deliver a series of lectures to the Seashore Divinity School the first part of this week.

In a business communication to the Publisher written on June 27, Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Wagona, Miss., says: "I am glad to state that my eyesight has been so improved by an operation that I can read fairly well with the aid of glasses, but for other purposes my vision is still quite dim. I have been able to attend a few of the district conferences, and I hope to meet with the brethren of the Sardis District at Courtland next week and those of the Durant District at Goodman the week following. My general health is very good."

A dispatch from the Seashore Campground to The Times-Picayune on June 29 reads as follows: "It was learned to-day that Trinity College, at Durham, N. C., will offer one of its buildings and will furnish several of the professors, if those who have in hand the work of locating a new theological school to take the place of the one heretofore conducted at Vanderbilt University, will decide upon Trinity College as the place for it. Dr. F. N. Parker, of the Louisiana Conference, Dean of the Trinity Biblical Department, is here to discuss the matter with Bishop Candler."

We take the following from a report of the Summer School of Tulane University, appearing in The Times-Picayune of June 26: "Among the interesting members of the faculty now lecturing in the Summer School is Dr. D. C. Hull, Superintendent of the Public Schools of Meridian. He is to deliver a course of lectures on education, covering a period of two weeks. Among the subjects that he will discuss are school management, school supervision, and the principles of education. Dr. Hull is a very distinguished educator, and his addresses are attracting large numbers of students."

After spending ten days in the Presbyterian Hospital in New Orleans, during which time he steadily improved, Rev. F. N. Sweeney left for his home at Wilson, La., last Saturday afternoon to be present at his third quarterly conference, which Brother Bowman was due to hold last Sunday and Monday. Brother Sweeney's people have arranged to give him a three months' vacation with a view to having him try to build up his health, and he expects to leave for Colorado in a few days. During his absence the work of his charge will be taken care of by Rev. R. S. Petty, a much-esteemed local preacher.

The Southern Reporter (Sardis, Miss.) of June 26 says: "Rev. T. W. Dye came down from Coldwater, Miss., last Saturday night, remaining until Monday afternoon, having filled the Methodist pulpit Sunday morning and night, preaching two good sermons to appreciative audiences. While here he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. Q. West."

From a recent issue of the Texas Advocate we take the following: "Mrs. C. A. Spragins, the wife of Rev. Chas. A. Spragins, presiding elder of the McKinney District, underwent last week a very serious operation in a hospital in this city (Dallas), but we are glad to state that she is doing well at this writing." Brother Spragins will have the sympathy of many friends in his home Conference—the North Mississippi—when they learn of the illness of his beloved wife. We trust that the surgical treatment to which she has found it necessary to submit will prove to be a success and that her health will be speedily and perfectly restored.

Through the courtesy of Rev. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, we have a copy of the Sixty-Third Annual Catalogue of that institution, which has just been issued. It is a very attractive publication and sets forth the advantages of that school in an impressive manner. The past session was a good one in every respect and the outlook for the college is considered very bright. Besides the literary courses offered, a conservatory of music, art, and expression is maintained. The new property acquired has enlarged the campus and will give increased boarding facilities for the next session, which will open on September 15.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson District, writes: "Brother and Sister J. W. Price of Benton, Miss., are sorely bereaved in the death of their infant son, John Wilson, which occurred on Monday, June 24. He was 18 months old and their only child. On June 25 we laid the little body away in the beautiful cemetery at Contrell Church, in Scott County, the mother's girlhood home. The funeral was conducted by the writer." We greatly regret to be apprised of this sad occurrence and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to these stricken parents. May the Heavenly Father comfort and sustain them!

From Camden, Miss., which hereafter will be his address, Rev. C. H. Ellis writes: "My son-in-law, Rev. G. W. Chisolm, who has just graduated from Millsaps College, being without an appointment, has kindly agreed to supply the Moscow charge for me until such time as I may be able to resume the work. My wife continues to be so ill that I feel it is my duty to stay with her and care for her in person. I solicit special prayer in her behalf, that God may heal and restore her to us and his work." We greatly regret to be informed of the illness of Sister Ellis, and we earnestly pray that her condition may improve at an early date and that her life may long be spared to her worthy husband and the other anxious loved ones.

It was our pleasure to spend Wednesday, June 24, and last Sunday, June 28, at the Seashore Campground, where the Divinity School was in full swing. We heard one lecture by Bishop McConnell on "The Christian Scriptures," which, on the whole, was an admirable utterance. Without the slightest attempt at oratory, the Bishop spoke in a plain and simple manner, using no notes at all. His course of lectures appeared to greatly please the brethren. The present session of the Divinity School seems to have been one of the best yet held, both in point of attendance and interest. We acknowledge ourself greatly indebted to Rev. H. W. Van Hook, Dr. W. H. Huntley, and Miss Belle Pennington, whose cottage is one of the most pleasant stopping places on the Campground, for appreciated courtesies during our brief visits.

Through the thoughtful kindness of Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, of Hazelhurst, Miss., the secretary, we have received a prospectus of the Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, which will be held at the Seashore Campground from July 23 to August 3. The program arranged for this interesting occasion is an excellent one, including addresses by Dr. F. S. Parker, Rev. S. A. Stewart, of Hiroshima, Japan, and other speakers of note. Mrs. McCleskey and Miss Ellen Jackson, of Montgomery, Ala., will conduct a Children's Hour service every morning; the vesper services will be in charge of Rev. W. E. Thomas, of New Orleans, and the music will be under the direction of Rev. C. N. Guice, of Canton, Miss. Persons desiring further information concerning this gathering should write Rev. C. N. Guice, Canton, Miss.; Mrs. H. L. McCleskey, Hazelhurst, Miss.; or Miss Ellen Jackson, Federal Clerk's Office, Montgomery, Ala.

On April 25, 1914 the death angel visited Bellprairie, Miss., and entered a lovely home and took from it a devoted husband and loving father Brother W. E. PHILLIPS. Brother Phillips was a good man and sought to uphold all that was right and to oppose all that was wrong. He exhibited a loving and gentle spirit in his home, setting a good example for his family. He was a noble Christian character, whose influence and sterling qualities made his life worthy of imitation. By his energetic efforts he became one of the Delta's best and leading farmers. He loved the Lord, the Church, and was ready at all times with hand, heart, and substance to further the interests of the Master's kingdom on earth. May the peace of God which passeth all understanding keep the hearts and minds of his noble wife and most excellent children in the knowledge and love of God and of his son Jesus Christ our Lord!

W. H. LANE, Pastor.

GEORGE B. SHELBY, Jr., son of Geo. B. and Joe Gwin Shelby, grandson of Janie Poitevent and the late George B. Shelby, was born in Cleveland, Miss., Feb. 15, 1909, and died on June 3, 1914. This was a bright, sturdy and manly little boy, and bade fair to be a good and useful man. He was possessed of many traits of character that forcibly reminded the writer of his grandfather, than whom there never lived a more unselfish man. The most comforting and positive lesson taught by Christianity is Christ's absolute statement, "Suffer the little ones to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." There is no question of one's being born again, or of repentance for sins—omission or commission—no question of baptism, or non-baptism; just a plain statement of facts: "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." No arraignment before the judgment bar. When this child ceased to be a mortal, he entered at once into that realm of peace and joy where there is no suffering, sin or sorrow, and there awaits the coming of those who loved him.

A FRIEND.

Mr. THOMAS BARNES was born on June 25, 1842, eleven miles from Columbia, Miss. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, 7th Mississippi Regiment, and was a faithful soldier in the Civil War. He was married to Miss Tyner on March 7, 1883. To them were born five children, two of whom died when quite young. Those now living, Mrs. Lizzie Bufkin, Mrs. Minnie Ward and Mr. A. S. Barnes, are bereft of a devoted father, and their mother of a faithful and devoted husband. Brother Barnes had never united with the Church, but stood ready to aid the work of the Lord when opportunity presented. His life was one of activity and fidelity in the lines of endeavor in which he engaged. After a brief illness at the family home two miles east of Columbia, death came to him on April 27, 1914. His last words were: "I leave it all with the Lord." Interment was made near the home and witnessed by a host of sorrowing relatives and friends, the services being conducted by the writer. May the faith and love of those who survive be more consecrated to the service of Him who is ever mindful of us while they await the summons to come up higher.

MRS. NANCY DAY HUTCHINSON.

One of the most unique characters that it has been the pleasure of this writer to meet was Mrs. Nancy Day Hutchinson, wife of W. B. Hutchinson, who died near Tangipahoa, La., June 9, 1914, at a good old age. She was the mother of eleven children, had forty-five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, and was the oracle of that section of St. Helena Parish around the Pine Ridge Methodist Church, of which she was for years a leading member. She was a terror to evil doers, and a rewarder of them that did well, and had an active interest in everything that pertained to the welfare of her community, whether it was religious, social, civic, or educational, and we are informed that it was she who caused her Representative in the Legislature to introduce the bill that gave Louisiana her first Sunday law, and another that prohibited horse racing up and down the public roads, both laws growing out of needs in her own community. It seems that the political leaders both honored her requests and feared her opposition, as her voice was listened to in the whole community. The log house, is still standing in which she organized and for years successfully ran a Sunday school when there was not another in that section and she had gotten as far as the Acts in reading her now dilapidated Bible through for the fourteenth time, it being not only her habit to read but to study its holy truths, often burying her face on the page that she was reading, and asking the Holy Spirit to reveal the meaning of the word read.

Thus did she come to the end, worn out in body but still vigorous in mind and great in soul. A mild concourse of those who honored and loved her, she was buried in the family graveyard, but "though dead she yet speaketh," and the memory of her unique and notable life is precious.

ITALIANS ARE VEGETARIANS.

Being new-comers, the Italians are doing the heavy, unskilled work which was once the prerogative of the Irish. The shovel is now as firmly associated in our minds with "Tonio" as formerly with Barney. The northern Italians go much into mine and quarry and silk mill, but the others stick close to railroad, street and construction work. Of our railroads it has been said that "Italians build them, Irish run them, and Jews own them." Nearer to the truth, perhaps, is the New York mot, "Houses nowadays are built by Italians, owned by Jews, and paid for by Irish tenants." Being small and vegetarians, the Italians are not preferred in earthwork for their physical strength, but because of their endurance of heat, cold, wet and muck. As one contractor puts it, "They can stand the gaff."—From "Italians in America" by Prof. Edward A. Ross in the July Century.

Tidings From the Field

Mantachie Circuit.

Dear Brother Meek: Our district conference, which has just closed out at Ecu, was a great spiritual uplift to us. We had some of the best preaching I have ever heard. We thank Brother Mitchell for his faithful service. He is a good presiding elder and a great preacher. We are always glad to have him with us and to hear him preach. He loves the Master's cause. May God bless his laborers, and may we as pastors do our duty, that the Master's kingdom may be advanced and souls saved. We extend our heartfelt thanks to the good people of Ecu for the kind hospitality shown us. While we were there the good Christian home of Brother and Sister Lorick was my home. May the Lord's blessings ever rest on them. They will ever have a place in my heart. That the Lord may bless the Church and add many souls to the saved this year, is my earnest prayer. C. C. CLARK.

Mayhew, Miss.

Dear Doctor Meek: We have been having plenty of rain round about Mayhew lately. Corn and cotton crops are beautiful—very promising. I have been having a good time lately. I will explain what I mean. Rev. J. L. Morrill, an evangelist from Georgia, who spent two weeks with Brother E. H. Mohler in a protracted meeting at Artesia, came to Mayhew and preached for us three days. He was with us on the fourth Sunday in May. We had a good meeting. A young lady and two young men joined the Church on profession of faith. Dear old Doctor Wier came over from Starkville and spent the second Sunday in June with us. He preached in the morning and evening. He would have addressed the children at the close of their Children's Day service, but their service was rained out. We will have it on another day. Doctor Wier was my presiding elder sixteen years ago in the Sardis District. He looks well and preaches well. He has friends here who love him very much. We all enjoyed his company and his sermons.

Brother N. G. Augustus was with us yesterday, the third Sunday. He preached an excellent sermon. I decided that he is a fine shepherd. He feeds the flock of God. He feeds them with good, strong, wholesome food. His wife was with him—a very pleasant lady indeed. It has been a treat to me to have these great, good men with me and to hear them preach. May the blessings of God be upon them all.

June 22. W. J. BURT, Pastor.

Williamsburg, Miss.

Probably a short notice from my charge will be appreciated by the readers of the Advocate. We have been getting along very well on our work all the year, and I am glad to say that we have a growing interest in the work as a whole. My congregations are growing all the time. We have been very busy trying to get the parsonage so we can live in it, and while there is much more to do, we are very well situated. We have had two excellent Children's Days this year. One was at Oakvale on the first Sunday in June, and yesterday (June 21) we had most excellent exercises here at Williamsburg. The congregations were very large at both places. In the afternoon of both days we had Hon. W. U. Corley of Collins with us, who did some of the best lay preaching I ever heard.

Brother Corley is a live wire wherever he goes. I think we were so fortunate in getting Brother Corley, as we could not get the Field Secretary before the fifth Sunday in August; but we are to have him then. We are looking forward to the time when we will be engaged in revival work. I have four of the best preachers in the Mississippi Conference to be with me this year. Brothers P. H. Howse, Geo. Galloway, M. M. Black, and W. J. Dawson are to help in our meetings. We have been praying for spiritual power all the year and when we receive it I shall not be surprised, for it will be "just like Jesus to be with us, to own and bless." Brethren, pray for us and our work.—T. A. Ferguson, P. C.

Chester, Miss.

It has not been my desire at any time, nor is it now, to appear in print. But in sending a few renewals to the New Orleans Christian Advocate I shall take time to say that we are now moving along fairly well with the work of building our new parsonage. The health of the people is good throughout this vicinity. Crops are clean and look quite hopeful. The weevils are bad in places. We held communion at Salem Sunday. It would do you good to see how the valiant soldiers come and take the sacrament in remembrance of our Lord. Now that our people are getting up with their work and the measles and other diseases which have prevailed in these parts for the past two or three months have about ceased to interfere, the people are beginning to come out well to the house of the Lord. I have decided to preach every night now at some one of my seven churches. Thus I am hoping to keep worldliness from growing too much during these leisure days ere the regular season of protracted meetings comes on. We are fixing for our South Union Camp Meeting, having engaged two good men to do all the preaching. I believe more can be accomplished by this method than to have first one, then another to preach.—S. W. Vowell, P. C.

The Sunday School.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Mr. W. W. Williams.

The Country Sunday School.

How are you going to organize in a one-room school? Easy enough. Stretch a wire across the back end of the church high enough for people to walk under it, and about 12 feet from the door. Then stretch wires from each side of the door to this wire. Then hang curtains on them, thereby making two rooms, one in each corner of the back end of the building. Put the Bible class in one room and the senior class in the other. There are several reasons for this. First, these two classes should be organized and separated from the rest of the school. Then again, the children having nothing to do, reach school a little earlier as a rule than the older ones. Most of the late ones are the older ones, and when late, all they have to do is to take one or two steps into their room without disturbing the children who are almost sure to look around. There should be some one person in charge of these two classes, besides the teachers—a department superintendent or secretary—to encourage the activities in various ways, and it takes lots of work off of the general superintendent. This person should increase the attendance, encourage socials, secure all the available literature and books concerning this work, try to see that maps and blackboards are provided, and be the active principal of the department in every way.

Elementary Department.

Every school has an elementary department, whether organized or not. Those under 13 years of age, including the cradle roll, are in this department. There should be a good elementary superintendent, preferably a lady. As general superintendent of my school, I always make my own program, having it short and concentrated—two songs, a prayer and a few words. Then the Bible and senior classes go to their rooms. The superintendent of that department pulls back the curtains to the door, throwing both rooms into one. Then he has a program of his own, which deals with no interests except those of these two classes. He is talking direct to each individual, and not requiring children to sit for what seems hours to them listening to things which are not on their own ground.

At the same time, the elementary superintendent is conducting a program of her own which does not interest grown people but does interest children greatly. My elementary department is the banner department in every way. Every Sunday is a special day in the elementary department. The first Sunday in the month is Cradle Roll Day, and the cradle roll superintendent usually has charge with a splendid program which she has had an entire month to prepare. There are marches, cradle roll songs, and no end of things which interest. The second Sunday is Birthday Sunday. All those who have birthdays in that month stand in a row and are given cards. Birthday songs are sung, welcome exercises and many other features which are outlined in Sunday school books and literature are conducted. The third Sunday is Fisherman's Day, or Home Mission Day—getting new pupils into the school. Each pupil who brings a new one is given a little silver-plated fish to put on his string and a regular program is carried out. The fourth Sunday is Missionary Day. The Uniform lessons provide a missionary lesson for that day. There is no end of features for this day—little missionary objects, etc. The fifth Sunday is Temperance Day and a special program is arranged for that day. Each school should have a missionary superintendent and a temperance superintendent to conduct these services.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

Brother Presiding Elder, if you want the Field Secretary to hold a series of Sunday school institutes in your district, let me know. My time belongs to the Church.

We take our hat off to the Jackson District. Twenty-seven Sunday schools have paid the 5-cent Assessment; the others will soon pay. And the Brookhaven District leads in the observance of Children's Day. Somebody had better get busy.

At the Port Gibson District Conference, which it was impossible for the Field Secretary to reach, the work was well cared for by two members of the Sunday School Board—Rev. J. E. Gray and Mr. Reed. The presiding elder, Brother Adams, never forgets the Sunday school work in his district.

We hear of a place occasionally where the pastor says his people will not have Children's Day or pay the 5-cent Assessment. We wonder if the people really refuse to do this, or if the pastor refuses to give them a chance to be loyal to the Church. It is not left to any one person to say whether this or that shall be done, when the Church has instructed us to do things.

The Sunday school program at the Jackson District Conference was a success in every sense of the word. Rev. P. D. Hardin is another presiding elder who looks well after the Sunday school interests of his district. The Sunday school cause was looked after at the Hattiesburg Conference by the Field Secretary. You will always find Brother Thompson doing the right thing at the right time.

They had a great day at First Church, Laurel, last Sunday. It was Children's Day, the first held in that church for years. The program was most excellent. It was perfectly executed and so delightful were the exercises that it was the talk of those present for several days. Enjoying it as they did, I feel sure that the day will hereafter be observed every year. Why do not others break the record in that way? The attendance of this school has gone from 100 to 225 this year.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Enthusiasm and extension are fine, but conservation is now the key word in Sunday school work.

A leader is one who knows the way; a good leader is one who goes ahead; and a better leader is one who does not go too far ahead. This brief definition of a Sunday school teacher and a good and better one, may help in efficient work.

A fifty per cent efficiency for the average young people is not a high grade, and Sunday school efficiency for the whole school will scarcely reach that much. Should we not aim higher? That is not even a passing grade, and still we are content to do poor work in an inefficient way and wonder why we don't get results.

Keeping in personal touch with the members of a class or Sunday school is an absolute necessity during these vacation months. Visits, at homes for music, games or recreation—the lure of the auto ride, the late morning nap, the Sunday paper and just plain old indolence, catch and hold all too many of those who should attend Sunday school as regularly in summer as winter.

In a certain Sunday school the weekly pledged offerings secured a larger gift for missions than the entire missionary collection of the church the previous year. Training in systematic giving is one of the finest assets an individual, class, or Sunday school can have, and all the money and other vexing problems of the Church could be largely solved in that way.

Every teacher and worker in our great Sunday school department should daily ask himself the question, am I measuring up to my highest possibility as a servant of Christ in this great cause? We work early and late to become efficient in our daily secular tasks, and how much more we should strive for the needed efficiency in God's work which is vastly more important?

An instance is on record where an organized class was begun with two boys and the teacher and in two months they had 21 members. But they did not think the organization meant a cure-all and sit down and let it work itself—no, they worked the organization. All too many classes never organize; some receive and frame their certificate, and that is the end of the enthusiasm. The really successful class makes the organization a means to an end and wins out. Organization is a vehicle through which you can promote class activities. Organization develops self-reliance, self-control, and a feeling of class responsibility, and enables that class to do things.

SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid in the blood, which affects the muscles and joints, producing inflammation, stiffness and pain. This acid gets into the blood through some defect in the digestive process.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the old-time blood tonic, is very successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It acts directly, with purifying effect, on the blood, and improves the digestion. Don't suffer. Get Hood's today.

A PRAYING POLICEMAN.

I had occasion the other day to go down to the police headquarters. I passed into the office of the probation officer. He is a man of fifty, and has a kindly face. When you have studied his face for a moment you know that he is a Christian man, for, somehow, what we are gets stamped on our faces sooner or later.

There were several women and children of the poorer classes in his office. They had come to tell him of their troubles. They had troubles enough. At last all had gone but one woman. She had a very good face.
Probably she had seen better days.
But her clothes were a bit threadbare and her feet were practically on the ground. I was on the other side of the room and was not supposed to hear, but I could not help it. She was married and had one little child. But her husband neglected her and was often cruel. He made good wages, but spent nearly all he made for his own sinful pleasures and brought very little home for the support of his family. Worst of all, he was unfaithful to her. It was a pitiful tale. The big-hearted policeman sat perfectly silent until she was through. And then what do you suppose he said?

"Sister, are you a Christian?" I had to take my bearings again to see whether I was in police headquarters or at church. She assured him that she was, and that she was a member of the Methodist church. Then he said: "You go home and do your duty as best you can, and lay this whole thing before your God in prayer; that is all that you can do just now, and I believe he will make it all right. In the meantime I will go at once and see your husband and take the whole matter over with him and tell him he must do right, and if he doesn't, I will most certainly make a case out against him."

What a fine combination of faith and works! The little woman got up and brushed the tears away, and it seemed to me there was a new light in her eye.

I must follow up that case and see what happens. Surely nothing but good can come. What a splendid opportunity God gives to a policeman for doing good! I had not thought of it before. If they would all seize the opportunity as this man did, this would be a far happier world. I find that my praying policeman is also a Presbyterian policeman. He is a member in mighty good standing in one of the Presbyterian churches of Atlanta.—The Presbyterian of the South.

A CHANGE IN THE HEAD OF OUR PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT.

At the recent Council meeting held in Fort Worth, Mrs. Luke Johnson resigned as Superintendent of the Publicity Work. Occupying three offices in the Council, she felt that she was unable to fill them all and was loath to give up this office, having held it for nearly 12 years. The department originated with the old Home Mission Board and was the creation of Mrs. Johnson's brain and heart. All of these years she has fostered and nurtured it, and writes that she feels like a mother giving up her child. She has developed and planned so wisely for this creature of her heart until to-day it stands as one of the recognized factors for promoting our work.

In speaking of the Publicity display at the Council meeting, Mrs. Johnson writes that she was literally swamped with material for this exhibit; it far exceeded her highest expectation. She says: "I want to express my deep gratitude to all who so quickly responded to my call for the exhibit. You made it a great success. It was so fine that it attracted the attention of even the casual 'passer by' and caused the Council to recognize, as perhaps never before, the real value of the work."

In view of the fact that the General Conference would likely make some changes in our work, a new Superintendent was not elected at Fort Worth, but the matter was referred to the Executive Committee to adjust when the new law was made. This Committee met in Nashville on June 9, and the Publicity work was placed in the Educational Secretary's office and will be directed by the Secretary, Mrs. Hume R. Steele, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

It is with deep regret that we see Mrs. Johnson give up this work, but we cordially welcome Mrs. Steele, and bespeak a hearty co-operation from our Publicity Superintendents. Her hands are already full with her duties as Educational Secretary; let us do all we can to lighten this extra work entrusted to her supervision. We are confident that she will be a help and blessing to our work and to us individually.

CHANGES MADE BY THE GENERAL CONFERENCE IN THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY COUNCIL.

1. The Council shall be a delegated body composed of a President, two Vice Presidents, two or more Secretaries, a Treasurer, Superintendents of Bureaus, one Corresponding Secretary, and the President of the Woman's Missionary Society of each Annual Conference.

The lines of work done in the past by the Third and Fourth Vice Presidents will be placed in a Bureau of Mission Study and Christian Stewardship and in a Bureau of Social Service. There will be Superintendents of each of these Bureaus.

Deeds to Property.

2. All properties hereafter acquired by the Woman's Missionary Societies through devises, bequests, gifts, or purchase, shall be held by the Board of Missions for the use and benefit of the woman's work.

The Missionary Voice.

3. There will be no Editorial Secretary in the Council. The "Missionary Voice," however, will be continued. Let the support of this paper be urged in the Conferences and in auxiliaries.

Changes Made in Conference Societies.

There will be but two Vice Presidents, these to have charge of the children's and young people's organizations of the Conference. The work done by the Third and Fourth Vice Presidents in the past will now pass to the care of superintendents of mission study and of social service. There will be but one Conference Secretary and one Conference Treasurer. Specials for each line of work will be authorized. The return to the Conference societies of half of their dues will be discontinued by these changes. This is made necessary by this organic union. The Council must become responsible for the work begun in the past through the Conference half of dues, so that these enterprises will not fall through.

Changes in Auxiliaries.

1. There will be but two Vice Presidents, these to have charge of the children's and young people's organizations. There will be superintendents of mission study classes and of social service to correspond with the changes in the Conference society and the Council.

2. There will be but one treasurer for the connectional work. There will be but one set of dues and one pledge. All who join the Society join the whole thing. The dues and pledges will be prorated by the General Treasurer between the home and foreign work.

When These Changes Go Into Effect.

On account of their pledges made by auxiliaries and Conference societies and because six months of the year have already passed, the Executive Committee recommend that no change be made in methods of managing the auxiliary finances until the end of the fiscal year, Dec. 31, 1914.

It has been suggested to the Conference societies that they make their readjustments at their first annual meeting after the General Conference. This is a custom in the Annual Conference in carrying into effect enactments of new laws and creation of new boundaries by the General Conference.

FROM BROTHER CURRIE.

Dear Brother Meek: After an absence of seven weeks in the work of our Master, I came home yesterday. We have held some fine meetings. The last was at Tangipahoa with the pastor, Brother P. O. Lowrey. Brother Lowrey is good help; souls found Jesus.

We went to the district conference at Ponchatoula. As I looked about and saw what changes had taken place there in twenty-one years, I remembered how Bishop Granbery had read me out for the Ponchatoula and Springfield work. When I arrived there, there was no parsonage, so I had to rent an old house that several negroes had lived in the year before. The church had only ten members—nine women and one man. We went to work in the name of the Lord who said, "Go and preach, heal the sick, cast out devils" (Matthew, 10th chapter, Mark 16th chapter, 15-18). So we went and prayed and shouted and God gave us 150 additional members that year. In that number was Ed. Vingard, J. R. Ahles, and others. We had no place to preach in. Brother W. T. Woodward had built a little church, but there were no seats in it; so we made the seats with our own hands and built the parsonage. Now the church is a nice brick building. To God be all the praise!

We had a good district conference. There was one strange thing, to my mind, that took place. One brother preached and it did my soul good as he talked about my Christ. After he finished I felt like I would like to sing a song and have an altar call, but he said it was dinner-time and would not let me sing. I started to quote to him Philipians 3:99. Read it.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Founded in 1854.

This College offers a happy home to those who believe in regularity, promptness, honor, obedience to authority, work, play in season, loyalty, and reverence for the sacred institutions of life.

The Christian standards of womanhood are ever before our girls and the discipline necessary to growth and vigor of body and soul are constantly sought to be maintained.

Our faculty members are chosen for their special fitness to do a given task, and always with the knowledge, as far as is possible for us to learn, that each is the living embodiment of a Christian woman's grace and charm, and dignity and power. Girls learn much from books, but more from daily association with noble, consecrated women.

A Variety of Courses

English, leading to M.E.L. degree; Teachers', leading to the L.I.; Music (Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin, Voice, Harmony, History — Music, Sight Singing); Domestic science and Art; Art (China, water color, pastel, oil, leather craft); Academy: Intermediate; Primary.

Our course for Teachers is similar to that of the best Normals and includes observation and practice teaching. Graduates exempt from examination except in Theory and Art of Teaching. Thirty enrolled last year.

Mansfield College has always boasted of its Music Department, and we still believe we offer superior advantages for the study of the Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin and Voice. Last year shows the largest enrollment ever known at M. F. C.

We call especial attention of mothers to our Domestic Science and Art course. This work has been offered for two years now. Ten were enrolled last year and two received certificates in June.

The College will have a large kiln for firing china. The teacher in charge of the Art Department is a lady of splendid Christian character and is an artist of rare ability and of large experience.

The College that expects honest work; requires obedience; demands loyalty; has discipline; boasts a strong, cultured, Christian faculty; gets a fine, appreciative and rapidly growing patronage, collects its bills and pays its debts.

Write, telephone, telegraph or call and see for yourself. If you have investigated and are not satisfied, send or go elsewhere. We expect every Louisianian to investigate before sending to some distant school.

Two thousand catalogs are being distributed. Write for one, and do it now.

R. E. BOBBITT, President.

JUNALUSKA MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D. D.

That you may not forget, attention is called to the fact, that we are planning for a great missionary conference at Junaluska. The dates are August 7-16. We are getting well on the way with the program and it is going to be a good one. Such names as Bishop E. E. Hoss (and we hope to have with us Bishop Wilson), Dr. Isaac T. Headland of New York, Major E. W. Halford of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Dr. D. Clay Lilly, Secretary of the United Missionary Campaign in the South, Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, Rev. S. A. Stewart from Japan, and Dr. R. H. Bennett of Virginia, guarantee a feast of good things. We are adding new names to the list daily and shall soon be able to publish a complete program. This is no campaign for money. It is a campaign to inform the mind and inspire the hearts of our people for the great cause of Missions. No collection will be taken, but we hope to prepare the way for stronger leadership and larger results in the missionary life of our Church.

The Junaluska Assembly promises comfortable entertainment at reasonable rates. Necessary information can be had concerning these matters by writing to Mr. J. Dale Stentz, at Lake Junaluska, N. C.

Already we are getting inquiries and we are expecting a large attendance. Write us for further information and for prospectus which we shall soon issue, or send us names of any who may be interested or who might attend.

A MID-SUMMER PRAYER MEETING SUGGESTION.

Rev. R. L. Russell, our enterprising pastor at Poplar Bluff, Missouri, writes as follows:

"At a recent Sunday's services I announced to my congregation that on Wednesday evening following, at the prayer meeting, I would tell the story of Stephen Standback, and that I wanted all of the 'standbackers' to be present. It was the hottest Wednesday evening of the summer, but we had the largest crowd of the season. I simply read the story, trying at the same time to place a little emphasis on that part pertaining to the work of the Board of Church Extension. The people received it enthusiastically, and the demand for copies of the story is large.

"This experiment was so successful that I expect to read another Church Extension story at the Wednesday evening service at an early date."

The story referred to is "The Awakening of Stephen Standback," by Rev. H. H. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, and is one of the prize stories of the Board of Church Extension.

We commend the course of Brother

Russell, and are prepared to furnish, without charge, copies of this and other equally interesting stories.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

Mathiston has recently had one of the greatest (if not the greatest) revivals in its history. It was conducted by the talented, spirited, and tactful Rev. J. H. Bell. There was not a single cold service; each meeting grew deeper throughout the week. The people were drawn closer together, with an increased appreciation for one another. We give God the praise and thank Him for such lasting service done through Brother Bell. We thank Brother Bell for his unreserved work and pray God's blessing on him.

I desire to thank the dear people of Mathiston for the generous purse which they made up for Brother Bell; and also my wife and I thank them for filling our pantry with many provisions—enough to last quite a while. Our hearts were made glad with a happy surprise; but we feel unworthy of such kindness for it was accompanied with these words: "We wish to express our appreciation of our pastor and his wife." How could we keep from loving such good people, and doing our best to serve them?

A PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.

"I never before invested three hundred dollars that brought me in such good returns. I've always gotten mere dollars and cents on my investments. But in this case I'm getting the kind of real happiness that can't usually be bought with hard cash."

The business man smiled at the amazement in his visitor's face and then proceeded to enlighten his ignorance.

"You see, I invested in a deaconess three years ago—an embryo deaconess then. She was in training in the Chicago Training School for two years—it was really in her training. I invested my three hundred—and now she's been out at work for a year and I've been following her pretty closely to see if it paid. What has she done? What hasn't she done? She went out West into a community where they hadn't any Church or school and, well, she just simply made over the whole place. She got them to build a church and on Sundays she preaches to them in it. During the week she teaches the children their A B C's in the same room where she has preached. She's general manager of the whole section and she's doing a mighty fine job of it, too. She doesn't know it, but I've kept mighty close tab on her this year and I've enjoyed her success as if it had been my own.

"Yes, it's been a good investment. I'm going to try another like it next year. Flesh and blood pays a more satisfactory sort of interest than stocks and bonds."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

GO TO COLLEGE, YOUNG PEOPLE.

By all means, every young man and young woman who can, should secure a college education. It requires time and effort to obtain it and the temptation may be strong to take up life's work without passing through the years of waiting and working which it necessitates; but to yield to this inclination is in most cases to make a great mistake. Education pays, even when considered from the standpoint of material success. As a rule, it greatly enlarges one's earning capacity and increases the probability of one's attaining to a place of prominence in society. All the records show that a vastly larger percentage of college men succeed than do others. For instance, in the last presidential election the three leading candidates were representatives of Princeton, Harvard, and Yale. In practically every field of worthy endeavor most of the glittering prizes are borne off by persons who have taken time to train and equip themselves. The genius may not need the helping hand of a higher educational institution to prepare him to acquit himself creditably in the struggles of life; but the ordinary man does and is apt to move in a far more lowly and contracted sphere without it.

But the fact that education multiplies one's chances of succeeding in a material way, is not its only, or chief, advantage. The pleasures that knowledge brings are varied and priceless. To the informed man the universe abounds in beauties that the ignorant never see; windows are opened that enable him to look out into wide-stretching realms where law and order reign and things abound that fascinate and charm. How astronomy, for instance, widens the horizon of the human mind and unfolds to it conceptions of God's greatness and glory that had never before dawned upon it! But, better still, education increases an individual's capacity for usefulness in the world in which he lives. This is its noblest benefit. We are made to serve our fellow-beings, and in proportion as we do this efficiently, we rise to the loftiest summit of human destiny. Well, therefore, may we seize upon anything and everything that will enable us to do more for needy humanity and help to elevate it toward the high ideal that God has for it. Because it increases one's lifting power as a member of the social order, a college education is, most of all, to be desired, and is cheap at almost any cost.

But to what kind of a college should the young man or young woman go? Of course, to one that does honest and thorough work. But this is not enough. It ought also to be surrounded by a wholesome moral and religious atmosphere. The best education seeks to develop the spiritual, as well as the physical and intellectual, nature of the student. We appreciate the work that many of our State institutions, which often have a number of worthy Christian men and women in their faculties, are doing, and we have no disposition to disparage it; but it is our conviction that colleges owned and controlled by the Church can put such emphasis upon the importance of the Christian life as no State school can well do. This we conceive to be a great advantage, and therefore we think that young people are generally safer at institutions under the direction of the Church. And we believe that it is best for the sons and daughters of Methodist parents, when other things are anything like equal, to attend the school maintained by their own denomination. The Church of which they are members can usually exercise a far greater influence upon them than any other organization or agency, and it usually exists in good working order at its seats of learning. This, it seems to us, is too important a consideration to be overlooked by Methodist fathers and mothers in planning for the instruction of their children away from home; especially so since most of the failures in after-life result from a lack of moral character. Men and women are largely made by the ideals that they form during their college days.

OF QUESTIONABLE PROPRIETY.

Rev. Clinton P. Moore, presiding elder of the Sacramento District of the M. E. Church, South, and editor of "The Common Enemy (Temperance) Department" of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, has been nominated by the Prohibition party of California for the office of Governor of the State. This is a compliment to Mr. Moore, but we doubt the propriety of a Methodist preacher accepting such a nomination. Methodism has some very interesting history bearing upon this question, which some persons would perhaps do well to re-read. For the principle of prohibition a minister can afford to go his whole length, but when a political party is organized with prohibition as one of its tenets and sets out to elect a certain slate of men to office and to defeat others, we think that the man called to the work of the ministry needs to exercise some prudence.

The wisest and most far-seeing temperance leader that we have ever known was the late Bishop C. B. Galloway, who was an uncompromising opponent of third party prohibition. The Mississippi law, which was the work of his hands, did not allow a local option election on the question of licensing saloons to be held within sixty days of any other election, the object of that provision being to keep the great moral issue involved disentangled from party politics, so that every man, no matter what might be his political faith, could vote in harmony with his conscientious convictions. The result was that Mississippi quickly became practically a dry State, while in commonwealths like Tennessee and Texas, where the leaders insisted on organizing a prohibition party, the cause was wrecked and the reign of the saloon was perpetuated for decades.

The greatest triumphs that have been won in the battle to wipe out the licensed dramshop have been achieved by movements that steered clear of partisan politics and which presented the issue as a moral one. We do not believe that it is helpful either to the Church or the temperance cause for ministers to become zealous and outspoken advocates of a prohibition political party or candidates for public office on its ticket.

THE INDISPENSABLE KNOWLEDGE.

Happy is he who, when so many tongues are chattering of new things affirmed to be of prime importance, can hear amid their jargon the still small Voice! Spirit-taught and Spirit-filled men and women are the messengers that the world wants to hear speak. The rarest of all knowledge is that communicated by the Heavenly Father to the individual human soul—that waits upon him in prayer and in the study of his precious Word, and the person who has the most of that to give to others is the teacher who will most attract and inspire them. It was such a revelation that enabled Peter to make that glorious confession to the Master, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; and it was for such knowledge that the yearning heart of Philip cried out when he said to the great Teacher, "Shew us the Father and it sufficeth us." Learn personally to know the great Infinite One who created the Universe and all that in it is, and in whose mighty hand is the destiny of everything that exists, or presume not to occupy the place of a religious instructor of heart-hungry men. Wesley placed the emphasis where it rightly belongs when in testing those who claimed to think that they ought to preach he, first of all, propounded concerning them the following questions:

"DO THEY KNOW GOD AS A PARDONING GOD? Have they the love of God abiding in them? Do they desire nothing but God? And are they holy in all manner of conversation?"

DR. PALMORE DEAD.

A Richmond (Va.) press dispatch, sent out on July 5, announced the death on that day of Dr. W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, at the home of a niece in that city, whom he was visiting. He had had a stroke of paralysis on the preceding day.

Dr. Palmore was about 70 years of age and was the dean of Southern Methodist editors. He had long been a conspicuous figure in the Church and was one of the most widely known ministers in our connection. No man among us had traveled so extensively and he possessed a wealth of information equaled by but few. He was a graceful and gifted writer, a fluent and forceful speaker, and an affable and agreeable gentleman. Since our connection with the editorial fraternity our relations with Dr. Palmore have been most pleasant, and we shall miss him not a little. We deplore his death and extend sympathy to the bereaved relatives.

Dr. Palmore was an excellent business man, and he left an estate valued at about $50,000. A St. Louis dispatch appearing in the secular papers stated that this property had been bequeathed to the Church, but we are uninformed as to what department of the work it will go.

THE SHARED BURDEN.

Methought to share my burden with a friend,
The weight of it had grown so hard to bear;
No longer dared I hold it all my own
Lest it should fell me in my deep despair.

But when I greeted her to whom I went,
In full assurance of a welcome fair,
My heart stood still, for written on her face
Methought I saw another soul's despair.

My own forgotten, left me strangely wise;
She must be comforted, this sorry one, not I,
Who never dreamed she ever knew such woe,
She always held our courage up so high.

And as the tears and trouble left her face
My sorrow I no longer cared to share,
For suddenly I ceased to feel its weight,
And half my burden seemed to leave me there.

—Elizabeth Thomson Ordway, in The Standard.

THE AGNOSTIC'S DEGREE.

A strange story, whose beginning was in 1885, and whose ending was in 1914, comes out of the University of Illinois. The reading of the facts suggest these comments.

In 1885 Foster North was a senior student in the University of Illinois. He refused to attend chapel exercises. He was hauled upon the carpet by the president and told that he must attend chapel exercises or must sign a certificate that the chapel exercises were repugnant to his religious convictions. North replied, so runs the story: "But they are not repugnant to my religious convictions. I haven't any such convictions; I am an agnostic."

If North had stated that his religious convictions were entirely opposed to the religion of the university chapel all would have been well for him. When he announced that he had no convictions on religion—that he believed nothing—the president suspended him and he failed to get his degree. North was studying entomology. Later he became a masseur, studying that form of work under a Swedish expert.

In looking over the history of the alumni it was seen recently that North was still under suspension. Inquiry was made and North was found. A cordial letter was written him, suggesting that the suspension might be lifted and he could receive his degree.

North was bitter against the university and his answer was sour. One of the professors wrote him: "I know that the special subject about which there was a difference of opinion has no special meaning. The daily chapel exercise was long ago given up. There is now nothing to represent it."

The thing, then, that North was suspended for not doing exists no longer. There is no compulsion about attending chapel at the university. There may be exercises for those who voluntarily attend, or there may be voluntary religious associations. However, the university as a corporate body does not make religious exercises of any kind binding on a student.

These causes being removed, North relented, went back to the university and did receive a degree of B. S. as of 1885. He is 50 years old now. He cannot pursue his scientific studies and the degree is worth little to him.

The question is wider and bigger than the personality of North. Once an avowed agnostic could not receive the privileges of the university. Now he can. Does the added liberty to agnosticism in the university reduce the force of the religious influence in the university?

Was a State university justified 29 years ago in depriving a young man of a degree because he was an agnostic? The university might answer that they did not deprive him of his degree because he was an agnostic, but because he violated one of its rules. The university was more strict in 1885 about the religious teaching of its students than it is now.

It may not sound in keeping with the broad spirit of the age to say this, but we believe the university in 1885 was following a safer course than it is in 1914.

The spiritual element in education has declined in these 29 years. There is now a tendency in the schools to regard the young man merely as a thinking animal and to hold that the thinking processes are controlled by material atoms. Everything about us mentally and physically is regarded as material.

If all men in a government, even in this civilized age, were to turn agnostic, were to ignore the existence of any superior spiritual force, the government would not exist under the best conditions with agnostics controlling 100 years.

Pure materialism, notwithstanding the broad general culture of this age moving the thought processes of men, would result in a collapse of the instrumentalities for controlling well regulated human society within two or three generations.—Commercial Appeal (Memphis).

THE SOUTHERN SOCIOLOGICAL CONGRESS:

Its Purpose, its Program, and Challenge to the South.

There was aroused for about three centuries during the middle ages a spirit of chivalry which will continue to thrill the patriotism and hold the admiration of men as long as time shall last. It was a time when strong men, fair women and innocent little children gladly gave their lives and all that they possessed for what they conceived to be a noble cause. History calls these stirring centuries the period of the Crusades. The burial place of the Christ had fallen into Saracen hands. The Christian pilgrim was no longer allowed to wend his way to this sacred spot; and for three hundred years effort after effort was made to regain control of the place where for a few hours lay the broken, pierced, and bloodstained body of Jesus. Thousands of men, women and tiny children lost their lives in the fruitless struggle. Wealth and valuable estates vanished as the mists of the morning before the noonday sun. We are glad that the historian looking back over the record of all this blood and carnage can tell us that society as a whole was benefited by these struggles. But so far as the real purpose of the Crusades is concerned, they were a dismal failure.

Just a few years ago Gov. Ben W. Hooper, of Tennessee, with other leaders in the thought and progress of the South, got in some part a vision of the needs existing here in our midst, and along with this a vision of obligations and responsibilities. Among the results of this vision was that in the early part of 1912 Gov. Hooper issued a call for a convention to assemble in Nashville from May 7-10 to examine into these questions. The attendance was much larger, and the interest keener than the leaders had ever hoped to see. The report of the proceedings of this meeting were published in a volume entitled, "The Call of the South."

It was at this Nashville meeting that the Southern Sociological Congress was permanently organized with Gov. Hooper as its first president, and Rev. J. E. McCulloch as general secretary. Briefly stated, the purpose of this Congress is "To Study and Improve the Social, Civic, and Economic Conditions in the South." And its immediate object is to enlist the whole South in a "Crusade for Social Health and Righteousness." To do this the Congress stands for:

"The abolition of the convict lease and contract systems, and for the adoption of modern principles of prison reform.

"For the extension and improvement of juvenile courts and juvenile reformatories.

"For the proper care and treatment of defectives, the blind, the deaf, the insane, the epileptic, and the feeble-minded.

"For the recognition of the relation of alcoholism to disease, to crime, to pauperism and to vice, and for the adoption of appropriate preventive measures.

"For the adoption of uniform laws of the highest standards concerning marriage and divorce.

"For the adoption of a uniform law on vital statistics.

"For the abolition of child labor by the enactment of a uniform child labor law.

"For the enactment of school attendance laws, that the reproach of the greatest degree of illiteracy may be removed from our section.

"For the suppression of prostitution.

"For the solving of the race question in a spirit of helpfulness to the Negro and of equal justice to both races.

"For the closest co-operation between the Church and all social agencies for the securing of these results."

Since the initial Congress two others have been held, one each year. In May, 1913, the Congress assembled in Atlanta. At this meeting the Hon. William Hodges Mann, an ex-Confederate soldier and recently governor of the Old Dominion, was made president. He was re-elected to the same position at the last Congress in Memphis. The addresses, papers, and proceedings of the Atlanta Congress were published in an attractive volume of 700 pages, entitled, "The South Mobilizing for Social Service." It is a veritable mine of information and a classic for all social workers.

The Third and last Congress was held in May of this year in Memphis, Tenn. Memphis was at this time the Mecca for all social workers of every class and name. Simultaneous with the meeting of the Southern Sociological Congress eleven other great social bodies were holding their annual sessions in the same city. I was told by experienced students of social problems that this was by far the greatest gathering of social workers ever assembled in America.

The work of this Congress is carried on under six different sections: The Church and Social Service; Race Questions; Child Welfare; Public Health; Courts and Prisons, and Organized Charities. But at the Memphis meeting a joint program was arranged so that there would be no duplication in the presentation of subjects, and in the distribution of subjects the Southern Congress had assigned to it the Church and Social Service, and Race Questions. Certainly these are the two most vital questions before us to-day for solution. This significant fact, to me, was brought out during these meetings, that Northern men were ready and are now saying to us, of the South, "We have found that we know little or nothing of the race problems; you do. So we leave it entirely to your godly wisdom to work them out along the lines you see best, and we are ready to assist with the funds necessary under your direction."

The chairman of the section on the Church and Social Service is Dr. J. A. Rice of Fort Worth, formerly pastor of Rayne Memorial, New Orleans. His work at the General Conference prevented his presence this year; but we heard such men as Dr. C. S. Gardner of Louisville, Ky., on, "The Preparation of Ministers for Social Service;" Rev. C. A. Waterfield, of our own Church of the Memphis Conference, I believe, on "The Social Message of the Church to Modern Industry;" Dr. Jas. R. Howerton of Washington and Lee University, on, "The Present Social Order in Conflict with the Ideals of the Church;" and Dr. W. H. Slingerland, of New York, on, "The Coordination of Social and Religious Forces." These and many others equally interesting and soul-inspiring papers were heard under this section.

Dr. J. H. Dillard, who has done so much for the Negroes of the South, and is now Director of the Jeannes and Slater Funds for Negro education, is the efficient chairman of the section on Race Questions. During the sessions of this section we heard such men as Dr. W. D. Weatherford, of our own Church, and also international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., on "Religion the Common Basis of Co-operation between the Races;" Major R. R. Moton, of Hampton Institute, a typical Negro, on, "Common Industrial Life;" Dr. C. V. Roman, the leading Negro physician of the South, on, "Racial Interdependence in Maintaining Public Health;" Dr. A. M. Trawick, of our own Church, on, "The Lack of Proper Home Life for Negroes," and many others on subjects just as vital and important.

The work of the Southern Sociological Congress is a challenge to "every citizen of the South to rally to the leaders of social reform, so as to secure to the South civic righteousness, temperance and health. It is a challenge to Southern chivalry to see that justice is guaranteed to all citizens regardless of race, color, or religion, and especially to defend and befriend the helpless. It is a challenge to the Church to prove her right to social mastery by a universal and unselfish social ministry. And lastly, it is a clear challenge to strong men and women to volunteer for a 'CRUSADE' of social service, and to be enlisted for a warfare, heroic, and unto death, against all destroyers of public health and purity, and to champion all that makes for an ideal national life."

Surely every Christian who has given the question any thought at all has seen something of the great needs lying out before us. Personally, I believe that these questions can be solved, the needs met, and the conditions permanently improved only in the Name and by the Power of the Christ, who gave his life "a ransom for sin." The conditions surrounding the man may be changed from the imperfect to the almost perfect, but experience has taught us that there will surely be a return, and that rapidly, to the imperfect, unless the love of God has been implanted in the hearts of men, and they have really become "new creatures in Christ Jesus."

The challenge to the men of the middle ages which they so nobly heard and heeded was to rescue from the Saracen's sway the empty tomb of the risen Lord. The challenge to the manhood of to-day is not to one of blood and carnage, or the rescue of an empty tomb, but on the other hand a call to keep empty thousands of gaping tombs now reaching out their untimely hands to grasp the bodies of those who are prematurely going there because of the unrighteous social conditions of the times.

The clear call to-day to the followers of Christ is certainly more real, vital, and soul-stirring than it could have been during the Crusades of the middle ages. I, for one, firmly believe that it is now being heard, and will continue to be heard and heeded all over our land. And led by the eternal principles of Christ this conquering army will march on from victory to victory until true righteousness shall have found its way into every department of life.

Laurel, Miss.

J. L. NEILL.

P. S.—Anyone wishing to be placed in touch with literature and valuable information pertaining to either of the six departments mentioned above will do well to correspond with Rev. J. E. McCulloch, D.D., General Secretary of the Southern Sociological Congress, Nashville, Tenn.

WHY WE SHOULD SEND THE GOSPEL TO THE HEATHEN.

Dear Dr. Meek: It seems to me that there is quite a lot of misunderstanding among our people concerning the subject of missions; and this does not apply alone to the less informed, but we also find it among some of the most intelligent people we have. Why does this misunderstanding exist, and why have so many of our people no well defined ideas upon so great a subject? I answer, that I think it is due very largely to two reasons, namely, some of us have never taken time to arrive at any intelligent conclusion upon the subject ourselves, and others depending upon the pulpit for their information have failed to find this subject clearly defined there. In our appeals to the people in the interest of missions, we fail to make clear the motives that underlie our zealous appeals.

In order that we may be understood, let us illustrate. We hear the statement made by many people that the Methodist Church believes and teaches that the heathen will be damned eternally as a whole unless we preach the Gospel to them. Now let me say emphatically that I take this as an insult to our Church and a reproach to the name of our Heavenly Father. Some will probably say, these charges are so far fetched that they do not demand our attention. But when I tell you that two professors have made these charges to me—one a Baptist and the other a Presbyterian—it may not seem so light a matter. And once, after I had preached upon the subject of missions, a Baptist preacher came into the pulpit before I had gotten out of it and said that I had upset his preaching upon this subject for the past ten years. He said that he had been preaching to the people all the while that if we did not preach to the heathen they would be damned forever. Also the opponents of missions charge us with preaching that the eternal destiny of the heathen depends upon the amount of men and money we can raise; and that thousands of heathens are going down to an awful hell every year because we do not preach to them. This, I repeat, is an insult to our Church (or any other Church) and a reproach to the name of God and his Son. The Methodist position, as I understand it, is this: the heathen who improves all the light he has, with or without the Gospel, is saved; and that God will not condemn forever a race, or an individual that does not believe in a Christ of whom they have never heard. We also believe that the story of the Cross increases the probability of the heathen's salvation, because of its attractiveness and because it improves his environment.

We believe further that the condemnation of the heathen is greater who rejects the Gospel than the heathen who never heard it and is lost. But to say that all heathen are damned if they do not hear the Gospel is equivalent to saying that the heathen infants are damned because they cannot hear or believe the Gospel. The adult heathen that improves all the light he has is just as acceptable to God as the heathen infant, and if God would send either to eternal perdition, he would be unworthy of our love. We will not do this; but let me tell you what he will do: he will send to the regions of perdition any church or individual that has so far fallen as to disobey the dying command of our Lord, who said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Now, what about the heathen that is lost? And why is he lost? I answer, because he does not improve his opportunity; does not use the light he has, and not because we fail to preach to him. The view that the heathen will be lost eternally should not be our reason for sending the Gospel to them, but the fact that we will be damned if we do not send it, and that we can save the heathen from an existence of superstition and shame in this life, should furnish sufficient motives to call for our very best to carry the story of the Cross to those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death.

A WORTHY AND GROWING INSTITUTION.

The Mississippi Conference Training School, at Montrose, Miss., has been the property of the Church since 1904, and is directed by a Board of Trustees elected from year to year by the Mississippi Annual Conference. It is filling a place between the public school and college which is much needed. It does the combined work of a public school and junior college, fitting the student who finishes its curriculum for the sophomore class in our Class A Church colleges, or in the State University at Oxford; and at the same time it seeks to give those attending it such a foundation in the essentials of a practical education that if they find it impossible to prosecute their studies further they will have a substantial equipment for the work of life. It is our aim to be very thorough in what we do and careful in the development of the character of our pupils. It is our purpose to hold a high religious standard, both mind and soul culture being our ultimate aim.

It is very gratifying to know what this school has done, and is doing, for the Church and State. The class that finished here last session numbered nineteen, ten of whom were young preachers—a company of fine fellows. The religious atmosphere of the community and school is most excellent in every respect. At least 90 per cent of the students in the academic department will lead in public prayer. The location of the institution is highly favorable, being away from city life, where more of God and less of the world's sin and wickedness are known than in most places. All denominations take a deep interest in the school and endeavor to co-operate with us in giving the students all possible protection. It is our desire to make it difficult for them not to be religious while they are in our care.

Our attendance last year was 245, and we are expecting it to be still larger at the next session, which will open on Sept. 8. The faculty is a strong one, most of its members being graduates of Millsaps and Whitworth Colleges. One new teacher has been added, giving us a teaching force of 8, and all of these instructors know God, which is the best of all knowledge.

The public school department of the institution is a benefit to both Church and State. A brief statement as to its origin and plan of operation will doubtless be of interest. The community and the Church came together and erected a large two-story brick building, which was deeded to the Church. The community provides for the employment of four teachers, which the President of the school is given the right to nominate along with the other instructors. It requires to reject any of his nominations a three-fourths vote of the entire Board of Trustees; thus it will be seen that the Church has the control in naming the faculty and in the operation of all the departments of the school. This plan is working admirably, and it has the great merit of giving the Church an opportunity to impress the child from the beginning of his education until he completes the standard junior college course. This pronounced Christian influence counts for much in effecting a symmetrical development of the three-fold nature of the student. May God help the Church to do her best for the young life that she has in her hands, which is so full of possibilities and of promise!

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.

By Laura F. Montgomery.

The prophecy of the final return of the Jews to the Holy Land is probably being fulfilled; for we are told, that they are there now in crowds, and that the gates of Jerusalem are never shut. Among "the forces of the Gentiles" that have been brought in are perhaps our modern inventions—the electric light, the railroad, etc. Even the huge rock crusher may be but one of God's ways of making "the rough places plain." St. Paul says: "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"

In this country, some of the rabbis and other Jews are taking a foremost place in our great moral reforms. It will be a glorious day when the whole race shall be followers of Jesus of Nazareth, and shall see him as he is—the one altogether lovely—and know him to be the woman's chosen seed, the promised Messiah.

May God hasten the time when Jerusalem shall be the joy of the whole earth, and when the Jew shall "Wave the banner-cross on high!

Where th' aspirant minaret
Gleams along the morning skies;
Wave it till the crescent, set,
And the 'Star of Jacob' rise."

AN INTERESTING OLD DOCUMENT.

Mr. Hunter Huddle of this place has in his possession the manuscript of the first catalogue of the Mansfield Female College for the term of 1855-6. It came into the possession of Mr. Huddle's father many years since while he was a professor in the College, and it is in a good state of preservation. It is in the handwriting of Dr. H. C. Thweatt, the founder and first president of the College, and contains 34 pages of closely written manuscript. Whether the document was ever printed or not is not known, but it is a complete review of the early history of the school and is full of interest to our people.

The Faculty of the College at that time was: Rev. H. C. Thweatt, D.D., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science and Ancient Languages; A. R. Rembert, M.D., Professor of Physical Science and Mathematics; Miss Lizzie Bates, A.M., Instructor in English Literature, Modern Languages, Music, Painting, Drawing and Embroidery; Miss I. Y. McCommack, M.E.L., Instructor in Music, Drawing, Embroidery, etc.; Miss Mary E. Crowder, M.E.L., Instructor in Academic Department; Mrs. Elizabeth E. McCommack, Instructor in Primary Department; Mrs. Caroline L. Thweatt, Assistant Teacher in Elementary Department.

The Board of Trustees were: J. D. Wemple, Esq., Wm. Crosby, Col. R. T. Johnson, Rev. W. W. Bell, Col. H. Stone, G. H. Rives, M.D., J. O. Wilder, M.D., A. M. Campbell, Gen. H. Phillips, John Jordan, J. M. Williams, Daniel Brown, Henry Moss, Col. R. H. Carruth, Rev. W. E. Daly, Louis Phillips, Jones Persons, W. H. Terrill, G. C. Burnes, Major Joseph Hasper, R. T. Gibbs, M.D., B. W. Pearson, J. H. Mumford, G. R. Draughn, and Rev. John Burrus.

Rev. Robert Randle was the representative of the Louisiana Conference to visit the school.

Most of the above list of trustees are remembered by our older citizens, and all but two of them have descendants now living in this section, and an inspection of the old tax rolls shows that they were nearly all extensive slave holders and men of influence and standing.

The guests entertained at the college at the commencement were 38 in number, and were registered from 19 parishes, as follows:

Hon. J. G. Campbell and Judge Charles Bullard, of Natchitoches; Henry Spofford, Roland Jones, Thomas Land and B. L. Hodge, of Caddo; Hon. De Clouet, of St. Martin; J. B. Walker, D.D., J. C. Keener, D.D., A. R. Widderburn, M.D., Wm. Foster, Esq., B. M. Moss, M.D., all of New Orleans; W. C. Robert, A.M., of Avoyelles; Hon. O. N. Ogden, of Rapides; J. J. Clow and Cyrus Thompson, of St. Landry; Hon. — Baker, of St. Mary; Judge C. Chapman, of Sabine; J. M. Sandige, of Bossier; B. H. Pierce, of Bienville; Hon. Isaiah Garrett, of Ouachita; John Perkins, of Carroll; Henry J. Peck, of Catahoula; W. S. Parham, of Carroll; Hon. — Beattie, of Lafourche; W. W. Pugh, of Assumption; Samuel Bard and A. T. Herron, of Baton Rouge; Rev. Wm. Littlejohn, of Lafourche; Hon. Randle Hunt, of New Orleans; A. W. Cravens, of Lake Providence; P. M. Goodwin, of Alexandria; Joel Sanders, of Sparta; R. Randle, of Minden; T. J. Lacy, of Mansfield; R. A. New, M.D., of Shreveport, and Linus Parker, of New Orleans.

The above list of visitors at the College is interesting, as it names so many men who afterwards became distinguished. From the list was developed one U. S. Senator, Mr. Spofford; one U. S. Congressman, Mr. Sandige; one Confederate Congressman, Mr. Hodge; one U. S. Cabinet officer, Mr. Hunt; two State Supreme Judges, Messrs. Bullard and Land, and one Bishop, Mr. Parker; and a number of the others who distinguished themselves on the bench, at the bar, in the ministry, as soldiers in the Confederate Army, or in other walks of life.

Among the students enrolled at that time are to be seen the names of many of the mothers and grandmothers among our present population, and it would be interesting reading to reproduce the list, but space forbids.

All the students in the higher grades seem to have passed away, but among those who were primary students at that time, sixty years ago, the following, that we know of, are still living:

Miss Susan Bell, of Shreveport; Mrs. R. T. Carr (nee Miss Roliana Brown), now of Shreveport; Mrs. W. P. Sample (nee Miss Susan F. Crosby), of Mansfield; Mrs. R. D. Owens (nee Miss Henrietta Gallaspy), of Mansfield; Mrs. W. R. Jackson (nee Miss Louisiana Greening), of Mansfield; Mrs. T. D. Spalding (nee Miss Janie Williams), of Texas; Mrs. Jas. B. Williams (nee Miss Fannie Moss), now of Morehouse Parish; Mrs. J. L. Scales (nee Miss Maggie Mundy), of Mansfield, and Mrs. R. R. Murphy (nee Miss Zenobia Wimbish), now of Godly, Tex.

Of the hundred and more students enrolled at the Mansfield Female College at its first term sixty years since, only the above named are living, so far as we are aware, but they have left a record of usefulness and have reflected great credit upon the school and our community.

The manuscript contains a full and complete review of the aims, objects, and purposes of the institution, and promulgates strict rules for the government of the same. From this report it is evident that great stress was laid on the classical attainments of the graduates, although the moral ideas that were sought to be inculcated were of the highest order, and the deportment of the students seems to have been a matter of the highest consideration.

The rules governing the student body were very rigid; dancing was absolutely prohibited during the school term, and the use of snuff seems to have been recognized as a cardinal sin.

In conclusion, President H. C. Thweatt says that the College was organized in 1854 by the liberality of the people of Mansfield; that it was turned over to the Louisiana Conference in January, 1855, and that it was chartered by the Legislature the same year.

Mr. Huddle, the owner of this rare old record, will have a glass case prepared for it, and will present it to the College, where it should be preserved as a memento of the founding of an institution of learning under one type of civilization, that has survived in all its usefulness under an absolute change of conditions.

A close perusal of the document convinces us that it was not the manuscript of a catalogue, as some seem to think, but simply an elaborate report by the president of the Board of Trustees, or an account of his stewardship to the Louisiana Conference, as well as an address delivered by him at the close of the first Commencement exercises.—Mansfield (La.) Enterprise.

CHURCH EXTENSION AND THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Board of Church Extension has a sound Charter and a good Constitution, and its work is in a healthy condition and growing rapidly, and therefore did not ask the General Conference to do a great many things. Memorials presented from other sources were comparatively few and the Conference was good enough to grant everything requested by the Board and by its Committee on Church Extension.

I. Changes in the Law.

There were only three things requested involving a change in the Constitution of the Board, and these were as follows:

(1) Paragraph 390, Article IV., was so changed as to make the quorum of the Board fifteen instead of nine and also to strike out some obsolete words.

(2) Paragraph 397, Article XI., on City Boards of Church Extension was rewritten to conform to the best judgment of those who are doing City Church Extension work.

(3) Paragraph 399, Article XIII., which is a brief paragraph on District Boards of Church Extension, was substituted by a somewhat elaborate article which is believed by those most interested provides a basis for effective District Church Extension work.

The length of the two paragraphs on City and District Boards, makes it unwise to give them in full in this article. They will appear in the 1914 Church Extension Hand Book, which will soon be sent out, and in the new Discipline, which will doubtless come from the publishers early in the fall. In the meantime, anyone interested in District or City Church Extension work can secure a copy of this new legislation by writing to this office.

II. Other General Conference Action.

(1) A Million Dollar Loan Fund. The Board in annual session authorized the employment, by the Executive and Finance Committee, of a Loan Fund Secretary, who shall be charged, under the general direction of the Corresponding Secretary, with the responsibility of looking after existing loans and increasing the Loan Fund Capital of the Board.

The General Conference reinforced this action by adopting the following:

"Resolved, That we strongly indorse the avowed purpose of the Board of Church Extension to increase the loan fund capital to not less than one million dollars during the next quadrennium, leaving to the Board the employment of such agencies under its constitution as in its judgment are necessary to accomplish this end, together with the proper care of other interests for which it is responsible."

(2) A New Home for the Board. The Board also committed to its Executive and Finance Committee the responsibility of securing the funds and erecting a new office building.

The General Conference reinforced this action by adopting the following:

"We approve the judgment expressed by the Board at its annual meeting May 1 and 2, 1914, that the time has come to take steps to secure a building so designed, located and constructed as to provide the office with the necessary room and equipment for the highest efficiency in its work and properly safeguard and protect its records, mortgages, notes, deeds and other valuable papers, and at the same time adequately represent our great Church as the home of this growing department."

(3) Church Insurance. Concerning Church Insurance, which subject came before the General Conference in the form of memorials from many sources, the General Conference spoke as follows:

"The Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is hereby authorized and requested to make special study of the subject of 'Church Insurance' during the next quadrennium, with a view of bringing before the next General Conference for adoption a plan for the protection of our church, parsonage and school property."

(4) Washington City Representative Church. The interest of the Conference in this enterprise was reaffirmed, and the Special Committee which, under the general direction of the Board of Church Extension, has had this work in hand, was continued, with the substitution of the name of Bishop J. H. McCoy for that of Bishop E. E. Hoss, resigned.

(5) Statistical Blanks. The General Conference, through its Committee on Annual Conference Statistical Blanks, has made provision for reporting Church Extension specials. We have been handicapped for several years past by lack of provision to make proper report of specials raised for Church Extension. Pastors who have interested themselves in doing more for Church Extension than simply securing the amount of the assessment, will be able to report to their Conference this fall in proper form any "Special" for Church Extension. In this new column report should be made of all contributions to the Loan Funds by individuals, Sunday schools or churches, donations to African parsonages, or any other special contribution to church and parsonage building.

The Executive and Finance Committee is glad to be able to report a decrease for the quadrennium in the percentage of expense, on the amount of funds handled, for any preceding quadrennium of the Board's history save one, notwithstanding the following facts:

(1) There has been printed and circulated more than 28,026,311 pages of Church Extension matter—an amount exceeding all the publications by the Board during all the other years of its history.

(2) Earnest endeavor has been put forth to make the office of the Board mean more to the Church at large than simply receiving and disbursing funds which come through the regular channels. The settled policy of the Committee has been to aid brethren who have heavy tasks to perform; improve all forms used and methods of work; make the office a medium of communication between our people and the source of the best information on the subject of church architecture and else pertaining to building enterprises; and to co-operate with, provide printed matter for, and in every possible way contribute to the efficiency of the work of the Annual Conference Boards.

We are looking forward to the greatest quadrennium in the history of the Board, and covet the prayers and co-operation of the preachers and people throughout our borders.

PROGRESS AT GRENADA COLLEGE.

Four years ago, by the loyal help of the North Mississippi Conference, my first session at Grenada College opened at high water mark for the institution. Each session has witnessed an increase in the number of students, improved equipment, enlarged financial returns, added comforts and conveniences, better salaries for the teachers, as well as other signs of progress. The past session was by far the best of the four, marking an advance over the first of more than 50 per cent in some respects.

In the quadrennium, we have expended some $12,000 in improvements, besides having bought property worth $20,000 which adds at least one-third to the boarding capacity of the school. Last year, we had to utilize every available space and then turn girls away. We hope to have room for all who apply this fall, and we shall expend at least $2000 in preparing for their comfort before the opening. The hot-water heating plant installed last session proved practically ideal and used less coal than the system in use previously.

The course for bachelor of literature has been eliminated and the whole of our force turned to the development of the work for the degree of bachelor of arts, so that the latter is now equal to that offered in any school for girls in the State. Six fine young women took this degree at the recent Commencement, while only two took that of bachelor of literature. We have added the department of domestic economy and employed an experienced teacher to give instruction in cooking, sewing, hygiene and sanitation. In music we enrolled 115 pupils the past session and we hope to buy a dozen new pianos before our next opening and put that work on a higher plane than ever. Our pupils who have done advanced work at city conservatories have been much complimented on the thoroughness of their work.

Three of our faculty are studying this summer in Chicago, one in the University of Wisconsin, two in Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, while our teacher of modern languages has just returned from a year at Leipzig. We feel that we shall be able to do more for our patrons next year than ever before and we appreciate the large advance registration, which is our best endorsement.

The religious life of the school has been emphasized and but one graduate has gone out in the four years who was not an active church worker. Brethren of the Conference, your servants here have done more than could reasonably have been expected of them, but they must have more means and more room. There is a limit to what even the most consecrated women can do, and we must give our faculty the best equipment in order that they may do their best work. Cordially and fraternally,

Church News

The Southern Christian Advocate, issued at Greenville, S. C., on July 1, increased its subscription price from $1 to $1.50.

The International Sunday School Association, lately in session in Chicago, declared in favor of teaching sex hygiene in the Sunday school.

Rev. Lovick P. Law, the well known evangelist of Siloam Springs, Ark., has been appointed by Bishop E. D. Mouzon to the pastorate of our church in Portland, Oregon.

Bishop James Atkins, who has episcopal supervision of our work in the Far East, will sail for the Orient from San Francisco on July 21. He will be accompanied on the trip by Mrs. Atkins.

The Central Conference of American Jewish Rabbis, in session at Detroit, Michigan, on July 3, denounced municipal Christmas celebrations as sectarian and contrary to the spirit of America.

Several sections of the International Epworth League Conference, in session at Buffalo, New York, last week, adopted resolutions pledging the Leaguers to work for the union of Methodism in the United States.

Kwansei, Gakuin, our college at Kobe, Japan, has an enrolment of 715 students—540 in the middle school, 125 in the college literary department, and 50 in the theological department. This shows a gain in attendance over last year of 135.

June 30th marked the 53d anniversary of Cardinal Gibbons' ordination as a priest and the 28th anniversary of his appointment as a Cardinal. The length of his service in these two capacities gives him a unique distinction attained by no other American citizen. Cardinal Gibbons will celebrate his eightieth birthday on July 23.

The Supreme Court of the United States on June 22 upheld the validity of the Roman Catholic poverty vow, which a Federal Circuit Court of Appeals had declared to be unconstitutional. The litigation arose in connection with the estate of Augustine Wirth, a monk, whose property was left in the hands of the Church, and which his relatives sought to secure.

Dr. H. M. Hamill, Superintendent of the Sunday School Training Work of the M. E. Church, South, was elected President of the International Sunday School Association at its recent meeting in Chicago. As an authority in Sunday school matters, Dr. Hamill has for years ranked with the foremost, and this honor accorded him by his fellow-workers was well merited.

Dr. W. C. Lovett, the brilliant editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, went to Nashville a few days since to attend the meeting of the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which he is a member. Referring to what was done in his paper, Dr. Lovett says: "Concerning the districting of the Church for official papers as ordered by the General Conference, the Committee will take time and inform the Church of its conclusions. What is to be done concerning the establishment of a news bureau will also in due time be stated to the Church."

The Nashville Banner of June 29 says: "Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Dr. Ed F. Cook, and Miss Mabel Head will leave to-night for Cincinnati to attend a meeting of representatives of all the mission boards of the denominations that carry on work in Mexico or among Mexicans in the United States. The object of this meeting is to plan for the reorganization of the Mexican work as soon as the conditions will admit. A large number of missionaries who have been working in Mexico are expected to be present at this conference."

Both Birmingham and Atlanta are getting busy in their efforts to secure the new university which the Southern Methodists are expected to establish east of the Mississippi River in the near future. It is stated that our people in the former city will offer as a foundation Birmingham College, valued at $350,000, and that the business men of the city have formed an organization to raise an additional $1,000,000. In Atlanta, Mr. Edwin P. Ansley has tendered 75 acres of land near Oglethorpe University, valued at $250,000, and one layman has pledged a private subscription of $25,000. In a letter to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, Dr. S. A. Steel affirms that Atlanta is the place for the proposed institution and suggests that it be called Piedmont University, we suppose after the name of the wide-reaching plateau that lies east of the Appalachian Mountains, which extend from Maine to Alabama.

Secular News and Comment

In 1903 there were on the Fourth of July 466 fatal accidents and 3933 persons were injured; in 1913 the fatal accidents numbered 32 and the number of injuries sustained 1131. This shows that the campaign for a sane and safe observance of the anniversary of the Nation's birthday has been a pronounced success. But evidently the good work yet needs to be kept up.

Mt. Lassen, in Northern California, about ninety miles South of the Oregon line, which had long been regarded as an extinct volcano, began to show some disturbance and formed a new crater on May 30. Since then there have been a number of eruptions, in some of which stones and ashes have been thrown 2000 feet in the air. This mountain is 10,437 feet high.

Dr. Franklin N. Riley, who for the past seventeen years has been Professor of History at the University of Mississippi, has accepted the same chair in Washington and Lee University of Virginia. Dr. Riley is an accomplished scholar and historian and has made his influence widely felt for good in Mississippi, and his native State will give him up with not a little reluctance.

The International Opium Conference, after a ten days' session at The Hague (Holland), closed on June 25. An effort is being made to get the co-operating Powers to sign an agreement to stop the traffic in this pernicious drug, which is such a curse to the peoples of the Orient. The growing warfare against this gigantic evil is one of the most encouraging signs of the times.

To five hundred members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs who called at the White House on June 30, President Wilson announced that he would not seek to help the cause of woman suffrage before Congress because the Democratic party had not endorsed the movement, and because he regarded it as one for the States and not the Federal Government to settle.

Mr. P. P. Claxton, Commissioner of Education of the United States, has notified three students of Tulane University—Messrs. Nemours, Honore, and Clement—of their appointment as delegates to the fourth International Congress of American Students, which will meet at Santiago, Chili, on September 6. The other American universities from which delegates have been named are Columbia, Cornell, the Catholic University of America, Northwestern (Methodist), and Leland Stanford.

The State-wide prohibition law went into effect in West Virginia on July 1, and 1200 saloons passed out of existence. The grogshops kept up their usually ugly record to the end, as several murders were committed in them on the last day that they were allowed to keep open. It is nothing short of amazing that any civilized community will tolerate such agencies for evil. But the cause of prohibition is sweeping triumphantly on and the time will come when the United States will be a saloonless nation. May God speed the happy day!

Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Austro-Hungary, and his morganatic wife, the Duchess of Hohenburg, were shot to death while riding in an automobile in Sarajevo, Bosnia, on June 28. The assassin, Gavrio Princip, is a young student only eighteen years of age. Archduke Francis was born on December 18, 1863, and was a nephew of Francis Joseph, the present Emperor of Austria Hungary, who is in his eighty-sixth year. The youthful murderer told the policeman who interrogated him that it had long been his purpose to kill some eminent person.

Mr. Albert W. Biggs, of Memphis, Tenn., a lawyer of distinction and a highly esteemed citizen, died on June 28 after an illness of about six weeks, and was buried at Trenton, Tenn., his birthplace, with Bishop E. E. Hoss and Dr. T. E. Sharp, his pastor, conducting the obsequies. Mr. Biggs represented the Church's side in the famous Vanderbilt controversy before the Vanderbilt Commission in 1906, and later was one of her leading attorneys when the case was tried in the courts. He was only forty-three years of age. He was a member of St. John's M. E. Church, South, of Memphis and was a man of most excellent character. The Editor of the Nashville Banner, in an editorial deploring his death, said: "There was never a more lovable man. He radiated sunshine. His disposition was one of sweetness. His life was clean and no man could say aught against him."

A Sketch of the Sumrall (Miss.) M. E. Church, South

We believe we have one of the most complete and best adapted churches to the needs of the community in which it is situated that can be found in the Mississippi Conference, if not in the State.

The picture shown here will give you some idea as to its outward appearance. The extreme dimensions are 50 by 84 feet. The main auditorium is 48 by 50 feet, less a room 9 by 12 feet to the left of the pulpit.

The choir is to the right of the pulpit with room for twenty-five singers. We have the inclined floor, leaded art glass windows, and the best plain-finish circular oak pews. We have a new pipe-tone cathedral organ, the highest priced organ manufactured by the Williams Piano and Organ Company, of Chicago. The vestibule is 14 by 14 feet, with double doors from two sides. The Sunday school department is 36 by 50 feet directly in front of the pulpit, separated therefrom by folding doors hung on a track, making them open and shut with remarkable ease. The floor of this Sunday school department is two in it every Sunday at 10 a.m. This class is growing rapidly now.

Now, a word as to the material used in the construction of this building. The foundation is concrete up to the floor joists around the entire building, there being 103 cubic yards of concrete in it. We have four sets of concrete steps to the building. From the foundation up we have a brick veneer building. We used No. 2 pressed or face brick. The roof is covered with the best grade of galvanized tin shingles.

All the windows except those in the main auditorium are glazed with Moss glass. We have double floors with deadening paper between them throughout the building. The flooring used is C. rift, 1 by 3 inches. The ceiling throughout is the best made, and the painting with three coats of the best paints and varnishes on the market.

We have a lot 150 by 150 feet, which gives room enough for croquet and tennis courts. We have built and furnished this house at an actual expenditure of $7000 in cash.

feet higher than the rear of the main auditorium. In this department we have seven classrooms, four of them 10 by 10 feet, and three of them 11 by 14 feet, these all opening into the auditorium of the Sunday school, so that for the opening and closing exercises we have seating room for 150 in direct view of the superintendent.

Underneath the Sunday school department we have a room 36 by 50 feet, with a 10-foot ceiling, concrete floor, with two doors and twelve large windows, which let in an abundance of light and air. In this room we have the pastor's office, 12 by 14 feet. From this large room we have a door into the furnace and kitchen room, which is 12 by 20 feet. We have supplied the kitchen with a sink and the large room with a high-class lavatory and drinking fountain. We have arranged for a telephone to be placed in this room, which was designed to meet the needs of the social life of the church and community. At any social meeting we can easily seat 250 people. We keep this room open every night for a reading room. We have also given the fraternal orders of our community an invitation to hold their social receptions here, there being no other place in town as convenient as this one. The Modern Woodmen have already spent one pleasant evening in this room. Our men's Bible class meets

This is a saw-mill town. We have a white population here of about 1200. We have a membership in our church of approximately 200, representing about sixty families.

We had this church dedicated on June 14 by Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Whitworth College. The few unpaid bills are well provided for by good subscriptions. As pastor of this church I have done the best I could to do this work within our resources and to keep the whole membership enlisted in the work.

I have had some very true and faithful men on the building committee with me. I may have done more than my share of the work, but what I have done has been with a willing mind, and I have stronger faith in God and man than I had when I undertook this work.

I planned the building, collected most of the money, bought all the material, employed all labor, and O. K'd all bills. We finished the work without an accident or any friction, and we all feel like we are now ready for a great revival, and the prospects are good for such a realization under the earnest preaching of Rev. G. H. Gallo-way, of Court Street, Hattiesburg, who is here at this time in a meeting and will remain with us for several days yet.

✓ CORINTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Corinth District Conference was held at Ecu, Miss., June 13 to 21, Rev. J. H. Mitchell presiding. All the pastors were present except four. We had a creditable number of lay members of the conference present. The little town of Ecu entertained in the "good old way" and the people attended the sessions in such numbers as to convince us that they appreciated the conference. The Church at Ecu is only four years old, but they have a nice building, a good Sunday school, and a woman's missionary society. There is a bright future for the Church there.

The business of the conference was dispatched with ease and promptness. All the various interests of this large district were carefully considered and it was shown that our Church in these parts is abreast of, if not in advance of, the other Churches. Unusual interest was shown in the spiritual features of the conference; the Sacrament was administered at the opening session, more time than is customary was given to the devotional exercises and refreshing experience meetings were held. There was preaching every morning and every night and each preacher seemed to be animated by only one desire—that of preaching a helpful sermon.

Miss Corinne Rogers was present, looking after the work of the Woman's Missionary Society, and addressed the conference. Miss Ethel Golden made many friends for the Orphans' Home. I am sure we all appreciated the Home more after hearing her. Rev. J. A. Goad, of New Albany, was appointed Agent for the Home in this district. Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, Rev. V. C. Curtis, Sunday School Field Secretary, and Rev. G. W. Bachman, Conference Colporter, were present and presented the several causes which they represent. Dr. J. Y. Murry was able to be present and manifested the same interest in the conference that he has always done. The conference accepted his invitation and will meet in Ripley next year. Dr. J. Y. Murry, D. T. Yeates, A. A. Gates and F. E. Ray were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Guy Ray, Lee Humphreys Coffey, Nophilis Maxey, and — Baker were licensed to preach and recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Arthur Columbus Hargitt was granted license to preach.

I am not prepared to say how many accession we have had during the Conference year, but several fruitful meetings have been held and all the pastors seemed hopeful that they would have great revivals during the summer. Perhaps there is no harder field than the Corinth district, but we have men equal to the demands and they are faithful.

S. A. BROWN, Secretary.

HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The eighth annual session of the Holly Springs District Conference was held at Potts' Camp, Miss., June 17 to 19. Our very able and much loved presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Tucker, presided. All the pastors of the district with one exception were present; also quite a number of the local preachers.

Miss Ethel Golden presented the cause of the Orphanage to the delight of the conference. Rev. V. C. Curtis, our Sunday School Secretary, was with us for a day. He led in the Sunday school program and brought real inspiration to the Sunday school work in the district. Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, for the Board of Education, made a brief but pointed address. Rev. J. R. Countiss, President of Grenada College, ably presented the cause of his splendid college. Rev. G. W. Bachman was with us for two days.

Jesse T. Simmons of Waterford Circuit, Wilson W. Biffle of Randolph Circuit, and Geo. Winfield Robertson of Oxford Station, were granted license to preach.

W. D. Bennett of Randolph Circuit and C. O. Pate of Water Valley were recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. Judge J. G. McGowan, Dr. F. P. Boatner, Mr. M. G. Duhard and Rev. C. T. Floyd were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. R. X. Williams and Rev. R. F. Cole were elected alternates.

The characters of all the local preachers were passed and their license renewed, with the exception of J. L. Brazzel, whose character was passed but the conference refused to renew his license on the ground that he was not subject to authority and performed functions beyond his rights.

The preaching of the gospel was the feature of the conference. It was good indeed to hear the splendid sermons preached by Revs. V. C. Curtis, E. S. Lewis, T. H. Dorsey, J. R. Countiss, L. A. McKeown, and J. A. Hall.

Resolutions complimentary of the efficient work of our able presiding elder were unanimously passed. It seems to be the general opinion that we have the best presiding elder in the Conference.

Duck Hill was unanimously chosen as the next place of meeting for the District Conference.

Through the united efforts of the pastor, Rev. J. L. Nahors, and the good people of Potts' Camp, the conference was delightfully entertained.

J. E. STEPHENS, Secretary.

THE LITTLE BOY SCOUT.

The little Boy Scout goes marching out
In a khaki suit of tan,
And a broad felt hat with a silver cord,
Just like a grown-up man.
He feels so big as he swings along
In step with the line of boys,
That he knows he never again will cry
Or play with his childish toys.

The little Boy Scout is only eight,
And his eyes are blue and bright;
His mother kisses and tucks him up
In his pretty white bed each night.
Tramp, tramp, tramp, on the weary road—
He is tired and hungry too,
But to fall behind in the dusty march
Is not what a man would do.

The little Boy Scout is home again;
To bed in the dark he goes;
No more afraid of the boggy-bears,
That lurk on the stairs, he knows.
He has learned to conquer the pain of life,
As only a brave heart can,
And his mother steals to his cot to say,
"Good-night, my dear little man."
—Southern Churchman.

BOYS WE LIKE.

The boy who never makes fun of old age, no matter how decrepit or unfortunate or evil it may be. God's hand rests lovingly on the aged head.

Cheating is contemptible anywhere and at any age. His play should strengthen, not weaken, his character.

The boy who never calls anybody bad names, no matter what anybody calls him.

The boy who is never cruel.

The boy who never lies. Even white lies leave black spots on the character.

The boy who never makes fun of a companion because of a misfortune he could not help.

The boy who never hesitates to say "No" when asked to do a wrong thing.

The boy who never quarrels.

The boy who never forgets that God made him to be a joyous, loving, helpful being.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

HER MOTHER'S PARTNER.

A sturdy little figure she was, trudging bravely with a pail of water. So many times she had passed our gate that morning that curiosity prompted us to remark: "You're a busy little girl to-day?"

"Yes'm." The round face under the broad hat turned toward us. It was freckled and perspiring, but cheerful withal. "Yes'm; it takes a heap of water to do a washing."

"And do you bring it all from the brook down there?"

"Oh, we have a cistern mostly, only it's been such a dry time lately."

"And is there nobody else to carry the water?"

"Nohody but mother, an' she is washing."

"Well, you are a good girl to help her."

It was a well intended compliment; but the little water carrier did not consider it one at all, for there was a look of surprise in her gray eyes and an almost indignant tone in her voice as she answered: "Why, of course, I help her. I always help her to do things all the time. She hasn't anybody else. Mother'n I are partners."
—Central Christian Advocate.

THE PIAZZA GIRL.

"There have been six girls in the office this morning," the dean remarked, glancing keenly at the gray-eyed girl before him, "who have said they were willing to do anything to earn a little money."

The gray-eyed girl did not flinch. "But I am ready to do anything," she answered with a smile that emphasized the significant word.

The dean turned to his desk, and rummaged in one of the pigeon-holes.

"There are several ladies on the campus who are in need of some one to sweep their walks every day and wash the piazzas once or twice a week. Are you willing to do that? Of course it will not bring you much, but it is all I have to offer at present."

"I shall be glad to do it," the girl replied. "May I have your address? Thank you, very much."

The dean leaning back in his chair, watched his visitor as she crossed the campus. Six other girls had refused the work that morning. But it remains to be seen whether she does it, after all," he said to himself.

She did do it. Every morning for nine days he passed her on his before-breakfast constitutional. She always spoke brightly, with no apparent consciousness of broom or mop.

"Means what she says; gives honest work, no false pride," the dean thought, with satisfaction. Then suddenly the piazza had a relapse. When, two weeks later, he met her, he asked her about it.

"Oh," she explained. "I'm doing type-writing for Prof. Summers. He asked me if I could do it as well as I could sweep walks, and I told him I could. It is fascinating work—copying the notes of his experiments."

"I've no doubt," the dean declared, "that you intend to perform experiments of your own some day."

"I'm going to try," she laughed.

When he reached that point in his favorite story, the old professor always stopped.

"And did she? somebody was sure to ask.

"No," he fumed; "she went and married a young upstart of an instructor. She swept his piazza for awhile, till he made a reputation, and she copied his notes, and I've no doubt did half his work—he always said so."

"It seems a pity," the sympathetic listener, lured on so far, would probably begin, only to be vehemently interrupted.

"Pity? Where's the pity? What's a pity? She helped a man do his work in the world, and brought up three sons, any one of whom would have washed piazza floors cheerfully to get an education. One is building bridges out West, one is helping build brains in the East, the third is in college. I'd like to know how a woman could put her education to better use."

Then he would smile, and look out across the campus, with its group of girls.

"I used to doubt the wisdom of higher education for girls. The girl who washed piazzas converted me," he would finish.—Youth's Companion.

THE GRUMBLE MAN.

"I wonder how he ever got into this house. I am sure the front door was locked. Yes, and the windows down, but he got in somehow!"

"Who, mother?" piped up May, as she lay on the lounge, complaining. "Who got into the house? Did he steal anything?"

"Yes, child, replied the mother, looking very sad. "He stole—let me see. Yes, his name was Mr. Grumble; he came to the face of my little girl and stole away the pretty smiles, and left deep furrows in her forehead, drew lines across her mouth and made her tongue come out. He changed the expression of her face so that no one to look at her would recognize her as my little girl, who usually has such a happy face."

"Oh, mother, you are making fun of me," cried May, and the tears began to fall in earnest.

"Dear me! Now we will have rivers, too, if we don't look out; run quickly and open the door, May, so that horrid fellow can get out!"

May ran to the door and opened it and a nice, soft breeze blew in her face and tossed her pretty hair; then she came back laughing and said: "I chased him out, mother, and he shall never get into this house again if I can help it."
—Linda de Armond, in Christian Index.

OUR DOCTRINAL EVANGELIST.

Rev. I. L. Peebles, known as "the Doctrinal Evangelist" of the Mississippi Conference, has been quite sick for some weeks, and will not be able to resume his work for some time yet. If he were holding his meetings, the collections incident thereto would in some measure meet his current expenses. As it is, he must depend upon the subscription made for this purpose at the Annual Conference. These are coming in slowly. If you are one of these subscribers, please send the amount of your subscription to Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, Hattiesburg, Miss., at once!

Dr. Peebles' work this year in my district has been of the highest grade, and the pastors wish more of his time than is our share. I have never known one who could put the arguments for Methodist doctrines more convincingly and inoffensively. "The common people hear him gladly," as do also the learned. His peculiar work is of great value.

A DISTINGUISHED EDUCATOR.

Dr. J. N. Powers, who was recently elected to the Chancellorship of the University of Mississippi, is another son of the parsonage who is giving a good account of himself in the stirring and busy world. His father was the Rev. I. W. Powers, a pioneer Methodist preacher in Alabama. His mother was a woman of unusual mentality and of literary tastes, often writing for the church papers and other periodicals under the nom de plume of Julia Westwood.

Dr. Powers was educated at the Livingston Academy, Tuskegee Military Institute, the Southern University (all in Alabama), the University of Mississippi, and the University of Chicago. When quite a young man he married Miss Ada Gavin, and their home was blessed with two children—a son, Neely, twenty-three years old, who is now a lawyer in Jackson, Miss., and a daughter, Miss Aline, who is nineteen years of age. Dr. Powers' entire career since his graduation has been devoted to the work of education. He taught eight years in schools situated in rural districts and twelve years in town and city schools, his reputation as instructor and successful educator steadily growing. He was appointed State Superintendent of Education by Governor Vardaman in 1907, was elected to that office by the people later in the same year, and was re-elected without opposition in 1912. During his seven years' incumbency in that responsible office, the State Normal College at Hattiesburg was built, hundreds of weak one-teacher schools in the country were consolidated into strong graded schools, many new practical educational methods were introduced, and a system of agricultural high schools, the work of which is attracting attention throughout the Nation, was developed.

Dr. Powers is a man of splendid physique, handsome in appearance, and is a forceful and impressive public speaker. He possesses a clear, discriminating judgment, great energy, and administrative abilities of a high order. He is a citizen of irreproachable character and a loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Being only forty-five years of age, he comes to his present important work in the very prime of life, and his many friends confidently predict that the University of Mississippi under his leadership will soon enjoy an increasing tide of prosperity and move forward to larger things. It is to be hoped that the people of the Magnolia State will give the new Chancellor their hearty co-operation and that the bright expectations concerning his administration will be fully realized. As a rule, the Universities of the Southern States have not kept pace with the great educational advance that has been going on in other parts of the American Union. It is high time that they were waking up and catching step with the procession.

TWO VALUABLE BOOKS.

The volume, entitled "The Articles of Religion as Amended, Supplemented, and Explained," from the pen of the Rev. W. S. Harrison, of Starkville, Miss., and printed by our Publishing House at Nashville, is a most suggestive and informing one. It is not a mere discussion, in order, of our Articles of Faith, with an account of amendments and supplements that have been made thereto, as the name of the book might indicate, but it is rather a setting forth of our creed as the author would have it appear, the articles being renumbered, some added, and others blended or omitted. Candor compels us to say that we do not think the volume is well named or that its arrangement is the best that could have been made. We are inclined to the view that if the Church's Twenty-Five Articles had been left intact and a seriatim exposition given of them, and the proposed supplementary articles and the changes desired in those we already have had been made to follow, the general effect would have been decidedly better. But notwithstanding what we conceive to be the somewhat unhappy arrangement of its contents, we regard this publication as one that possesses great merit and we wish for it a wide circulation. The author has a remarkably clear perception of the truth and the faculty of stating it so that it can be grasped readily. He is a man of scholarship, a theologian of ability, and a thinker of unusual powers of analysis. The discussions contained in the book are clarifying and helpful, and there are single chapters that are worth many times the cost of the entire work. This interesting volume may be had of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas; or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss. The price is $1. Every Methodist preacher ought to read it and it ought to find its way quickly into thousands of Methodist homes.

"Building the Kingdom" is the title of an excellent volume written by Rev. E. B. Chappell, D.D., our Sunday School Editor, and lately issued by our Publishing Agents. The general theme of discussion is "The Educational Ideal of the Church," and under it many live questions pertaining to our Sunday school work are handled in an illuminating and helpful manner. Though sanely conservative in his religious views, the author has an open mind and realizes that in our present complex and changing civilization new problems have arisen that must be grappled with intelligently and solved. Existing evils and dangers are pointed out, but a note of optimism is at all times discoverable. The volume is written in a charming style and holds the attention of the reader from the first page to the last. Dr. Chappell has performed a needed service in giving the public this admirable series of discussions. The price of the publication is $1. It may be ordered of the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn., or its branches at Dallas, Texas, and Richmond, Va.; or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Colporteur for the Mississippi Annual Conference, at Winona, Miss.

CORRECTLY STATED.

Rev. J. H. Moore, of Bay Springs, Miss., states correctly the position of the Methodist Church in his article bearing on the possible salvation of the heathen which appears upon another page. It will do for a Calvinist, who believes that a large part, perhaps a majority, of the human race were foreordained to be lost, to include the millions in pagan lands in that class and let them go down to destruction without having a chance to be saved; but an Arminian in theology, who holds that God is too just to send any person to perdition without giving him an opportunity to escape such a fate, cannot consistently accept that view. Brother Moore's position is also in harmony with the Scriptures, as is shown in the first part of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and in St. Peter's memorable comment upon the case of Cornelius: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every land he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him."

But there is one point that needs to be guarded: Any persons who may be saved in heathen lands are not saved apart from and independently of Christ, but by his atonement availing for them upon other conditions. It is not at all necessary to insist upon wholesale heathen damnation to furnish a warrant for foreign missions. The Gospel is not designed to save men from hell alone, but also from the frightful consequences of sin in this life. And as our correspondent rightly says, by purifying conditions in pagan countries, the Gospel would vastly increase the number saved, which we fear are few where evil so terrifically reigns. The world may stand for millenniums yet, and by Christianizing all the lands of earth a well-nigh innumerable company may be added to Heaven's population who otherwise would never join the shining throng. Surely this is enough to incite us to do our utmost to have the story of redeeming love told wherever man is found.

DOING A GREAT WORK.

Read what Rev. J. S. Purcell, the President, says about the work of the Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose. Manifestly this institution is doing a great work, and the Methodists of South Mississippi should seek to strengthen it and extend the radius of its influence. One feature of it that we particularly like, though it is not mentioned by Brother Purcell in his brief statement, is that it makes special effort in the way of prizes offered and the self-help plans maintained to enable students with but little means to avail themselves of its advantages. Thus it is opening the door of opportunity to many a youth who otherwise would perhaps find it forever closed and barred. We need more such schools in the Church—possibly one in every Annual Conference.

WHY NOT?

The New Orleans Christian Advocate of August 6 will be brought out under the auspices of the women missionary workers of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, with Mrs. R. F. Harrell in special editorial charge in the office. It will deal extensively with our woman's work in the Conferences mentioned and will also shed much light upon it in its connective aspects. Why not place a copy of this number of the Advocate in the hands of every woman who is a member of the Church in the two States, with a view to informing the indifferent ones concerning the work and enlisting them in it? It strikes us that such action, followed by a vigorous membership campaign, might result in greatly strengthening the auxiliaries in the various pastoral charges. In this connection, we will state that if extra copies of this special edition of the Advocate are desired, it will be necessary to send in the orders in advance, as ordinarily only enough copies are printed to meet the requirements of our circulation.

IS UNWORTHY.

A Syrian, calling himself C. Mohammed, and claiming to be a pastor of a Methodist Church in Norfolk, Va., is roaming over the land and getting money wherever he can deceive a generous man by the plausible tale he tells. He gives Bishop Candler as a reference in some places and other Bishops in other places. He was in Columbus, Ga., recently. Bishop Candler says that he knows nothing about him. Doubtless he is unknown to any and all of the Bishops. He is a fraud and deserves to be arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Seashore Camp Meeting began yesterday and will continue through Wednesday, July 15.

A correspondent from Grenada, Miss., says: "Rev. J. A. Hall has received 54 members into the Church since Conference and is loved by everybody."

Rev. M. A. Burns, who is serving the Nettleton (Miss.) Circuit, gave us a club of 7 subscriptions a few days since, for which he has our hearty thanks. He is keeping up his record as an alert and successful pastor in his present field.

Bishop W. B. Murrah was expected to dedicate our new Church at Kokomo, Miss., one of the appointments on the Fernwood charge, of which Rev. W. H. Saunders is pastor, last Sunday. We have had no report of the service at this writing.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, of Greenville, Miss., has lately installed electric fans and a telephone in the First Methodist Church of that city, of which he is pastor. We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Brother Lewis for a club of 10 subscriptions to the Advocate, forwarded on June 30.

Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, and Dr. George H. Cornelison, Jr., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church (Dr. B. M. Palmer's church), exchanged pulpits on Sunday, June 21. It scarcely needs to be said that both congregations listened to discourses of a high order.

Prof. J. Reese Linn, of Millsaps College, is spending some days in Ithaca, New York, where he is doing some special work in the library of Cornell University. Prof. Linn, in ordering the Advocate to come to his address in that city (4 Garden Avenue), kindly says: "I have a wide acquaintance with church papers, and I consider the New Orleans Christian Advocate one of the very best."

Feeling that unavoidable duties of a personal nature necessitated it, Rev. J. W. Ward asked to be relieved of his pastorate at Rosedale, Miss., and his request was granted. Rev. R. Bradley, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference and the father of Revs. T. M. and O. W. Bradley, has been appointed to serve the Rosedale charge, thus made vacant, until the meeting of the North Mississippi Annual Conference.

Rev. S. A. Brown, of Booneville, Miss., is not only a strong and growing preacher, but is also a hustling and resourceful pastor, as is attested by a very impressive card which he has lately been distributing among the members of his flock, a sample of which we have before us. It is an appeal for active and faithful service, and is addressed to the "Old Guard" and "New Recruits" of the Methodist Church of which he is the shepherd.

Bishop Waterhouse has pleased the North Mississippians by changing the date of their Annual Conference to Dec. 2. The November date was too early to secure the best results.

The next issue of the Advocate will be chiefly devoted to the missionary work of the Louisiana Conference. The matter for it is being collected by Rev. W. W. Drake, the Conference Missionary Secretary.

The contract has been let for the new $17,000 center building at Whitworth College. Instead of talking, Dr. Cooper is doing something substantial; this, too, in the face of boll weevil conditions.

Rev. and Mrs. R. M. Evans announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Miss Bonnie, to Mr. James Fox Hicks, the wedding to take place at the Methodist Church at Strong's, Miss., on July 16. No cards.

A company of Northern editors have for the past ten days been making an extensive tour of inspection in Louisiana. They have thrown many bouquets at the Pelican State. The Yankees have never been accused of not knowing a good thing when they see it.

Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker has recently visited Georgia in the interest of the Epworth League work. He also attended and took a prominent part in the great International Conference which met at Buffalo, N. Y., last week and extended through Sunday, July 5.

Rev. C. A. Battle, the wide-awake pastor of the Felicity Street Church of New Orleans, mailed the members of his congregation an interesting and suggestive mid-summer message last week. Brother Battle is wise: it is the progressive and hard-working man who succeeds in the ministry, as well as in other vocations.

Rev. H. E. Carter, of Leakesville, Miss., writes: "I notice that you quote the Green County Herald concerning the Carradine meeting to be held here. I desire to say through the Advocate that it is not to be held under the auspices of the M. E. Church, South, but in an abandoned M. P. church which has no membership and no pastor, and at the solicitation of only a few people."

The General Board of Education has notified the Educational Commission that funds will be available for the employment of six professors for the new theological school that is to be opened this fall. These instructors, added to the Biblical Department of one of our leading colleges, will furnish advantages for such training scarcely surpassed anywhere in the South.

The Lincoln County Times of July 2 says: "Dr. L. W. Cooper announces that he has engaged Rev. L. E. Alford, of Sumrall, Miss., as business manager of Whitworth College for the next year. In addition to his other duties, Mr. Alford will be instructor in history. He will move here at once, bringing his family, and will occupy Mrs. Applewhite's residence in the western suburbs."

On June 30, Presiding Elder Bowman sent us the following note: "Because of the state of his health, Rev. F. N. Sweeney, our faithful pastor at Wilson, La., has been relieved of all work and will go at once to Colorado for a long rest. Let all the brethren remember him at the throne of grace and pray God's blessings upon his family. The work will be supplied with a pastor as soon as one can be secured."

The Methodists of Brookhaven, Miss., are beginning to plan for the construction of a new church. Rev. W. H. Lewis, our popular pastor in that progressive city, has lately been campaigning some in the interest of Whitworth College. In a note to the Editor Brother Lewis states that the Baptists of Brookhaven have recently closed a fifteen days' meeting, which resulted in more than a hundred accessions to their Church.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. R. Countiss found it necessary to carry his daughter, Miss Katie Lou, to Memphis on July 1, where she was operated on for appendicitis. A letter from Brother Countiss, written last Saturday, stated that she stood the trying ordeal well and that her condition was reported to be quite satisfactory. We trust that her recovery will be rapid and that the anxiety of her loved ones and friends will soon be at an end.

Mr. J. F. H. Barhee, of Memphis, Tenn., who is a son of the late Dr. J. D. Barbee and one of the choice young laymen of our Church, left Memphis last Monday for Cleveland, Ohio, for the purpose of consulting medical specialists and perhaps of undergoing an operation for troubles which have annoyed him for several years. We trust that it will be found that his condition is not serious and that it will be possible to give him relief without using the surgeon's knife.

Rev. E. L. Whiddon, of Brookhaven, Miss., recently delivered a stereopticon lecture at Mendenhall, Miss., under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, which was given 25 per cent of the proceeds. We have received a statement from several ladies belonging to the society to the effect that they were much pleased with the lecture, which they think is calculated to do good.

They also state that Brother Whiddon would be pleased to make similar engagements elsewhere.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, President of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, in addition to the other advantages and attractions afforded by the college under his direction, is offering to all boarding pupils a free visit to the Shiloh Battlefield and Military Park on Oct. 24, 1914, and a trip to the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, next April, at the low price of $13 to each student who may desire to go. This historic institution is enjoying an increasing prosperity under the present able administration.

The Southern Methodist papers generally have expressed gratification at Dr. T. N. Ivey's re-election to the editorship of The Nashville Christian Advocate. Dr. Ivey's work on the tripod of our General Organ has been of a high order, and he is worthy both of the fine vote that was given him at the General Conference and of the many complimentary things that have since been said concerning his service. Dr. J. S. Chadwick, the Assistant Editor, has also shown that he is the right man in the right place.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick attended the International Sunday School Convention recently held in Chicago. Referring to that great gathering in a personal letter to the Editor, she says: "The program and departmental conferences were better than usual. I greatly enjoyed conferring with the Sunday school leaders in the Adult Department of the Northern Methodist Church; our plans, publications, and work are fully appreciated by them. All the representatives of our Church made splendid impressions."

Mrs. R. F. Witt, of Silver City, Miss., writes: "We are getting along very nicely in this Delta town, with the exception of Mr. Witt's health. He was quite ill through the months of January and February and has never fully regained his strength, though he is now able to fill his pulpit." Sister Witt also states that Miss Alma Witt left on July 1 for an extended trip through the West, after which she will spend several months in Denver, Colo., with her two brothers, B. F. and L. E. Witt, who are in business in that city.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate appears a statement from Mrs. Lily Meekins concerning the formation of a Good Example Society, which is being organized with a view to helping the Mary Werlein Mission of this city, with which she is connected as a missionary. New Orleans has never had a more earnest and consecrated worker than Mrs. Meekins, and any one who lends her a helping hand may be sure that he is aiding a most deserving cause. We wish that the proposed new society could secure thousands of members.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey of Mendenhall, Miss., writing on July 3, says: "I have just closed an excellent revival at Sandford, Miss., which resulted in a number of conversions and accessions to the Church. The spiritual condition of the membership was toned up to a high key and the people pronounced the meeting to be perhaps the most successful and harmonious ever held at that place. An impression was made for Methodism that will tell in the years to come. The pastor, Rev. J. S. Parker, is a fine yoke-fellow, and is universally loved by his people."

Mr. Ernest Kellner, Jr., of Greenville, Miss., was one of the law graduates at the recent Commencement of Washington and Lee University. Though one of its youngest members, he stood third in a class of sixty. Mr. Kellner will take a course in stenography and expects to be ready to settle down to the work of his profession early in the fall. We have learned from several sources that Greenville, which has somewhat of a record in that line, has never produced a choicer young man than is he, and his many friends are proud of the record that he has made and predict for him a bright future.

We are printing in this number of the Advocate an account of a very interesting old document hearing upon the early work and history of Mansfield College, which has lately come to light. It bears eloquent witness to the fact that this institution rendered a noble service to Methodism and the State of Louisiana in the past and commanded much attention; but the best days of Mansfield College are yet to be. The school is at present most fortunate in having as its head Prof. R. E. Bobbitt, who is one of the first educators of the State, and every indication is that it will open with an overflowing attendance next September.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, our pastor at Myrtle, Miss., reports that two most regrettable deaths have lately occurred in his charge. He says: "Mrs. Lonnie Anderson, a faithful member of the Myrtle Church, was laid to rest on Monday, June 29, leaving a husband and two children. She was a true Christian and suffered long. The infant child of Mr. W. B. Baker died on June 29, and was laid to rest in the Old Oak Grove Cemetery. Brother Baker is the brother of Rev. G. A. Baker, who will knock at the door of the North Mississippi Conference for admission this fall."

Both of these stricken families have the sympathy of many friends."

News has reached us that Col. J. M. Johnson, an honored citizen of Holmes County, Miss., and one of the leading men in our Church at Acona, an appointment on the Black Hawk charge, was thrown from his horse one day last week and that his collar-bone and several of his ribs were broken. This is a very serious accident at Col. Johnson's advanced age, and we fear that it will be some time before he recovers. He may be assured that he will have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in the affliction which has befallen him.

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, has made a vigorous fight before the State Legislature for better temperance laws, but so far his efforts seem to have been largely unavailing. What Louisiana needs to do is to strengthen and build up the Anti-Saloon League, and when the next Legislature is elected to call every man out and see that a majority of the lawmakers chosen are friendly to the temperance cause. In other words, we need to perfect our organization and do more preliminary work before we take our cause before the Legislature. There is no reason to be discouraged—ultimately we shall win.

In a personal letter to the Editor, Rev. M. B. Sharrough, our pastor at Columbia, where the next session of the Mississippi Conference is to be held, says: "The walls of our new church are up and another day's work should complete the steeple, or nearly so—that is, the brick part of it. The slate roofing is about on and the work of covering the structure will be finished in a few days. Then we shall have only the inside work and furnishing to take care of before the building will be ready for occupancy. We hope to have everything completed by the first of October at the latest; indeed, except the seating, we ought, if nothing happens to delay us, to finish the structure by September 1."

Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge (La.) District, writes as follows: "The Keener Memorial Church of Baton Rouge is flourishing. It is maintaining its custom of marrying off its preachers, the present pastor, Rev. W. A. Mangum, as unsuspicious and unyielding as he had hitherto been, having lately fallen a victim to Cupid's arrows. He and his wife are starting off together splendidly in the work of the pastorate and are happy. The suggestion has been made that when the way is open some of the other preachers who have been slow-movers in the matrimonial line should be sent to Keener Memorial, as the people there seem never to fail to relieve them of their bachelorhood."

THE GALLOWAY MEMORIAL FUND FOR OLD PREACHERS.

The church making the largest contribution will have the pleasure of giving this medal to the most active one in securing the collection.

If the charges continue responding during 1914 as they have done, the total will go far over a thousand dollars. The Board urges all who have not yet taken the collection to do so as soon as possible.

Send all contributions for the Galloway Memorial Fund to Rev. T. J. O'Neil, Port Gibson, Miss. Please note the change of Brother O'Neil's address. N. B. HARMON.

LOOK AFTER THE BOYS AND INSURE THE FUTURE OF CHURCH AND STATE.

"The Good Example Club" of the Mary Werlein Mission needs financial aid for proper fitting up and expansion. The combined individual help of Methodists will determine the future of the mission neighborhood. Its boys of to-day will be its men of to-morrow. Are you willing to become an honorary member of the Good Example Club at 50 cents per year and help that much toward making that neighborhood, through the influence of the younger generation, a better one to live in? Send the membership fee, 50 cents, with your name and address, to Mrs. L. Meekins, 1026 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans, La.

On April 29, 1914, death removed from us one of our best members. Mrs. ELLA PATRICK BURGESS, wife of J. D. Burgess. She was born on Nov. 24, 1870, and joined the M. E. Church, South, when a child, to which the best service and devotion of her life were given. She suffered long, but bore it all cheerfully, never complaining. She was aware of her condition as the end approached. It was not death that came, to her; it was only a translation to a life with God. She was loved by all. The floral tributes at the grave were beautiful. It seems that she was taken from us too soon, but God knows best, and we trust in him. Her going gives us greater interest in heaven. Let us cherish her memory and follow the Savior she trusted until husband, children, father, mother, and brothers shall meet again. Her Pastor, R. T. PICKETT.

LUCIUS HERBERT TAYLOR was born in Coldwater, Michigan, on March 4, 1847, and departed from this life at his home near Mechanicsburg, Miss., on June 10, 1914. He came to this State in early manhood, where he sought and won the heart and hand of Miss Ella Fears, and they twain walked the matrimonial path of life together until the Lord seemed to say to the way-worn man, "It is enough, come up higher." Besides his wife he is survived by one daughter and six sons. When interrogated as to his death he unhesitatingly said, "I am ready." He was a member of the Methodist Church and for a time served very efficiently as superintendent of the Mt. Olivet Sunday School; he also served his community for a time as a secular school teacher; at one time he filled the office of Justice of the Peace and was selected by his political party to represent it in the National Convention. In all of these positions he served with marked ability. He possessed both tact and talent, was a clear thinker, a ready writer, and a fluent reader; and might have filled with credit and distinction even larger places, had he been called upon to do so. H. L. SCARBOROUGH.

Miss ALMA LANGSTON was born at Cockrum, Miss., on May 29, 1876, and died at Dallas, Texas, May 31, 1914. Miss Alma was converted at the age of twenty and joined the Methodist Church at Cockrum, and lived a consistent Christian life. For quite awhile she was a teacher in the Cockrum school and always had the love and esteem of the pupils and the patrons. She was a great sufferer, but always bore her lot with patience and submission. Her health having given way, she went to Texas, hoping to find relief. While in the home of her sister in Dallas, she found that an operation was necessary. This brought some relief, and she was planning to return to her home, when she was again taken sick. The physicians decided on another operation, to which she submitted, but the dear, loving Savior called her away to heaven. Her remains were brought home by her brother, Charlie, and we laid them away beside her good mother, to await the resurrection morning. She leaves to mourn her departure an aged father, J. C. Langston; two sisters, one residing in Dallas, Tex., and the other, Mrs. Lillie Cochran of Olive Branch, Miss.; four brothers, Guy, C. J., Ray, and V. C., and a host of relatives and friends. Her Pastor, R. I. COLLINS.

Mrs. MARY FRANCIS ROGERS, daughter of J. A. Brock, was born at Montgomery, Ala., March 25, 1845. After moving, with her parents, to Louisiana she was married in 1864 to Mr. S. G. Rogers, and died at her home near Pollock, La., on June 11, 1914. Sister Rogers was the mother of twelve children, of whom seven are still living. Her living children are J. F., E. W., I. A., R. L., and R. C. Rogers, and Mrs. Addie Adams and Mrs. Ceolia Magison. She leaves twenty-five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. She became a member of the Methodist Church at the age of sixteen, and about eight years before her death she, with part of her family, joined the Baptist Church. Her religious life was a steady, shining light to its close. Sister Rogers was faithful and true in all the varied relationships of life, and was an esteemed friend to her neighbors and to all who made her acquaintance. The funeral service was held in the Big Creek Baptist Church, and was conducted by the writer. The body was laid to rest in the Big Creek Cemetery. Her devoted husband, who is feeble in health, survives her, but will not have to wait very long until he, too, will hear the call to the better land. We sympathize with the sorely stricken loved ones, but we rejoice with them in the thought that our departed loved one and friend has been called by our Heavenly Father to a far better and brighter home above. We sorrow not as those that have no hope. E. G. WOOD.

PHILIP MAGEE DRUMMOND, son of Mr. Norval N. and Mrs. Pearl Drummond was born July 23, 1903, and died on May 19, 1914. The result of an accident, his death was sudden. He was the oldest child of the home; was a rare boy and full of promise. He was headful, fine-grained, with a big brain and a great heart. Though not quite six years old at his death, yet he was known and loved by almost all in our little city. His parents both being earnest Christians, he was brought up at God's altar in the home, in the Sunday school and in the church services. In his childish way he was truly religious. He loved to talk and sing about Jesus. The whole city was shocked and grieved by the unexpected tidings of his sudden death. Friends gathered rapidly to render such help and offer such consolation as was possible. A large concourse of people assembled at his funeral through love for him and sympathy with his bereaved parents. We laid him away with the beautiful and simple funeral rites of the Church, bowing to a providence which we could not understand, cherishing the Christian's hope, and we await with faith and trust the resurrection morning. M. B. SHARBROUGH, Columbia, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas the Providence of God has permitted the removal from among us of our brother and friend, W. W. Dilworth; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we deplore the awful tragedy causing his untimely death.
  2. That our community has lost a citizen of sterling worth and our church a most valuable member.
  3. That his family has lost a son, brother, and father of rare tenderness and considerateness.
- Finally, in giving expression to our appreciation of Mr. Dilworth, we believe we voice the sentiment of the whole community when we say, as a friend, comrade, citizen, and Christian man, no one among us had a better record. In all circles he will be missed, and in his church and home more sorely missed. His monument is his sterling character; his resting place, the hearts of those who knew him and loved him. The blessings of our God be on his home and loved ones! Peace to his memory.

(Adopted by the quarterly conference at Kossuth, Miss., which ordered a copy to be spread upon its journal, a copy sent to the family of the deceased, and one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.)

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION.

(Adopted by the congregation of the Algiers M. E. Church, South, on June 21, 1914.)

Whereas, God in his wisdom and love has taken out of this world the soul of our beloved sister, SUSAN J. LEE, wife of the late E. B. Collette, Sr.; and

Whereas, in the death of Sister Collette, we can but feel this church has lost a devoted and earnest member, loyal and true to the teachings of Methodism, and who evinced the lofty principles of a true Christian, ever watchful, ever mindful of the sacred duties that were confided to her care—a devoted woman in all sacred things, and whose life was rich in charitable deeds; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of this church, extend to her sorrowing family our unbounded sympathy in the hour of their affliction, and trust that the knowledge of her long, useful and devoted life will, in a measure, assuage the grief with which their hearts and ours are filled.

Resolved, secondly, that a copy of the above expression of respect be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and copies sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Algiers Herald for publication.

LIFE'S WAY.

Howard T. N. Ussher.

I do not know how long life's path may be,
Nor yet how rough;
But this I know, my Savior walks with me,
And that's enough.

From morn till eve, from youth till age,
From birth till death,
I know He turns the opening page,
And grants me breath.

So ere the sun is in the sky
I ask for grace,
From every evil thought to fly,
And seek His face.

His love my stay, His Word my guide,
I need not fear,
For He has promised to abide Forever near.

And I shall surely reach my rest
In that dear home:
There's welcome for each soul oppressed
Beneath that dome.

And though I tire upon the way
And scarce can sing,
I own His scepter's royal sway
And crown Him King.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

The second worker's conference for deaconesses and home missionaries will be held at Junaluska, N. C., August 24 and 25. Deaconesses and home missionaries will please take note of this meeting and plan their vacations so as to attend. Junaluska is an ideal resort, and we expect to have inspiring addresses. Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer, of the Chicago Deaconess Training School, who is the mother of the deaconess work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, will have the Bible hour each day and will conduct a round table. Those who have already heard her will never forget the message she brought. Other distinguished speakers will be there. Notify Miss Helen Gibson if you can attend.

MARY ELIZABETH INN.

It is a down-town clubhouse built and furnished and deeded to the Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to be held in trust for the exclusive use of San Francisco business girls. The building has over 100 rooms, all but 12 being single rooms. It is modern in every detail, having been planned after a most careful study of all the most prominent buildings of this character in the South and East. Among the features provided are a large assembly hall for entertainments and social gatherings, two reception rooms, a library and writing room, seven small parlors, a sitting room on each floor, and a splendidly equipped laundry. For comfort and convenience as well as economy, caftettiera service will be provided in the dining room. It is on Bush street, between Jones and Leavenworth, in an exclusive apartment neighborhood, and within walking distance of the shopping district.

Opening of the Inn.

The Mary Elizabeth Inn was opened on June 15. Miss Florida Demar was appointed head resident at the last session of the Council. Until her arrival, the Home will be directed by Miss Fausnaugh. Sixty applications were waiting, and there are a lot of fine young women. The beautiful work, and the home, with its furnishings costing more than $140,000, are a gift to Christ by Mrs. L. H. Glide, of California. She is deeding the property to the women of the Southern Methodist Church as a trust to perpetuate its service to working women.

MISS LIZZIE WILSON VISITS CHIHUAHUA.

Miss Lizzie Wilson, who has recently been to Chihuahua to attend to some business matters, writes: "The people of the Church were very glad to see me, and I was delighted to see the interest they still have in the Church work. They came with me to the train and waited until we pulled out before they left for their homes. I came away feeling that I would not change places with any crowned head the world over. I love these people as truly as they love me."

A CORRECTION.

Through an oversight the report of the Foreign Department of the Secretary's report for the Hattiesburg District was left out of the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Conference at Laurel, April 24-29. The total of finances as given is $4,125.77, when it should have been $4,721.56. This correction is made in justice to the true and faithful women in the district.

MRS. J. R. ELLIS,

Ex-Secretary Hattiesburg District.

FROM ATHENS, LA.

Our Woman's Missionary Society workers have been as busy as bees this year. Realizing that a hard pull, a long pull, and a strong pull together would bring things to pass, the Society re-organized the 1st of January with Mrs. W. R. Harvell as the new president and with the rest of the officers forming new resolutions. Our president arranged to have the meetings called in time for the corresponding secretary, who is the servant of all, to get in her reports by the first of the quarter.

The Society was divided into two circles; each circle, by the help of spelling bees and by requests made to friends, obtained the sum of $81.25 for local expenditures. A silver tea was given at the home of Mrs. L. E. Baker which proved quite a success. A delegate was sent to Rayville to represent our lovely little band of workers, who brought home notes of the proceedings of this interesting gathering and reported them to our Society.

For the present quarter the nice little sum of $37.75 has been reported as having been placed in the treasury for local expenditure. Our last regular meeting was called to order at the home of our president, Mrs. T. J. Caldwell, of Fort Worth, Texas, was a welcome visitor on this occasion. She entertained us delightfully by telling stories of the beautiful lessons she had learned from those widely experienced in the work, especially of the inspiration she had received from the missionaries from abroad.

Our church building is still incomplete and we are working hard to obtain the required amount to liquidate the debt in order to have it dedicated in the near future. The building is very much needed. A new musical instrument will have to be placed in the building, new carpets must be bought; and we have not yet finished paying for the pews lately installed.

The women of the local church here have undertaken to accomplish a large task in a short time. We ask the prayers of the good people that victory may be attained through the help of our Master.

MRS. J. HOWARD WALKER,
Corresponding Secretary.

NETTLETON CIRCUIT, N. MISS. CONFERENCE.

The work on the Nettleton charge is progressing very nicely, considering the disadvantages we have had to face this year. Our Sunday school work is very encouraging. We found two schools in operation when we came to the charge, and have succeeded in getting three others organized, which had run part of the year, and have had three to run all winter. This year we succeeded in securing the services of our very efficient Conference Field Secretary, Brother V. C. Curtis, early in the year, at which time we had a Sunday school rally for the whole charge, the result of which is the successful operation of six schools, and the maturing of plans for three Children's Day services. We have as yet added but a few names to our church roll; our revival season has not begun yet. However, we have secured the services of some of our brethren of experience and success to assist us in our meetings, which will begin in a short while. Our loss from death and otherwise has been exceedingly small, considering our large list of members. We have made some improvement in a material way, such as repairing property, securing one new organ, etc. Our district conference at Prairie chapel was quite a success. Our much-loved presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Bell, presided with much dignity and ease, giving complete satisfaction to all present. Bishop Murray's presence and sermon at the close of the session was quite a treat for us all. The work of the district is moving on very smoothly. The preachers seem to be in fine spirits and diligently pursuing their "loved employ." We faced the greatest trial of our life a few weeks ago when Mrs. Burns had her break-down and it became necessary to submit to an operation for appendicitis and other troubles. The work was successfully done by Dr. O. S. McCown at the Lucy Brinkley Hospital in Memphis. Her convalescence has been very rapid, considering the extensiveness of the operation. Her physician says that she is making satisfactory progress toward recovery and that she will soon be able to come home. Wishing for you and the Advocate readers a successful year, I am fraternally,

M. A. BURNS, P. C.

COCA COLA A NATURAL FOOD PRODUCT.

Every ingredient of Coca Cola is found in Nature. It contains no concocted chemicals or injurious drugs. These facts have been established beyond all doubt by the concurrent analyses of the leading chemists of America and also by the Courts. The water, the sugar, the fruit flavors, and the caffeine, of which Coca Cola is composed, all come direct from Nature's laboratory.

But Coca Cola is more than a simple food product, for food merely nourishes, whereas Coca Cola not only nourishes but, by virtue of its caffeine, refreshes the entire system. A glass of sweetened water or lemonade is quite as nourishing as a glass of Coca-Cola, but it is by no means as refreshing. Caffeine is the refreshing principle of coffee, tea, chocolate, cocoa and mate and is the only beneficial ingredient of the beverages prepared from them.

Coca Cola belongs to the same class of food products as tea and coffee, viz. the caffeine beverages. Though they differ in flavor they are similar in effect for caffeine is their common and only active principle. It is the caffeine that relieves fatigue and refreshes mind and body, not by artificial stimulation, but by a natural process analogous to that produced by the xanthin of the human body. Xanthin is a normal ingredient of the blood and flesh of all animals (including man) and is a refreshing principle of meat extracts, such as beef tea. Its action is similar to that of caffeine: in fact when caffeine enters the body it becomes a xanthin. The caffeine beverages, therefore, have their counterpart in the normal human body, in the form of xanthin, and hence scientists have classed them as "natural" stimulants in contradistinction to the "artificial" stimulants such as alcohol, nitroglycerine, strychnine, etc.

If you would like to know more about Coca Cola and the qualities which make it the ideal beverage write for free literature containing the expert opinions of the leading scientific authorities of America and Europe. Address the Advertising Managers of this paper, Messrs. Jacobs & Company, Clinton, S. C.

Sunday School

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

There is a real revelation in the following figures: In a certain small town there are 454 inhabitants, 664 of them belong to the Sunday school, and 541 were present on a recent Sabbath. The superintendent, who gave these figures, is a plain, common sense, Christian business man, who says that a good, winning Sunday school is the greatest known force for good in the small town and country.

The "expulsive conscience" is a term whose real meaning should get well into our hearts and minds. Quite often—all too often—this "expulsive" qualification is omitted even from the regulation, orthodox Christian conscience, this to the possessor's eternal personal loss.

Rev. W. S. Selman has arranged for a Sunday school rally for the entire Lamar charge at the Early Grove Church, July 14 and 15. His program is a good one, and his plans and enthusiasm are surely bringing increasingly beneficial results along all Sunday school lines.

Miss Elie Willingham's Morris Class, and the Gleaners, taught by Judge Lamb, at Eupora, held their joint annual picnic a few days since. The Men's Class is the prime mover in nearly all social, moral, and religious reforms in the town of Eupora and thereabout.

A REVIVAL AT LOGANSPOUT, LA.

We have just closed our meeting at Logansport. In many respects we had a great meeting, though there were many hindrances. The greatest drawback was the indifference on the part of some of our Church members. There was also some sickness among our people. However, the meeting was a great success. There were 54 who professed Christ, and 23 made application for membership in our Church.

17 by baptism, and the others by vows. Seventeen gave their names as desiring to become members of the Baptist Church, and 5 for membership in the Church of the Disciples. Dr. A. C. Holder did the preaching and it goes without saying that it was well done. This is the third time I have had Dr. Holder with me since I have been in the pastorate. I very much like his way of doing the work, and I am sure any pastor would do well to secure his services for a meeting. One very commendable thing about Dr. Holder is that he stands squarely by the pastor. He begins a meeting at Malakoff, Tex., next Sunday and will be there for three Sundays. Owing to a delay in the mail, he missed an engagement to hold a camp meeting following his Malakoff date. And I understand has a few weeks open. He can be reached by a letter at Malakoff, Texas. Best wishes to the Advocate, Editor and the many readers of our paper.

OUR DUTY.

The great world's heart is aching, aching fiercely in the night,
And God alone can heal it, and God alone give light;
And the men to bear that message, and to speak
the living word,
Are you and I, my brothers, and the millions that have heard.

Can we close our eyes to duty? Can we fold our hands at ease,
While the gates of night stand open to the pathways of the seas?
Can we shut up our compassions? Can we leave one prayer unsaid,
Till the lands which hell has blasted have been quickened from the dead?

We grovel among trifles and our spirits fret and toss,
While above us burns the vision of the Christ upon the Cross;
And the blood of God is streaming from His broken hands and side,
And the lips of God are saying, "Tell My brothers I have died."

O Voice of God, we hear Thee above the shocks of time,
Thine echoes roll around us, and the message is sublime;
No power of man shall thwart us, no stronghold shall dismay,
When God commands obedience and love has led the way.

—Frederick George Scott.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

Every statement in the New Testament of the purpose and mission of the Church indicates that the great end for which it was organized, the reason of its being as a body, is the effective carrying of the gospel to all the world. This is sufficiently evident from the deliberate and repeated commands uttered by Jesus during the last days of his life: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" "Ye shall be witnesses unto me unto the uttermost parts of the earth," etc. If this be true, the one great work of the Church is the work of missions in its broadest sense. There has been a constant tendency in the history of the Church to forget the primacy of this purpose and to spend its chief thought and energy in building up its own power and prestige to the neglect of the extension of the borders of the Kingdom. Some of the saddest chapters in the history of the Christian centuries, chapters of corruption and moral decline, have been recorded in periods marked by the decay of the missionary spirit.

It is worth while to remind ourselves often of the fact that any Church or congregation which permits itself to become engrossed with local needs and neglects the world-wide field ceases to be fully Christian; and however it may seem to succeed in material or numerical increase, it falls as a Church of Jesus Christ.

It is well in this connection to remember that those inspiring words of the Master, with which we are accustomed to cheer ourselves, "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," were designedly spoken in direct connection with the command, "Go ye therefore and disciple all nations." If we are not in any adequate way attempting to disciple all nations, to carry out his definite purpose and command—how dare we expect his living presence in our small efforts at local extension? At the last session of the Louisiana Conference a net loss in membership was reported. Happily the reported loss was in a large part due to an error in the figures; yet the fact that we did not make gain enough to offset the pruning away of dead timber is a sad spectacle, and we may well look for a partial explanation in the pitiful failure of our missionary interest. When our zeal for the evangelization of the whole world was expressed in a contribution of 33 cents a member for missions at home and abroad, what right had we to count on the vitalizing presence of Him whose touch would mean large increase through the adding to the Church daily of such as are being saved?

One of the subtlest temptations that appeals to us in Louisiana, because of its plausibility, is the plea that we labor in missionary territory and cannot expect large contributions for outside work. But as surely as we yield to it and allow ourselves to be excused from the investment in world-wide evangelization, we will lose the spiritual vitality that is essential to success in our own local field. Louisiana needs the missionary zeal that would be indicated, though not exhausted, by liberal contributions to the world-wide extension of the Kingdom.

HOW WE ARE MEETING OUR OBLIGATIONS.

A study of the statistics found in the minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Conference reveals some facts that are more interesting than gratifying; for they show how, as a Conference, we are meeting our obligations to those great causes, missionary and benevolent, which demand the support of the Church. These claims, which are assessed upon a basis as fair perhaps as can be devised, namely, the double ratio of membership and pastoral support, represent the minimum need of the general work of the Church and of the local necessities of our own territory. For instance, the Board of Missions is confronted every year with applications for help of unquestioned worthiness and need, amounting to at least 25 per cent more than the funds in sight. Similar conditions no doubt face the Church Extension Board, while our educational enterprises are famishing for funds and the total assessment will not meet their needs. The same thing is true of the General Boards, which are dependent upon specials outside the assessments for any advance in their work. This minimum obligation to all the missionary and benevolent work of the Church, for all causes outside the support of the local church, amounts to about $1.71 per capita in the Louisiana Conference. If we consider this demand in comparison with the expenditure of our people in city and country for personal pleasure or indulgence, it seems certainly moderate enough. If we compare it with the actual record of some other Churches it is not expressive of any very high standard of giving. The United Presbyterian Church, for instance, actually pays $3.31 per capita for FOREIGN MISSIONS ALONE. The Southern Presbyterian Church, working side by side with us, in the same territory, pays about $1.80 per capita for foreign missions alone. So that we ought to be ashamed to complain of a total assessment of $1.71 per capita for all benevolent and missionary causes, or to fail to pay it in full. But how are we meeting this moderate demand? As a Conference, we are paying for all these causes, including the support of our orphanage, about $1.07 a member, or about 62½ per cent of our recognized obligation. Are we willing to let this record stand in the future, and allow Louisiana Methodism to appear as having gone into voluntary bankruptcy and settled its liabilities at 62½ cents on the dollar?

Perhaps a comparison of districts and charges as to the payment of these claims may help us to realize our status a little more particularly and personally. To this end an estimate has been made of the per cent of assessment paid in each district, and a classification has been made of charges according to their proportion of assessment paid. In both these estimates, the proportion has been based upon all the assessments except that for the support of the orphanage, which by reason of its special appeal to the sympathies of our people and the special opportunity given to it through the setting apart of two special days in its interest, does not so accurately represent our genuine missionary interest, and in many instances is paid in full or overpaid, when the other assessments are very much behind. Leaving this sacred claim then out of the consideration, and rejoicing that at least one assessment is paid in full by the Conference, the districts of our Conference have paid as follows on all the other claims assessed against them:

Shreveport District .....	93 per cent
New Orleans District .....	86 per cent
Lafayette District .....	54 per cent
Ruston District .....	54 per cent
Alexandria District .....	47 per cent
Baton Rouge District .....	35 per cent
Monroe District .....	34 per cent

On this estimate, leaving out the orphanage, the Conference average was about 52 per cent.

The following system of classification of charges has been prepared to show the comparative standing of charges. A stands for 100 per cent, B for 90 to 100, C for 80 to 90, D for 70 to 80, E for 60 to 70, F for 50 to 60, G for 40 to 50, H for 30 to 40, I for 20 to 30, J for 10 to 20, K for under 10, and Z for failure to report any payment. On this basis, the charges of the Conference are classified as follows:

A Class—First Church (Shreveport), Bayou Lachute, Leesville, Mansfield, Grand Cane, Lafayette, Crowley, Morgan City, Bogalusa, Algiers, Carrollton, First Church, Felicity, Louisiana Ave., Rayne Memorial, Second Church, Mary Werlein

this is incomprehensible. That it is the exception instead of the rule, argues that we are yet far from being a missionary Church.

5. A worthy objective. It need not be said that the assessment alone is not a worthy objective. The church that aims no higher than that has not gone far and will not. The entire assessment as a minimum in every church should be our base line. But we must lead our people beyond that, or the cause will languish. If no church paid more than its assessment we could not maintain our missionaries, much less make any advance. It is easy to interest a Sunday school, an adult class, an Epworth League, or a congregation, in some specific object. In this way they will give double what they will by giving indefinitely. We are prepared to assign special objects requiring from $25 per year up to thousands, and assist in raising it by furnishing interesting information from time to time.

The Rank and File.

To come back to the beginning, we cannot rest, we cannot be guiltless, so long as nine-tenths of our people are only half awake to the world's need and our Lord's will. We must ask again with all the poignant emphasis of grief and disappointment "Where are the nine?" Then we must unite to find and enlist them. So long as only one-third of our people are even partially awake we cannot be satisfied, or if we can, it is our shame. It should be our grim determination during this quadrennium to rally the whole Church. We should be stung to earnestness and action by the humiliating knowledge that almost twenty centuries after the death of our Lord two-thirds of the world does not know him and two-thirds of our Southern Methodists do not seem to care. We should be urged on by the solemn fact that the last command of our risen Lord is being ignored by two-thirds of his people. We should be stirred to the depths by the immeasurable opportunity and pathetic appeal of millions who are waking to their needs and crying, "Come over and help us!"

EVANGELIZING AMONG THE FRENCH.

By Rev. Martin Hebert.

The field for French Mission work, if we were prepared to cope with the entire situation, would be found in the lower half of the State of Louisiana and extending from the Sabine to beyond the Mississippi River. Something over a quarter of a million of French speaking people who are under Roman Catholic influence live within these bounds, and while no part of the nation has been more richly endowed in the way of natural resources than South Louisiana, it is this section chiefly that gives Louisiana the regrettable place that it holds among the States of the Union in the scale of illiteracy percentage.

With our present French Mission force we are just touching this needy territory in high places. We have one man with his assistants, reaching parts of the parishes of Terrebonne and Lafourche; another one who touches a portion of St. Martin and Iberia, and another one who has worked both in St. Landry and Evangeline, and I have appointments in St. Landry, Acadia, and Vermillion.

Aside from our strictly French work, we have scattered through this territory at various points some good strong Protestant churches; but there are large sections, and I think one or two entire parishes, where we have no missionary operations at all.

With the exception of two years, I have spent my entire ministerial life in the French Mission. For several years we could afford but one missionary; now, we have six workers who are getting at least a part of their support from the Board of Missions. The fact that we have succeeded in a measure in getting the cause of the French Mission upon the hearts of the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, in itself largely compensates for every conflict and struggle through which we have gone.

During the last five years I have organized seven churches and erected four church buildings. During last year I gave two Sundays of my time to pioneer and evangelistic work. I organized two churches last year, and built one. This year I have had three Sundays that I devoted to regular work, and I have been devoting one Sunday to evangelistic work—assisting some of the brethren who had French people within the bounds of their charge, and together with those I have received on my own work, I have already taken 90 members into the Church.

At Port Barre, where we have a growing congregation and a very inviting field, we are sorely in need of a church building. We have recently had donated to us two choice lots in the growing town of Kaplan and have the promise of about $500 for a church building there. It is hard to convince some of these French people that we have a church in a community unless we have a building.

If the Church Extension Board could give us $300 for Kaplan, and about $400 for Port Barre, it would enable us to erect suitable houses of worship, and would in a large measure assure the success of our work.

There is certainly no mission field that is more needy and whose people are more accessible than this French section of Louisiana. We could at least double our force and yet not reach every point where we have an open door and a Macedonian call. Let us pray that God may soon give us both the men and the money to cover this needy territory.

THE FRENCH MISSION SPECIAL.

At the last session of the Louisiana Conference the Board of Missions found itself face to face with a difficult problem. The demands for missionary appropriations, including about $1000 to meet the providential openings among the French speaking people of the State called for $1000 more than the Board had available for appropriations. It was impossible to think of retrenchment, and after conferring with the cabinet the Board instructed the Conference Secretary to raise a Conference special of that amount, to be known as the "French Mission Special," and to be used on the appropriation for this year.

Up to date, the Secretary, with the assistance of the District Secretaries, and other earnest helpers has secured the following amounts by districts in pledges, due by Conference time:

Lafayette District .....	$317
Monroe District .....	131
Baton Rouge District .....	75
Shreveport District .....	10
Ruston District .....	10

Total .....

It will be observed that several districts have not yet been effectively reached. The District Secretary for the New Orleans District is planning for a contribution from that District, and others will be reached through the district conferences. If each district will do its share, the amount can easily be raised without detriment to the regular assessments.

W. WINANS DRAKE,

Conference Secretary.

COMPARATIVE RECEIPTS OF THE GENERAL BOARD OF MISSIONS.

By Dr. W. W. Pinson.

Receipts on assessments for first six months of 1913 .....	$87,955.00
Receipts on assessments for first six months of 1914 .....	87,407.00
Decrease .....	$548.00
Income from specials for first six months of 1914 .....	$80,571.00
Income from specials for first six months of 1913 .....	34,046.00
Increase .....	$46,525.00
Total income, including annuities, bequests, etc., 1914 .....	$188,829.00
Total income, including annuities, bequests, etc., 1913 .....	143,647.00
This shows a net increase for 1914 of..	$45,182.00

The encouraging feature of this comparison is in the fact that the income in specials shows an increase of 136 per cent over that of the same period for last year. The slightly discouraging feature is the decrease in the income on assessment. Though small, this would indicate the possibility of a decrease in income from this source at the end of the year. It is to be hoped that this indication will not hold good. Surely with such a large increase in the income from specials, there should also be an increased income on assessment—otherwise we should conclude that while a small proportion of the Church is growing in interest and liberality towards missions, a very much larger proportion is measuring their giving by the assessment, and instead of making progress are going backward. We dare not believe this is true. These figures would indicate the importance of putting strong emphasis on the payment of the assessment in full.

The significance of the unusual increase in the net income of the Board this first six months is not only encouraging as a prophecy of the final outcome for the year, but it also results in the saving in interest, which is by no means inconsiderable. If this increase is continued throughout the year it will make this the banner year.

The Income Bureau is within the power of the law to make every citizen pay income tax within the United States. There are 135,000 people who are taxpayers of the 48 states under a government that makes about 27 people in the square mile of California state. There are enough white people alone within the above mentioned section of Kansas to furnish the fuel for the use of 21,000 of the United work with as many people as there are in the use of 21,000 now. There are 15,000 white people in this section and I am sure that there are no more than 100,000 within the City of New Orleans. There are not as many people as there are in New Mexico.

It is all the European American countries in the above section that are not more than 100 years Europeanized having a history of 2,000 yrs. It was not just a mere Europeanization of any other nation controlled by Europeanism.

The Louisiana Conference was one of the best five years ago last September. It was the first time a female was in regular work in any of the sister churches since 1888. Brother Bevier had organized a society of "Lutheran Ladies League" meeting here, which was all the work that was under discussion then by arrival. Now we have five societies, a local preacher and the assistant pastor (French) all having been introduced and put in work within the past five years since Brother John Martin was the local preacher. We have had an average of 20 attendees per year since coming in the fall and today we have 22 men and 4 ladies who are working every Sunday for the advancement of the Kingdom. We are teaching nine different points and hold some kind of a service in each of them every Sunday excepting the first.

We are doing nothing in the neighborhood of Tahlequah, Broken Bow, Lawton, Clinton and Del ville towns ranging from 500 to 1000 in population and occupying an Episcopal Church in the first two places mentioned and a Presbyterian Church in the second place mentioned. There is no Protestant work of any kind just at the time.

The Women's Auxiliary Society have been and are doing a great work in furnishing us with Blue Ice & ice-cream and also Ice Cream Vanas and a lot more it is more but this is not good thing for us and the people it is by far the best life I ever had and willing to live with seemingly unnecessary difficulties are needed in fact it some of the most happy times.

We must have a church building in Iowa. It is the center from which all the work radiates from here and we are still in a corner stall because we have no funds with which to build and the people here in the ground have no surplus over the amount we get from the Board of Missions with about $25 per year in interest on loan the work going.

This whole issue of the American world is taken up with longer realized and longer stated social experiences of my great leaders and myself as we have struggled under the load of trying to fill crying needs and a universal pathetic calls for help for the souls, minds and bodies of this needy people.

A METHOD TO TEST BLOTTED

One of the greatest needs of any church in America is the collection of funds for missionary and benevolent causes. It is a business-like and efficient plan of collection. Such a plan has been recommended and endorsed by the great councils.

The separate trial of the prisoners was successful and showed progress and zeal and plans for the future.

The Presiding Elder took different issues for reports from pastors along certain lines and in this way the varied interests of the Church were captured and emphasized such as missionary programs, Sunday schools, financial systems, increase in membership, etc.

Some of the features of the conference were spiritual and interesting, especially when Rev. J. H. Chapman read for the committee the report on Social and Moral Reform. Dennistown

HAS EVERY PERSON A RIGHT TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN?

By J. A. Stockwell.

This may sound like a strange question to those in the homeland who have never been out of hearing of the church bells and who have had the privilege of attending church services whenever they felt inclined to do so; but here in Central Africa, where there are thousands around us who know nothing of Christ, where degradation is beyond the power of pen to describe, it is very real, and one that the missionaries are frequently called upon to face.

If it were only those who do not express a desire to hear the Word who were denied the opportunity it would not seem so bad, although that would not be any excuse for not giving it to them. But when, as is now the case, missionaries are constantly besieged with requests for teachers, and the force on the field is so small that it is impossible to supply them, then it seems like a very real crime on the part of those in more favored lands, who received the gospel 2000 years ago, and with it the command to GO and teach ALL nations, not to strengthen our forces.

I believe, however, that if the facts as they exist in Africa could be brought home to the Churches in America, that if they could be made to realize that the door of opportunity not only stands wide open, but that the people are actually begging for teachers which it is impossible to give them, and that millions are now in darkness, not by reason of their own neglect, but because Christian people have not obeyed the Great Commission, that they would rise up and put an end to conditions under which it can be truly said that the people are asking in vain for the privilege of becoming Christians.

We have only been in this place a short time, having arrived only a little over two months ago, but in this little while we have had the same experience that other missionaries have told us of, i. e., messengers coming to ask for teachers and having to be turned away because of lack of sufficient force. The latest of these was on the 7th of this month, when a messenger arrived from Kamimbya, chief of Chingapoke, a large village ten days' journey to the north of here, who, having heard of the missionaries at Wembo Niama, sent one of his head men to ask if we could not come and establish a mission in his village also. The look on his face when we told him that we could not do so made me think of the words of the Psalmist, "No man careth for my soul."

Of course we cannot know what the motive may be behind these requests, but three things are certain, namely, the natives invite us to come, God commands us to go, and yet millions are still in darkness.

Now when we stand before the judgment seat of God, who is going to bear the responsibility for the idolatry of these poor degraded heathen? But "Oh," I hear a multitude of voices say, "we cannot all go to the foreign field, and I do not feel any 'call.'" And so they swallow the bait, hook, line and all, not perceiving the cloven hoof of him who cast it to them. For search the Scriptures as you may, you will find no other "call" or authority for going to the mission field than the command of Christ to GO.

Now I am not begging for people to come to Africa. I am not even asking them to do so. I would just call attention to three facts: that wonderful results follow the preaching of the Word, that the way is wide open to millions who have never heard of Christ, and last, but by no means least, that the omnipotent God gave the command to GO, and he did not say anything about any other kind of a "call."

Wembo, Niama, Africa, April 19, 1914.

A SIGNIFICANT CONFERENCE ON CO-OPERATION IN MEXICO.

By R. B. Eleazer.

At the meeting of Mission Board Secretaries interested in work in Mexico held in New York in January, preliminary steps were taken looking to a program of union and co-operation of the various boards in that field. At a subsequent meeting held in Cincinnati June 30-July 1, such a program was considered in detail and steps were taken, which if approved by the several boards interested, will effect a revolution in missionary work in Mexico and will mark the beginning of a new epoch in the line of unity and co-operation.

The Cincinnati Conference was made up of officers and missionaries representing seven of the eleven American missionary organizations at work in Mexico, about sixty members in all, of whom more than one-third were missionaries, mostly men and women of long service and wide experience. Nothing could exceed the open-mindedness and zeal for the common cause with which the members threw themselves into the difficult task before them. A spirit of absolute unity prevailed. There were no discordant notes. Genuine sacrifice and self-abnegation marked the course of many. Denominational interest and personal preferences were left out of consideration. To draw together, to obviate all duplication of effort, to eliminate competition, to occupy more adequately the whole field, these were the ends to which all set themselves with singleness of purpose. Underlying all was the definite recognition of the fact that the gospel is one gospel and that this one gospel is presented by all.

The most conspicuous result of the Conference was the agreement reached as to the readjustment of territorial lines. During the forty years of missionary occupation of Mexico these lines have become criss-crossed in every direction. Some parts of the country have been occupied by nearly all the leading denominations, while other sections are almost wholly destitute. It seemed to the members of the Conference that a providential moment had come for remedying this condition. For the time being the work is paralyzed, as a result of civil war. Church operations are at a standstill and church organizations have been reduced to a plastic state. It is a good time to rub out old lines and lay down new ones. It was felt that it would be nothing short of sinful to fail to utilize to the fullest advantage this opportunity to remake the missionary map of Mexico in the interest of better occupation and more effective work. This the Conference proceeded to do.

Zones of responsibility were laid off and assigned to the several boards. Missionaries without a word of complaint were plucked up from the environments of a life-time and transferred to new and distant fields. Officers of boards gladly accepted the risk of sacrificing valuable properties, of disappointing and perhaps wounding their constituency at home and on the field, and of leaving well developed enterprises to pioneer in new and hard places.

Tentative plans were drawn up looking to co-operation of the several denominations in the matter of publication, high schools and colleges, theological education, medical work, and other lines of effort in which all are equally interested.

As a matter of course, the agreements of this Conference are only in the nature of recommendations and must go for confirmation or rejection to the several boards. It seems clear, however, that the objects sought to be attained will surely meet with general commendation. These may be really reduced to one—the speedier and more effective evangelization of Mexico. It seemed clear that each church should confine its efforts to a smaller area and should be held primarily responsible for that area, the other denominations keeping out as far as possible.

Our own Church was represented by Bishop Lambuth, who was made permanent chairman of the Conference, Dr. Ed. F. Cock, Miss Belle Bennett, Miss Mabel Head, Miss M. L. Gibson, Dr. G. B. Winton, Rev. F. S. Onderdonk, Rev. N. E. Joyner, Miss Lella Roberts, Miss Esther Case, Dr. John M. Moore, and Miss N. E. Holding. It is needless to say that our representatives entered heartily into the spirit and purpose of the Conference. The territorial assignment made to our Church involves some radical changes, mainly that of concentrating our work on a smaller area, thus making it possible for us to occupy the field more adequately and cultivate it more intensively. The plans suggested must, of course, be presented to the Board for approval.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

"And Him evermore I behold
Walking in Galilee,
Through the corn-field's waving gold,
In hamlet, in wood, and in wold,
By the shores of the Beautiful Sea.
He touches the sightless eyes;
Before Him the demons flee;
To the dead he saith: "Arise!"
To the living: "Follow me!"
And that voice still soundeth on
From the centuries that are gone,
To the centuries that shall be."

ORGANIZING FOR SERVICE.

The purpose of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is to put the laymen to work for the Kingdom of God.

It is impossible to overstate the opportunity for "work" and the demand for workers in the effort to lead men to Christ, and so "cure all the ills that flesh is heir to." The Church as the instrument of God for the accomplishment of His purpose moves along at a snail's pace when she might go forward with a mighty rush as a victorious army. This is because we do not do our Lord's work. Christ laid strong emphasis upon the whiteness of the fields and the scarcity of laborers. Only now and then do we find one working for the Lord.

The great body of the Church is careless and indifferent because they do not know. "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." We are like the servant of the prophet—our eyes must be opened before we can see the vision. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge," and in order to accomplish its purpose the Laymen's Missionary Movement is launching a campaign of education.

To this end pamphlets and leaflets are supplied free to those who will ask for them, the idea being that every member of the Church from the youngest to the oldest should get and read these pamphlets and become informed of the wonderful work of the Church and of the tremendous need for men and for money. But if the people know nothing about this, how are they going to get the literature? How can they be expected to do something they have never heard of? They can't be, and here is where the organization of this movement comes in.

"The children of this world are wiser than the children of light." The business world is so organized that every person is visited for purposes of buying and selling goods. The political world is so organized that before an election every voter is called upon, not once but possibly several times. Not one escapes. On the contrary, sometimes the dead are voted. The merchant and the politician go after the people to further their own ends, and they do this by the most efficient organization. Organization is the keynote of their success. Some one has said that the difference between a Mob and an Army is Organization. In the late Balkan war the Turkish Army lost because of a lack of organization. Their soldiers were sent out to fight without supply trains; they had no food, and when wounded, had no hospital corps to take care of them. The natural result followed. In Mexico, Villa is carrying everything before him because he has an organization such as no Mexican army has ever known before. He sees that his army has not only food, ammunition and medicines, but even water is carried by the train-load over that desert country. For this reason, his enemies can not stand before his fresh and vigorous army.

If the rank and file of the Church are to become workers, it will have to be done through some such an organization as the foregoing. Our Louisiana Conference Laymen's Movement outlined the following plan of organization and work for this year:

- 1st. A Church Leader for every Church.
- 2nd. A Missionary Committee for every Church.
- 3rd. An Every-member Canvass in every Church.
- 4th. The Duplex Envelope System for every Church.

5th. Distribution of literature every month to every member of every Church.

6th. A District Leader for every district.

7th. Lay delegates who will attend the Annual Conference.

8th. A great laymen's rally during the Annual Conference at Shreveport.

9th. At least one laymen from every charge present at the Conference rally.

Other things will be taken up another year.

The Quarterly Conference elects the church leaders; the Church Conference elects the missionary committee, and the missionary committee makes the canvass and distributes the literature monthly. Every member of the Church must be called upon and given the opportunity to pay his tithes to the Lord. For if they do not pay, they will be lost, and their blood will be upon their leaders if the latter do not lay it upon them. All this has been made easy if we follow the plans of the Movement. Some of our time is all that we need offer, and surely the growth of our Kingdom is worthy of some small sacrifice.

And yet it seems impossible to secure even the completed organization this year, let alone the work. One presiding elder writes that his preachers refuse to nominate church leaders. "For," they say, "they will not do anything." To those preachers, we say, "Give us the best men you have for church leaders and let us try our best with them."

The law of the Church contemplates that every church of a circuit shall have a leader and a committee, and not simply one of each for every circuit or station, and yet only one district in the State has complied with that part of the law. Two or three other districts have provided leaders for all charges, and other districts for a few stations and circuits; but, as said before, only one district has provided a leader for every church of every circuit and one for every station.

Many of our preachers do not believe in this Laymen's Missionary Movement. They have intimated the same to the writer. Again, in writing up the proceedings of the various district conferences, the secretaries report the smallest affairs relating to the churches or to the preachers, but they do not even state whether a district lay leader was elected or not. That office is not of sufficient importance in the minds of these beloved secretaries to even warrant a notice.

Brethren, please do not think I am complaining. I am simply trying to call attention to a condition with the hope that publicity will do its work. Let us thoroughly organize for the service of our Lord.

Let all the presiding elders and pastors of the Louisiana Conference see that church leaders and missionary committees are elected for every church. On circuits there should be a leader and a committee for every church of the circuit, not simply one of each for the circuit. Let them send the name and address of each leader to the district leader of the district and to the Conference lay leader.

W. S. HOLMES,

Conference Lay Leader, Louisiana Conference.

THE MISSIONARY POLICY FOR METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

During the last quadrennium there was developed by the Sunday School and Missionary Boards of our Church a missionary policy for Sunday schools that took definite form at the recent General Conference in the following legislation, to be incorporated into the new Discipline in the chapter under Sunday schools:

"Section 3.

"6. Let every Sunday school be regarded as a missionary society, and let the superintendent, after counsel with the pastor, appoint annually a missionary committee to have charge of all the missionary activities of the school;...let one Sunday in the month, preferably the last, be observed as Missionary Day in the Sunday school, and let the entire missionary offering of this day, together with all other missionary offerings, regular and special, made in the Sunday school, be a separate fund and designated 'Missionary Offerings in the Sunday school;' let it be sent through the Conference treasurer, handled and forwarded by him, as a separate fund to the Board of Missions for use in its general work;...provided that an amount equal to 10 per cent of the aggregate of all offerings made in the Sunday school for missions shall be turned over by the Board of Missions to the General Sunday School Board to be administered by that Board for Sunday school work at home and abroad. It is urged that as far as possible the missionary offering in the Sunday school go as a free will offering and not be used to meet the missionary assessment on the congregation; but if any church, in order to pay its missionary assessment, finds it necessary to use the missionary offering of the Sunday school, the amount so used shall still be kept separate and forwarded by the Conference treasurer as a Sunday school item to the General Board of Missions, and in this case designated 'Sunday school missionary offering on assessment.'

"Section 4.

"It shall be the duty of the preacher in charge to see that a missionary committee is appointed in each Sunday school, that one Sunday in each month is observed as missionary day, and that an offering for missions is taken on that day, and to forward all missionary offerings made in the Sunday school to the Conference treasurer in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph —.

"Section 5.

"1. It shall be the duty of the presiding elder to urge . . . that every Sunday school in his district be organized for missions by appointing a missionary committee and observing missionary day."

Summed up this policy provides for a missionary committee, a missionary day, and a missionary offering.

1. The committee should be composed of those members of the school who have missionary spirit and interest enough to acquaint themselves with the missionary situation, either in regular Mission Study Classes under capable leaders or by the private reading of the Missionary Voice and such other books (Trull's "Missionary Methods for Sunday School Workers" being almost indispensable) and periodicals as will give them the latest facts from the mission fields; and who will give ample time to the preparation of the program for missionary day, see that the Sunday school auditorium is decorated with missionary mottoes, charts, and maps, and that the best missionary books are read by the members of the school as individuals or are taught as supplementary courses in the regular classes, and see that the collections are taken on missionary Sunday and forwarded to the Conference treasurer as directed by the Discipline.

2. On missionary Sunday a program of about fifteen minutes should be rendered either at the opening or closing of the school, using Scripture, recitations, songs, curios, statistics, etc., as per the various helps furnished by the educational department of the Board of Missions.

3. The offering should be taken for the definite purpose of missions, and not simply the appro-

BOBBY'S PRAYER: "THE OTHER BOY."

Dear Father, there's the other boy to-night,
Who's praying to a god that's made of wood.
He asks it to take care of him till light,
And love him—but it won't do any good.

He is so far I cannot make him hear;
I'd call to him and tell him, if I could,
That you'll take care of him, that you are near
And love him—for his god is made of wood.

I know he'd ask you, if he only knew;
I know he'd love to know you if he could.
Dear God, take care of him, and love him too—
The other boy, whose god is made of wood.

—Margarita Haywood, in Everyland.

MISSIONARY POCKETS.

"What are you going to do with my coat, mamma?" asked Robert, watching his mother as she laid out a pile of little garments.

"It is for the missionary box, dear," said Mrs. Vincent. "It is too small for you and, being almost new, will fit some smaller boy nicely. My boy is getting so big he hardly has a chance to wear out anything."

"Please wait a minute, mamma. There are some things in the pockets I want."

"And, mamma, if you are going to send my little white apron, there are some things in the pockets that I want," said Amy, putting aside her doll to hurry to the pile of garments. "I couldn't think of giving away this lovely blue hair-ribbon."

"And my jackknife, and three of my best marbles are in the pockets of these trousers. Mamma, would you have given these clothes without examining them?" he asked, turning over everything in the heap, as he looked through other clothes for treasures.

"You have so many playthings, Robert, that I thought you wouldn't miss a few of them. If I were a little boy way off in a lonely little home out West, I think I should like to find a few pretty things in the pockets of the clothes that come in the missionary box; don't you?"

"Missionary boys are different," muttered Robert; "they don't expect playthings."

"No, I suppose not," said his mother; "but do you not think they would enjoy them?"

"Maybe they would, but I can't spare these."

Mrs. Vincent went off to the meeting with the little clothes and her own gifts, but not until every pocket had been searched. Robert and Amy carried the treasures to the playroom, and put them in their proper places, but somehow neither was happy. They tried playing, but little Bobby wanted to play, too, and the game broke up in a quarrel. Then they both wished it was a school day, so there would be something going on.

Finally they sat down on the floor to look at the big illustrated Bible which was one of their treasures, and baby Bobby came up behind them so he could see, too. It was strange that the first picture they turned to should be that of Christ teaching his disciples, and that the words underneath it read: "Freely ye have received, freely give."

"I'm going down to Mrs. Upton's with some of my things from those pockets," said Robert, suddenly. "It isn't fair that we should have so much and those other children nothing."

"That is just what I was thinking," said Amy. "Let's fill every pocket full."

When the ladies saw the children coming with their hands full of gifts, they said: "Let's not send the box to-day, but give all the children a chance to fill the pockets of their garments, too."

When that box was opened in that lonely little home out West, I wish you could have heard the squeals of delight from the four little children. The oldest was only eight and the baby three, but every one had been remembered, and the floor was covered with marbles and little toys and trinkets. They liked the clothes very much, but the pockets filled to overflowing with nice things they liked best of all.

When the letter came telling about their great joy, Amy said: "Let's always see that the missionary pockets are full instead of empty." And ever since then the boys and girls save up all the year, so there will be no pockets empty when the big box goes on its long journey.—Wide World.

YOUNG FOLKS OF THE BUSH.

Rev. James Luke.

When you think what the surroundings of West African boys and girls are, you will be surprised to hear that they are the politest little things you ever met in your life. They are taught no table manners, for they never sit at table; no school manners, for, until the missionary comes, they have no school; and no clothes manners, of course, since you cannot soil a pinafore if you have not got one on.

Yet you can go into any West African village and rarely, if ever, meet with an awkward, self-conscious, or rude, unmannerly child. Of how many home villages could this be said?

You would also be surprised if you saw the way they carry things. Having no clothes, they have no pockets; so the scholar sticks his pencil, pen, and slate pencil into his hair and carries his slate and books on top. Send a girl for a jugful or a bucketful of water, and she comes back with it safely poised on her head. I have seen a girl with a jug of water thus balanced stoop to pick up some small article from the ground, and not one drop was spilled. Big and little things—a traveler's trunk, or needle and thread—all find their place on the head.

The result is that all the young people are erect, straight, athletic-looking. They never require gymnastic exercises as a cure for stooping on rounded shoulders; no slouching among the boys and no ungainly gait among the girls are ever seen. The girls walk with the ease, the grace, the dignity of duchesses, while the boys have the springy step of athletes.

The girls do not seem to indulge in games. The boys have a game of taking prisoners, but their great form of exercise is wrestling. All their quarrels are settled in this way.

Another point is that the young folks are nearly all vegetarians; they seldom eat anything in the meat line heavier than snails, which are used to make pulpy soup. Perhaps this is why they have such sound and beautiful teeth.

Once, when traveling with a doctor, we were very hungry and entered a village and asked for food. The chief went in search of it. By and by came a wooden trencher with a few pieces of cold ham and a bit of meat. I was in an inner room changing my perspiring clothes for dry ones. I happened to look out at the doctor. He was busy. Johnnie, our cook boy, was standing behind him with a face of horror. He caught my eyes and whispered in awe the one word "ebok"—monkey! I told the doctor, but between mouthfuls he only muttered: "Monkey—or no-monkey—I don't care—I'm—too—hungry!"

Though you see few people wearing chains, and they seem happy enough, slavery is still common. One day I heard the sobbing of a girl, and, looking out, I saw her in front of a tall native, who carried on his head a few 5s. bundles of brass rods. She had a piece of fruit in each hand and had no clothing. The story was clear enough. The man had sold things, cloth or gin, to her parents. They had been unable to pay, and after a time, on being pressed, their little daughter and a few bundles of rods were offered and accepted in payment. There she was on her way to the forest, to be lost in the awful swirl of slave life in the interior.

Once a chief brought a little slave girl to my wife as a present. She wore nothing but a frightened expression and a string of beads. How proud the chief was of his present! She proved a very capable little woman indeed and learned to sew, do house work, read, write, and sum up.

The people are fond of their boys and girls, of course, but it is only when they come under the influence of Jesus that the young folks get their true place in the home.—Young Christian Worker.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS

priation made of a part of the school's funds to the missionary collection, without any educational element or the developing of the grace of missionary Christian giving.

The importance of such a policy carried out may be estimated when we consider:

1. That the purpose of the founding of the Church for the "conversion of the world" should be gotten into the thought of its members at the earliest period possible in their lives, and that beginning with the cradle roll, the Sunday school is equipped to do this as is no other organization. The Sunday school is the one indispensable educational institution of the Church, and it is a recognized fact that to get any great enterprise effectively before the world it can be done in no way so surely as to get it into the educational thought of the young; and as the temperance and other questions have thus become live and conquering issues, so may the missionary propaganda of the Church.

2. Through the Sunday school not only may all the members of the Church be impressed with the missionary idea—since practically all are at some time members of the school—but in most instances they remain in the school long enough to learn to be liberal supporters of the missionary cause and to become acquainted with all the allied facts and forces in the evangelization of the world.

3. In the Sunday school the missionary program is easier of operation than in any of the other agencies of the Church, the organization being well-nigh perfect, and the interest already established and maintained by other lines of work.

The only argument needed to establish the need of some such policy as that outlined is the fact that after more than two thousand years from the time the Church was commissioned to make disciples of all nations there are more than 300,000,000 souls living in this one generation that have never heard of the atoning death of Christ. This new era of intercessory prayer, consecrated giving to bear the message of life, and the surrender of self, all inspired by the increased knowledge of missionary needs and success, has therefore come none too soon. Our missionary policy for Sunday schools is now workable; let us work it.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

This is the second petition in the model prayer given by our Lord for use by his disciples. How profound is its significance; how comprehensive its sweep! To utter these words in a merely superficial and perfunctory manner is not truly to pray them. That can be done only by him who is doing his utmost to set up the Divine Kingdom in his own heart, and in the hearts of others, and in all the affairs of men around the whole world. This is but a re-statement of the truism that prayer to be acceptable and efficacious in the highest and fullest sense must have back of it a consecrated and devoted life.

A disciple who measures up to the Scriptural standard set for the Christian must be missionary in spirit. Otherwise he is not like Christ who gave up all, both in heaven and on earth, that he might save fallen and perishing humanity. The Master kept back nothing whatever; all that he had on high was renounced; he "emptied himself," stooped to wear our lowly human nature, and had "not where to lay his head." But he did not stop with a mere renunciation; he gave to the great work which he had volunteered to perform all his mighty powers of mind and heart and soul in a blessed ministry which finally led to the awful agony of Gethsemane and a cruel death upon the cross.

So to-day he is the greatest missionary among men who most completely devotes all that he has and is to the furtherance of the cause of human redemption and the setting up of the Kingdom of God on earth. Neither the giving of money, nor personal work alone, is enough. Both must be included; all that one can possibly do to bring the lost millions of the race to Christ should be done both at home and abroad. The lack of a missionary spirit in the Church is seen not only in the meager and discreditable giving of its members to carry the gospel to heathen lands, but also in the pitifully small number of them who are doing anything to rescue the perishing about their own doors. Hearts on fire with the love of God, and with the passion that it generates to enkindle that fire in other souls, is the true and only remedy for both of these lamentable deficiencies. As is well known, persons who are the most deeply spiritual are both the best workers and the best givers. It is difficult to develop a man who is unregenerate or is in a backslidden state into an enthusiastic supporter of Christian missions of any kind or anywhere. Our risen Lord was speaking to converted men when he used the command "to disciple the nations." We do not believe that anything would do so much to strengthen the missionary cause as a sweeping and widespread revival in the Churches of our own country and other gospel lands.

But in stressing this point, let us not be understood as depreciating to the slightest extent the importance of missionary information or of effective organization. They are immensely helpful—are, in fact, indispensably necessary if the largest results are to be achieved. The child of God needs to be shown what his duties are and led into the way of performing them. His vision should be widened and his obligations to the Heavenly Father and his fellow-men laid in their full weight upon his heart and conscience. Such a process must be used, along with the operation of the Holy Spirit in the soul, if Christians of the most majestic type who delight to lay themselves out for the extension of the Divine Kingdom, are to be developed.

Never was the call for complete consecration to this supreme work of redeeming humanity louder and more urgent than it is to-day. It cannot, of course, be said that the need for the gospel is greater now than in former decades and centuries, though it is indescribably imperative and overwhelming. But the doors of opportunity were never before so wide open or the possibilities of successful evangelization so inspiring and sublime. God is wonderfully moving upon the hearts of the people in heathen lands and they are approachable and impressible to an extent never before known. And modern inventions have brought them vastly nearer to us—have made neighbors of all the populations of the globe. The "fullness of the times" for the spread of Christianity has come, and as Dr. John R. Mott, perhaps the world's foremost missionary leader, says, "It is a decisive hour for the Christian Church; if it neglects to meet successfully the present world crisis by failing to discharge its responsibility to the whole world, it will lose its power both on the home and on the foreign fields and will be seriously hindered in its mission to the coming generations." It is a profound truth that Christians must save others to save themselves; that they must lose their lives in generous and unselfish service, if they would have them enriched and ennobled and made fit for eternal continuance in the skies.

And surely the coming of the Divine Kingdom is a thing worth praying and earnestly striving for. It will be a kingdom of righteousness. With its establishment, all injustice, oppression, and evil will cease to exist, and equity, truth, and right will everywhere be enthroned. There will be no vice, no crime, no social iniquities of any kind to blight and destroy.

It will be a kingdom of peace. The roar of the cannon will be forever hushed; proud navies will ride the seas with frowning guns no more, and drums will beat only for the marching of the soldiers of the cross. Violence of any kind will be unknown; human blood will cease to be shed; there will be no need for jails and prisons, for watchmen or police. The world of men will be one vast brotherhood and the law of love will abolish all hurtful contention and usher in a universal reign of "sweet concord."

It will be a kingdom of happiness and plenty. None will shiver in rags; none will want for bread; none will drag out existence in filth and squalor. The generous soil of earth produces enough for all, and its products will be so distributed that everyone will have a sufficiency and none will lack the things that are needful. And along with poverty, will vanish that other awful brood of sin—affliction, sorrow, and suffering. Joy will fill every heart, beam from every face, and set human lips to singing the praises of the great King upon every part of the redeemed planet.

Is it chimerical—this cherished belief that such a Kingdom is to come? Nay, not so. The prophets of old foresaw its glories and set them forth in rapturous language; its establishment was the constant theme of the great Galilean Teacher, and the Seer of Patmos saw it standing out in majestic proportions and entrancing beauty afar down the centuries. It will finally come; but it is a tremendous and startling fact that by our fidelity or unfaithfulness we may hasten or delay its gracious advent. Shall we not, then, do our whole duty and help to speed the day of our Lord's universal triumph? Despite the aggressive activity of the forces of evil, never was the future so luminous with auspicious omens as it is at this hour.

"The world is swinging toward the light,
And skies are growing clearer;
The gray of dawn is on the hills,
The golden glow grows nearer."

OUR GREATEST HOME MISSION FIELDS.

Our greatest mission fields in America to-day are in the cities, and they are constantly becoming greater because their population is steadily increasing and becoming more congested and cosmopolitan. It is in them that vice is most strongly entrenched and that the Churches are having their hardest struggles and are achieving their most meager victories. No body of Christian workers are giving a better account of themselves in our sin-cursed municipalities than those who are connected with the Salvation Army; and it may be well in this Missionary Number of the Advocate to quote the description recently given of the conditions existing in these centers of population by Commander Eva Booth, the official head of that organization, who is called "The White Angel of the Slums." During her recent visit to England, she is reported to have expressed herself in an interview with Mr. Harold Begbie, which was published in the London Daily Chronicle, as follows:

"You literally feel the sense of numbers. Wherever you go in American cities you are conscious of these millions struggling to exist. Then there is the question of climatic extremes. You have no idea what heat means till you live in American slums during a heat wave. That heat drives people mad—if not in mind, in spirit; they are maddened in spirit without losing their reason. Oh, it is dreadful, the heat, among the dense masses of the slums. And in winter, down goes the thermometer, and starving people drop dead of cold—killed, by cold, not by hunger. Then there is another great difference, the foreign element. We get in our slums over there the knife people. Do you know what I mean?—those races from Europe who carry a knife and use it in argument—lawless, passionate, violent people. This means that our slums are more dramatic than yours. In England misery is depressed. In America its blood is up. You never get one general atmosphere, even as you never get one general language. To visit a slum in America is to come into contact with the passions and vehemence of the whole world. It is extraordinarily interesting, amazingly vital, however sad and dreadful. One can not lose heart in the slums of America. It is a fight for life.

"The poverty is appalling. You ought to see the bread-lines over there; it's a sight never to be forgotten. We have emergency relief depots all over the States. How many people, do you suppose, sleep every night in what we call our Poor Men's Hotels, what you call here Salvation Army Shelters? Seventeen thousand! Every night we take care of 17,000 men who would be otherwise sleeping in bridge recesses or with their heads under carts. One of these hotels, a memorial to my dear father, holds 670 beds.

"Poverty in America is very severe. Nothing, you see, is cheap. The most common necessities of life are dear, very dear. And the immigrants pour in from every country of the world, bringing fresh penury and new destitution to swell the terrible sum of the old. Life is a struggle over there were many, many thousands of people—a frightful struggle. Then the children of the poor. Oh! how they suffer. In twelve months we played with, fed, dressed, washed, kissed, and cuddled 42,000 of these poor babes. The ghastly, ghastly suffering! We found a babe once, two or three years old, in a chicken-coop in a cellar; for nearly three weeks afterward it never uttered a sound, not one sound, not even an Ur; its food had to be thrown to it on the ground before it would eat; when any of us entered its room it would get behind things—behind a chair, a sofa, or under a table; the doctors told us its reason was fatally damaged. No! That child is now a bonnie, laughing, blue-eyed lass. The police brought to us once a child, the calves of whose legs had been gnawed by rats. Oh, it is indescribable, the misery of these famishing little children. But when you see them in our nurseries, then you say no work touches this work of saving the babes. You can't pay for the love a child wants! There's something the dollar bill can't buy, and that's devotion. My beautiful women out there are like the angels of God; they don't merely do their work, they love doing it. And the rich know this. That's why we are popular; that's why they help us."

How is Southern Methodism meeting this challenge of the cities? It must be admitted that she is doing it very poorly. In New Orleans, for instance, how little is being accomplished in comparison with what needs to be done! And we dare say it is much the same way in St. Louis, in Baltimore, in San Francisco, and in many other places. We covet for our Church a larger share in this urgently needed work, than which, we feel sure, none more highly pleases our Lord. We should like to see our representatives stand abreast of those of the Salvation Army on the firing line, where the shots of Satan's batteries are the hottest and where humanity is sunk deepest in the depths of sin and degradation. Shall we not push our columns to these outposts of the battle and join the followers of General Booth in proclaiming the good old Methodist doctrine, which they say is their slogan, that "the worst of the worst, the lowest of the low, may be changed absolutely and for eternity, in the twinkling of an eye?"

A WORK FOR ALL.

In the first years of the Christian Church the laymen recognized it to be as much their duty, as it was that of the preachers, to lead souls to Christ. To get back to that way of doing things is the "Laymen's Movement" that is most urgently needed. God never intended that ministers should have a monopoly of the glorious work of bringing people into the Kingdom. It is his will that all his followers should have a part in this highest and noblest form of service and win crowns set with many stars.

HIT THE MARK.

Vice President Marshall in a recent address said: "The religion of to-day has too much of science in it and too little of God Almighty." We do not always agree with the Vice President, but we think that in this instance the utterance that he flung off squarely hit the mark.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The music at the Seashore Camp Meeting this year was up to date. They had a saxophone in the choir.

The Holly Springs (Miss.) Reporter states that Rev. W. N. Duncan assisted in a meeting at Winborn, Miss., last week.

Brother W. T. Holland, the genial editor of the St. Helena Echo (Greensburg, La.) visited relatives in New Orleans a few days since.

Rev. N. E. Joyner delivered an informing lecture on conditions in Mexico at the Seashore Campground tabernacle last Sunday afternoon.

Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, is enjoying a visit from his mother, Mrs. C. C. Williams, who is in her 84th year.

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in Atlanta, Ga., yesterday. At this writing we are not informed as to what was done.

Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss., went to Scooba, Miss., last Monday to assist in a union meeting there, which is being participated in by the Presbyterians and Methodists.

The East End M. E. Church, South, of Meridian, Miss., of which Rev. W. B. Hogg is pastor, will in the near future erect a handsome new brick house of worship, to take the place of the frame structure at present used by that congregation.

Through the courtesy of the President of that institution, Rev. J. S. Purcell, we have in hand a catalogue of the Montrose (Miss.) College. It is a neat pamphlet and sets forth impressively the advantages of that excellent school. Send for a copy.

Rev. W. W. Drake, of Baton Rouge, La., who collected most of the matter for this issue of the Advocate, desires us to state that his reason for not securing contributions bearing on the woman's work was that they are to bring out a special edition of their own on August 6, and that he did not wish to anticipate them.

Rev. J. H. Bass, pastor of the Second M. E. Church, South, of Columbus, Miss., writes: "Kindly allow me to say that my board of stewards have granted me a vacation during the month of August, and that I should be glad to spend the time assisting in meetings if any of the brethren feel that they can use me."

In a business note to our office, our esteemed friend, Rev. W. S. Harrison, of Starkville, Miss., adds the following statement: "Our church is in good working order. Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our pastor, is rendering excellent service, and is in favor with his congregation and the community generally. Our Sunday school was never better."

Colonel J. M. Johnson, of Acona, Miss., whose misfortune in being thrown from his horse and seriously injured was mentioned in the Advocate last week, is reported to be resting quietly and doing as well as could be expected. Colonel Johnson is the father of Rev. W. J. Johnson, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Beaumont, Texas.

The Daily Corinthian of July 11 (issued at Corinth, Miss.) says: "The revival at the Southside M. E. Church, South, continues with much interest. Rev. L. W. Cain is assisting the pastor, Rev. T. H. Mills. Large audiences are attending and a spirit of co-operation prevails. Several conversions have already taken place and the meeting gives promise of most gracious results."

Rev. J. G. Snelling preached a sermon of great strength and power at the Carrollton Avenue Church of this city last Sunday morning, and filled the pulpit of First Church at the evening hour, Rev. C. A. Battle preaching in his stead at Carrollton Avenue at night. Dr. Werlein was at the Seashore Camp meeting, where he preached impressively both in the morning and evening.

The July number of Our Home, the Mississippi Orphanage paper, says: "We are indebted to Dr. M. W. Swartz, of Millsaps College, for a very fine sermon, preached to us last Sunday night, his subject being the story of Naaman, the leper. It was full of new thoughts, encouragement, and help." If Dr. Swartz discourses as well as he writes, his message must indeed have been well worth hearing.

From a report of the recent International Epworth League Convention in the Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati), we clip the following: "The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, maintained her standards of eloquence, courtesy, and psychic warmth by lending to the convention Dr. H. M. DuBose, Dr. F. M. Thomas, Dr. F. S. Parker, the League Secretary, Bishop Mouzon, and others of noted names."

A correspondent says: "Rev. O. L. Tucker, who is in his fourth year on the Jonesboro (La.) charge, has done, and is doing, a fine work, and is held in high esteem by his people. With his own hands he has beautified and improved the church and parsonage property very much, having painted the parsonage, built fences, etc. In fact, I have not seen a better-kept parsonage anywhere. Mrs. Tucker is an ideal housekeeper."

We take from the Times-Picayune the following dispatch from Hattiesburg, Miss., bearing date of July 9: "Mrs. Margaret Hawkins Cooper, wife of Mr. Ellis B. Cooper, died in the South Mississippi infirmary at this place last night. The funeral took place at the home of her parents this afternoon, with Rev. C. W. Crisler officiating." It is with sorrow that we repeat this announcement, and we extend heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved.

The Midland Methodist says: "We understand that a number of Nashville laymen are getting up a protest against the recent action of the Board of Education in not re-electing Dr. J. L. Cunningham Superintendent of the Correspondence School." Think of a group of NASHVILLE laymen trying to dictate to one of the General Boards of Southern Methodism what it ought to do! They would do better to occupy themselves trying to help run their Carnegie university.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., will in the near future spend ten days assisting the Texas Sunday School Board in its Summer School at Epworth-by-the-Sea, and will go from there to Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, to lend a hand in the exercises conducted in connection with a Summer Camp and School for Older Girls. Much to her regret, she will not be able to attend the Sunday School Institute and Conference at Lake Junaluska.

In a business letter to our office, Rev. R. A. Clark, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Jackson, Tenn., says: "My work is moving along finely. Our new church is finished and the furniture is now being installed. It has cost us about $80,000, is modern in every particular, and is beautiful in appearance. We will have our formal opening of the new structure on the first Sunday in September, when Bishop W. B. Murrah will be with us."

We stated in our issue of last week that Mr. Ernest Kellner, Jr., of Greenville, Miss., had graduated in law at Washington and Lee University, making the third best grade in a class of sixty. Since that time the final examination papers have been gone over, and the Dean of the Law Faculty has written our young friend that he led the class in the concluding test. Considering Mr. Kellner's age as compared with the ages of his fellow-students, this is indeed a remarkable record.

We are indebted to Dr. H. W. Featherstun, the able presiding elder of the Newton (Miss.) District, for the following item of interest: "I dedicated a neat and ample new church at Mount Pisgah, on the McDonald charge, on Sunday, July 5. There was a fine audience, a good spirit, and no debt. Paint and new pews will complete this handsome new country church. Rev. M. H. Jones, the pastor, and the good people of Mount Pisgah deserve great credit for this worthy achievement."

Rev. A. W. Langley reports an excellent revival at Planterville, Miss., in which there were 21 accessions to the Church, 18 of them being on profession of faith. Brother Langley says: "This was one of those good meetings which commence well and grow in interest to the close. Rev. J. E. Gault, of Calhoun City, was with us from Monday night through the concluding service on Friday morning. His earnest and well delivered sermons will be of lasting good to the community. The Holy Spirit was present in power."

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, under date of July 13, writes as follows: "Mr. Robert F. Henry, the father of Rev. W. G. Henry, pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson, Miss., died at his home in Pickens County, Alabama, and was buried at Columbus, Miss., on the succeeding day. Brother Henry was a faithful member and loyal supporter of our Church and will be greatly missed in the community where he lived." We regret to be apprised of this sad occurrence, and we extend sympathy to those touched by this sorrow.

From Bunkie, La., Rev. R. S. Walton, under date of July 6, writes: "Four members were received into the Church as a result of a 5 days' meeting held in the school building on Bayou Claire. The congregations were small in the beginning, but soon increased until they filled the house. Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, did the preaching. He won the hearts of the people and on two or three occasions nearly every one responded to his proposition. He is a deeply consecrated man and gives promise of large usefulness in the Church."

We regret to note in the Kosciusko (Miss.) Courier that Prof. G. M. Boyd, who for the past twenty years has been Superintendent of the Kosciusko public schools, has been forced by ill health to resign, and is now seeking to recuperate at a health resort in Alabama. Prof. Boyd's work at Kosciusko has been of a really monumental character, and he has long been recognized as one of Mississippi's foremost educators. We sincerely hope that the impairment of his health is only temporary and that he will soon be able to don the harness again.

We were sorry to be informed that Dr. W. H. LaPrade, our pastor at Hazlehurst, Miss., has been seriously ill at the Baptist Hospital in Jackson, Miss., where he has undergone two operations, but we are pleased to state that the latest news that we have received was to the effect that he has begun to show considerable improvement, and we hope that his health will soon be fully restored. Mrs. LaPrade also went to Jackson that she might be near the Doctor during his illness, and while there was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Felix Gunter.

Dr. W. W. Pinson, of Nashville, Tenn., who was expected to be the principal preacher at the Seashore Camp Meeting was physically unable to attend. An invitation was then extended to Dr. G. S. Sexton, of Shreveport, La., to lead in the services, but he also was too unwell to come. The meeting, however, is reported to have been quite as good as usual, the preaching being done by Dr. O. C. McGehee of Mobile; Dr. S. H. Werlein and Dr. J. M. Henry of New Orleans; Dr. W. H. Huntley, presiding elder of the Seashore District; Rev. M. L. Burton of Gulfport, and others.

A Baton Rouge (La.) dispatch to the New Orleans Item represents Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, as making the following statement concerning the work of the recent State Legislature, so far as it relates to the cause of prohibition: "In view of the fact that a majority of both houses was against me, I think I succeeded in getting as much done as could be hoped for. We secured some bills that are helpful, and during the coming two years we will try to discover any defects that may exist and will come before the next Legislature, asking that they be remedied."

A card from Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Wilson, La., written from Colorado Springs, Col., last week, reads as follows: "I left home Wednesday evening, July 1, and arrived here Saturday morning at 9 o'clock. I am feeling fine. I had the pleasure of hearing Billy Sunday yesterday (July 5). He has been here four weeks and will continue his work through next Sunday. It is worth something to hear him. He preached to 21,000 yesterday. The tabernacle holds 12,000; there were 750 persons in the choir. Many are turned away at every service. This is a beautiful place. As I write, I can look out on the mountain and see the snow. The water I drink is melted snow."

By request of Mrs. S. C. Taylor, of Cleveland, Miss., we publish the following announcement: "The Cleveland Holiness Camp Meeting at the Tabernacle two and a half miles from this place will be held August 6-16. Rev. J. B. McBride, of Pasadena, Calif., will be the preacher in charge. He will be assisted by Rev. J. S. Clark, of Topeka, Kansas, who will preach in the afternoons and have charge of the music. Brother McBride is a strong preacher; Brother Clark is the Conference Evangelist of the Kansas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Other preachers and workers will be present to aid in the battle against sin. The camp ground is an attractive place, and board and lodging can be secured at reasonable rates. Ministers will be entertained free."

The union meeting held annually at Nettleton, Miss., with the Methodists, Campbellites and the members of the two Presbyterian churches of the town co-operating, will begin this year on August 9. Referring to this arrangement among the denominations at Nettleton, Brother J. A. Lowe, a leading citizen of that community, says: "Last year Dr. J. C. Barr, of New Orleans, and his consecrated wife spent some two weeks with us during these union services, and Dr. Barr did some very fine gospel preaching, which resulted in the accomplishment of much good. Following the usual plan of rotation, the Methodists will furnish the preacher this year, and we have succeeded in securing the services of Dr. J. W. Hill (Gulliver), of Texas, to whose coming we are looking forward with anticipations of great pleasure and profit."

Rev. J. S. Duke, whose present address is 505 Tombigbee Street, Jackson, Miss., and who is an excellent chorister in revival meetings, requests us to state that he has some open dates during the month of July and that he would be pleased to have any brethren who may need his services to write him. Brother Duke adds: "I have been in two meetings since I wrote you last and in each of them the power of the Lord was manifest. I was with Brother S. H. Frazier at Bernice, La., where they had a gracious season of refreshing, and will build a nice $1800 church at once. The other meeting in which I participated was a union one at Coffeeville, Miss., which resulted in a number of conversions and a general spiritual uplift. The preaching was done by Rev. J. A. Lee, a Baptist minister, who gave the people the pure gospel in an effective manner."

MISSIONARY BRIEFS.

Rev. J. L. Henry of China writes that the new church at Hutsung has been completed, and will seat 500 persons. On the evening of the formal opening, however, there were 1000 people in it, all in a good humor and eager to see and hear. During the four days' meeting which followed, 52 persons gave their names as probationers, and eight adults and two children were baptized. This church cost more than $1500 and something like half of it was raised by the Chinese in that community.

A missionary in Japan writes: "The Japanese post office is one of the most accommodating institutions in the world. It will do all kinds of things for you that the American post office has never dreamed of. For instance, on February 6 last the mail carriers distributed for us throughout this province, 20,000 handbills advertising our mission work."

During the evangelistic campaign held in Soochow from April 26 to May 10, 400 enquirers were enrolled, and more than 100 persons were either brought to a real conviction and confession of sin and a joyous realization of pardon and renewal, or else were revived from a state of coldness and doubt.

The Secretary of the Sunday school of the People's Central Institute reports an enrollment of 112 for the first quarter of the year. The average weekly attendance was 73; there were 27 who had not missed a single Sunday during the three months. This is the best record the school has had in the history of its work. There are four branch Sunday schools conducted by members of the Central School. They report an enrollment of 106, with a gratifying attendance at each service.

Recently on a special campaign led by a representative of the American Bible Society 7491 Bibles and portions were sold in ten days, within the bounds of the Songdo East District, Korea. There were eight men in the group, which shows an average of nearly 100 books per day for each man.

The first annual debate between Soochow and St. John's Universities took place in our chapel last Friday afternoon in the presence of a select audience admitted by ticket. St. John's defended the affirmative and Soochow the negative of the proposition, that "For China To-day the Advantages of Foreign Loans Outweigh the Dangers." Soochow won! This victory was decisive and clear-cut, and brought great satisfaction to our students, who have been made sore by almost constant and overwhelming defeats in athletic contests with the older institution, which twenty years ago started and has ever since maintained athletics with great persistence and success.—W. B. Nance, Soochow, China.

ANNA T. MULLEN, beloved wife of S. C. Oats, was born in the City of New Orleans, La., on Nov. 5, 1835 and died on June 26, 1914 in Meridian, Miss. She was married to Mr. S. C. Oats in the city of New Orleans on June 26, 1912. They celebrated the second anniversary of their marriage just six days before her going away. On that occasion each declared that the past two years had been the happiest of their lives. All was joy and happiness until death entered the home and claimed the wife and newly born babe. She faithfully followed and trusted in God who has called her to himself, where now she and the little one will be waiting and watching for the coming of the bereaved husband and father.

A FRIEND.

Near Shuford, Miss., on June 20, 1914, Mrs. MARY J. BREWER McCULLAR was called away by the death angel to her heavenly home. Mrs. McCullar was born in Talladega County, Ala. on Aug. 8, 1842, but moved to Mississippi in her early days. She was married to A. J. McCullar, Jan. 31, 1866 and nine children were born of this union, five of whom are still living to mourn their loss. She had been a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, for more than forty years, and was a true and faithful Christian, loyal to her church, and had often been heard to say that she was ready to meet her God. Her home was a sanctuary where she communed with God; and surely her name is written in heaven where some sweet day we shall meet her. She was laid to rest in Lovejoy Cemetery, the Rev. Mr. Porter, her pastor, conducting the funeral service. May the Lord bless the bereaved.

A FRIEND.

AN AFRICAN WELCOME.

About 10 o'clock on the morning of December 26 the Lapsley whistle began blowing to announce our approach to Luebo. Soon the banks of the river were crowded with natives shouting welcome and running along with the boat. The crew, dressed in their Sunday best, and waving red "bandannas," began singing "Trust and Obey," which was answered from the shore with "Onward, Christian Soldier," and "America." After the eleven missionaries came on board to greet us, followed by a number of native evangelists and workers, several men were stationed at the gangplank to keep back the thousand or more who were eager to grasp our hands. Hammocks were in waiting, and we were quickly carried up a long hill, men, women, and children running along on each side, smiling and shouting the common salutation, "Muoyo." Passing under a large banner of "Welcome to Luebo," we were deposited in cozy rooms prepared for the new missionaries. The station bells called us to Church, which was packed with natives eager to get a glimpse of their beloved pastor and teacher, Dr. Morrison, and of the new missionaries. One of the first messages received on our arrival here was from the great chief, Wembo-Niama, who declared his pleasure at our coming; and that his pledge of friendship continues, in token of which he sent a long spear to Bishop Lambuth.—Mrs. C. C. Bush, in Epworth Era.

A REVIVAL AT ORA, MISS.

Sunday night closed the revival services at Ora which have been in progress for the past week under the leadership of Rev. D. E. Kelly, the evangelist of the Mississippi Conference. The preaching was of a high order and was most attractive. Large and appreciative crowds waited upon his ministry.

It was a revival in every sense of the word, confined to the members of the various churches. There was a turning to God by those who had forgotten him and were wandering away. God most wonderfully saved men who had been members of the Church for a great while. There were many reclaimed. Only two united with the Church, and it is the opinion of the writer that the reason for this was because the evangelist spent his time trying to lead souls to God and did not try to bring them into the Church under pressure. Another reason was that most of the population of the community were already members of some Church.

We feel that Brother Kelly has increased in power and wisdom from on high since he was last with us. We will long remember his visit and pray God's blessings upon him wherever he goes. As a token of appreciation, the community presented him with a purse of something more than $75.

HIGH PRESSURE DAYS.

Men and women alike have to work incessantly with brain and hand to hold their own nowadays. Never were the demands of business, the wants of the family, the requirements of society, more numerous. The first effect of the praiseworthy effort to keep up with all these things is commonly seen in a weakened or debilitated condition of the nervous system, which results in dyspepsia, defective nutrition of both body and brain, and in extreme cases in complete nervous prostration. It is clearly seen that what is needed is what will sustain the system, give vigor and tone to the nerves, and keep the digestive and assimilative functions healthy and active. From personal knowledge, we can recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose. It acts on all the vital organs, builds up the whole system, and fits men and women for these high-pressure days.—Adv.

MODERN SEVEN WONDERS.

The seven wonders of the modern world, according to the poll of a thousand scientists in America and Europe, are, in the order of importance: Wireless telegraphy, telephone, aeroplane, radium, antiseptics and antitoxin, spectrum analysis, X-ray.

The vote was taken by the editor of the "Popular Mechanics" Magazine. The seven wonders of the ancient world were chosen by the Greeks before the birth of Christ. They were: Pyramids of Egypt, Pharos of Alexandria, Hanging Gardens of Babylon, Temple of Diana at Ephesus, Statue of Jupiter by Phidias, Mausoleum of Artemisia, Colossus of Rhodes.

The Pharos was a lighthouse 400 feet high. The Colossus was of cast metal, not half as high as the Statue of Liberty.

The modern wonders were chosen from a ballot containing 56 subjects of scientific and mechanical achievement. There were blank spaces for the insertion of any other subjects the voters might select. Wireless telegraphy got the greatest number of votes. The Panama Canal was given 100 votes; anaesthesia, 94, and synthetic chemistry, 81.

Only one ballot, the last to be received, which bore the name of one of the most distinguished authorities on chemistry of Munich, Germany, was checked for the seven titles the total vote showed to have been selected. Six ballots—one from India, two from France, two from Germany and one from the United States—showed the selection of six of the final seven.—New York World.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

To the Pastors and Sunday School Workers of the Louisiana Conference:

Dear Friends: At the beginning of the year I undertook to continue to furnish notes to the Sunday school column of the New Orleans Christian Advocate with the understanding that you would send in such items of progress from your several schools as would be worth passing on to its readers. We are certain that in this way many practical suggestions and no little inspiration can be given to our Sunday school workers. But you can readily understand that being located in one corner of the State, where I never see either pastors or Sunday school workers, that I am dependent on you for what I give out. So if you are willing to divide what you have learned with your neighbors, and to inform them of what you are doing, please send to me, or to the Advocate direct, such items as you judge the Sunday school workers will appreciate. I will be glad to edit and arrange such notes if you will cooperate by sending them to me.

Very truly yours for better Sunday schools,
P. O. LOWREY.
Kentwood, La., July 7, 1914.

Brother Holloman, treasurer of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board, submits the following as the Children's Day collections received up to date, July 1:

For 1913: Floyd, $3; Pleasant Hill, $3. For 1914: Monroe, $20; Epworth (New Orleans), $3.33; Houghton, $9.60; Oak Ridge, $11.76; Louisiana Ave. (New Orleans), $6.50; Wilson, $10; Sicily Island, $6.50; Berwick, $2.38; Waterproof, $9.25; Bethel, $3.65; Douglas, $5; Ville Platt, $2.95; Concord, $3.40; Felicity (New Orleans), $7.25; Kent's Mill, $3.10; Union (Mangham), $27.10; Mooringsport, $6.60; Parker Memorial (New Orleans), $11.04; Mangham, $9.55; Bonard, $9; Donaldsonville, $1; Alexandria, $18; Zwolle, $18.38; Kentwood, $5.

With the above report Brother Holloman calls attention to the small number of schools that up to date have sent in their Children's Day collections, and to a further fact that some schools are reported to have diverted and misappropriated their funds to other purposes than the one object to which the law of the Church applies them. In view of the plain letter of the law and the need for funds to maintain the work of the Sunday School Boards, both Conference and General, we cannot see how any pastor can allow this collection to be diverted to any unauthorized channel, this being the only provision that the Church has made to finance the Sunday school extension work.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Rev. W. J. Callahan of our Japanese Mission work has been elected Chairman of the Teacher-training Department for the Flowery Kingdom. He is also a member of the Sunday School and Epworth League Boards of the Japanese Church. Much Sunday school interest has lately been developed there anent the World's Sunday School Convention to be held in Tokyo in 1916. Plans are being made for the establishment of a school of Religious Pedagogy and Sunday School Training to be located on the campus of the Kwansai Gakuin and conducted in connection with that institution.

Congressman R. P. Hobson in a recent great temperance address in Chicago, said that there were more saloons in Chicago than all south of Mason and Dixon's line. If we could make our South a solid prohibition South, then we would be really making a great forward stride.

Dr. H. M. Hamill was made president of the great International Sunday School Convention recently held in Chicago, and Mr. John R. Pepper vice president. Dr. E. B. Chappell is on the Lesson Committee; Dr. C. D. Bulla is on the Evangelical Council; Mr. R. M. Weaver is on the Executive Committee, and the writer on the Adult Committee. Thus it will be seen that our Church is well represented in the working forces of this great Sunday school organization.

The great army of men making the parade during the recent Convention in Chicago, with flaunting pennants and open Bibles, forgetful of heat and weariness, gripped and thrilled even the persons who went there not believing in the effect such a mass of Bible Class men would have on a great and wicked city. All along Michigan Avenue every window and roof, as well as the sidewalks, were crowded with watching people of every kind and class, and the effect cannot be described in cool, calm words. The many bands played "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and cheer after cheer went up as each section passed the reviewing stand.

Ten thousand teen age girls and as many teen age boys in the well planned Conference arranged for them, proved Mr. John Alexander's great leadership in the Teen Age Department of the work.

New York will be the next International Sunday School Convention City, and the next Convention will be held four years hence, instead of triennially, as heretofore.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

Under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Wood, the Sunday school work on the Mars Hill charge is rapidly advancing. The circuit secretary, Miss Myrtle James, is rendering valuable service. On June 27-28 five superintendents, a number of teachers, and more than five hundred others, attended a Sunday school rally at Chapel Hill, one of the churches of that charge. It was conducted by the writer, assisted by Miss Lizzie Horn, the District secretary, and Mr. J. C. Wilson of Grenada.

The Sunday school interest continues to grow on the Courtland Circuit, where the aggressive young pastor, Rev. A. S. Raper, is in charge. The writer has conducted rallies at two of his churches and the pastor has held similar services at four other appointments. These rallies held by the pastor were on week days and lasted all day. He reports seven churches and as many Sunday schools; more attending Sunday school than there are members of the church; Children's Day observed at every appointment, and the other interests of the church as advancing.

Miss Horn and the writer have held all-day services at Sparta Church of the Grenada Circuit. Representatives of the other churches of the charge were present. Reports were heard and various phases of the Sunday school work were presented. Among the results was the application of three young people and one adult for church membership.

Mrs. J. R. Bright, district secretary of the Winona district, and the writer were greeted by large audiences in morning, afternoon, and evening at Ruleville. The people of that growing town are much interested in their Sunday schools. On the Monday following we visited Doddsville, of the same charge. We had a good hearing both in the morning and afternoon. Their reports showed that more than two-thirds of the white population of the town were in actual attendance on the Sunday school. Brother W. D. McCullough is the happy pastor of these thriving congregations.

More than 95 per cent of all the conversions reported by the pastors this year to their several District Conference of the North Mississippi Conference have come from the Sunday schools.

The response of the people to the field workers is encouraging indeed. As a rule, when the meetings have been properly advertised, we have been greeted by large audiences. Sometimes it so happens that it is announced from the pulpit and elsewhere that "The Sunday School Agent" is coming, and some of the people wonder what he has to sell and feel sure they have no money to spare.

Sunday school rallies planned and announced for July are as follows: Mt. Pleasant Ct., Salem Church, July 12-13; Lamar Ct., at Early Grove, July 14-15; Ashland Ct., at Ashland, July 16-17; Pine Valley Ct., at Banner and Salem, July 18-19; Ackerman, at Salem, July 21-22; West, at Bolling Green, July 26-27; Chester, at South Union, July 28-29; McCool, at Liberty Chapel, July 30-31; High Point, at Center Ridge, Aug. 1-2.

YOCR BOY'S ASSOCIATES.

Who are your boy's associates? From whom does he get his ideas of life, his views of the man's estate, his knowledge of the many things which he does not learn at home? The character of a boy's associates is a most powerful factor for good or evil in the shaping of his life.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, of Fayetteville, Tennessee, has given this question profound study during the 25 years in which he has built up the Morgan School, a training school for boys, of which he is principal. Mr. Morgan has devoted a long career to the training of boys. He knows boy nature. The close personal associations which he has fostered between his boy students and himself and his carefully chosen faculty, his careful attention to the boy's work, his thoughts, his talents and his special needs, are some of the features which have given his school its high standing.

Mr. Morgan is a man of inspiring, wholesome personality and deep Christian character. He has built his school to give the boy thorough mental, physical and spiritual preparation for an honorable, manly life. He is a proper man to train your boy.

A request to Mr. L. I. Mills, Sec. Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., will bring a catalogue and full information of this school.

Lambuth, the missionary Bishop, or one of his co-workers in the African mission field, in charge. This field is the one in which our own Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Stockwell of Lake Charles are now laboring. ### CLOSER UNION

The good news has come that the Baltimore and Pacific Conferences have been able at their recent annual meetings to effect the union of their Home and Foreign Missionary Societies. This step forward was taken in the most harmonious spirit, and the leaders in these Conferences are rejoicing in the manifestation of loyalty and co-operation among the women and in the bright prospects for the work.

By the good fortune of late dates for their annual meetings the Missouri and West Texas Conferences have had the coveted privilege of leading off in organic union. We rejoice with them in this opportunity to assume the position of leadership in this forward move, which will be made in all the Conferences as opportunity offers. It is fitting that mention should be made of the fact that the Denver Conference, without anybody's "by your leave," effected organic union a year ago. While other Conferences have awaited further legislation, they have admired the aggressive spirit manifested by our Western co-workers. It is an honor to which these Conferences have attained and we are justly proud of them. Another Conference has recently been added to the honor ranks—North Mississippi, which effected organic union at its annual meeting June 11-15. This news does not come as any great surprise to us for this indefatigable worker, Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle is the beloved leader of this Conference, and she is a woman who has the faculty of "making things come to pass." She intends to keep her Conference in the front ranks, and backed by the love and co-operation of her constituency this task is not a difficult one.

JUNALUSKA MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

Aug. 7-16, 1914.

As the time approaches for the convening of this great missionary conference interest deepens. The success which attended the opening of the Assembly last year encourages those who have worked for its second session to believe that even larger numbers will attend this year and greater interest be manifested.

The location of the Assembly is ideal for it is in the very center of the most beautiful and fertile section of the Blue Ridge Mountains. Within the grounds is a natural lake with an area of 252 acres. Facing this lake are many cottages, the hotel, auditorium, etc. The climate is recognized to be as fine as any in the world. The dry, crisp, bracing air, bright sunny days, and cool nights make it an ideal place for study. The beauty and grandeur of the scenery cannot fail to inspire the heart and make it ready for high and noble impressions and aspirations.

The object of the conference is to interest, to instruct, and to inspire; and to this end mission study classes, devotional services, institutes, and popular addresses have been planned. The suggestions will be freely used.

Among those who should attend are the officers of the Woman's Missionary Societies. Their zeal and enthusiasm will be rekindled and they in turn will be enabled to inspire their auxiliaries and all gain a deeper vision of the great work mapped out for those who love the Lord.

THE SCARRITT ENDOWMENT FUND

In this practical age the question of finance enters into the life of every institution. "Will this investment pay?" and "How shall it be maintained?" are two questions which go hand-in-hand with the launching of every institution. The results achieved by the Scarritt Bible and Training School and the spiritual and numerical gain accruing to the M. E. Church, South, through its influence since its opening in 1892 answers the first question; and the words which follow will endeavor to explain how it is maintained and what is needed to enable it to fulfill the high purpose for which it was created. We are indebted to Miss Maria L. Gibson for the pertinent facts which follow in this article.

The members of our great Southern Methodist Church have a real affection for this school and are proud of its achievements; but strange to say, with a few exceptions its maintenance has been left to the women of the Missionary Society. Before the school opened the necessity for an endowment was seen and promptly begun. Three methods have been adopted: To endow chairs at $25,000 each; lectureships at $5,000 and scholarships at $3,000. The endowment fund is invested in stocks and loans bearing interest and secured by collaterals. The funds for chair and lectureships, which constitute the Productive Endowment, are invested at 6 per cent and the interest received is applied to payment of teachers' salaries, insurance, repairs and all other expenses, excepting the board of students. The Scholarship Endowment Fund has proven the most popular, as an investment in a life appeals with peculiar interest to those of us who are willing to contribute to Christian work. The interest accruing from the Scholarship Fund is paid, by the treasurer, into the School Fund to meet the expenses of students entered upon endowed scholarships. The interest on $30,000 at 6 per cent yields $180 per year if loaned out without the loss of one day's interest, and that is the amount charged for a student's board, light, heat, laundry and car fare when on duty unless it is provided by the church or society to which a student has been assigned to work. Note the number of items which are covered by the $180. No charge is made for tuition and all expenses for graduation including diploma are met by the school. It does not take a mathematician to figure out that $5 per week is insufficient to cover all these expenses. An annual deficit is the result.

There is great need for a largely increased endowment; $100,000 added to the present productive endowment would place the institution on a firm financial basis. For the past two years both departments of our Missionary Society have pledged an assessment of $2 per department in the auxiliaries to increase the endowment and a large proportion have fulfilled their pledges. Could all be made to realize the intense need for the fund there would be no unfulfilled pledge at the end of this year. Let

CORNERSTONE LAID.

On Monday, July 6, the cornerstone of the new Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., was formally put in place by Bishop Murrah, who read as few men can read, the appropriate and impressive ritual of our Church prepared for such occasions. After this ceremony the congregation present repaired to the old church nearby, in which we still worship, and listened to two excellent addresses—one by the Bishop and the other by Dr. A. F. Watkins. The Doctor preached for us twice the day before, greatly to the pleasure and edification of our people. Bishop Murrah came to us from Kokomo, by automobile, where he had preached twice Sunday and dedicated the New Methodist church at that place. Our church is now fully under cover and finished without. The inside work is going on rapidly.

THE CHURCH'S TRUE SOURCE OF POWER.

The account of the "Mass Movement" in India, from the pen of Bishop Frank W. Warne, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which appears in our Woman's Missionary Department this week, is wonderfully interesting and suggestive. It is positively thrilling to note how by the thousands the people of that long-benighted land are breaking away from their heathen faiths and turning to Christianity. And let it be carefully noted that the distinguished writer states that this extraordinary awakening has come in response to earnest and persistent prayer. Think of an Annual Conference devoting a whole day to supplicating the throne of grace, and of having special prayer seasons at intervals throughout its entire session, which we understand Bishop Warne to mean by his reference to "prayer cycles."

Is there not in this marvelous success of the Methodists in far-away India and the means by which it has been brought about, a lesson that the followers of Wesley everywhere would do well to lay to heart? We have long been convinced that the Church is disposed to depend too much upon mere human instrumentalities in her work and to ignore to too large an extent her resources that are Divine. To be sure, human agencies are important and they need to be perfected and fully enlisted in the great task of redeeming humanity, but of themselves they are wholly inadequate for so stupendous an achievement. The power of the Holy Spirit is, and has ever been, the chief resource of the Church in the execution of her great mission. This important truth is writ large in the history of Christianity from the beginning up to the present hour. It was not until Pentecost came that the early disciples commenced to achieve results that astonished the world. Wesley's life, accomplished and zealous to do good as he was, amounted to little until he learned the way to the throne of power and made himself its surrendered vehicle. So it has been with all the men whose lives have been the most fruitful spiritually and with congregations that have wrought most effectively for the Master.

And in a larger measure of this power, is to be found a solution of most of our perplexing church problems. It is the province of the Holy Spirit both to enlighten and lead the workers of the Kingdom, and it is he only who can crown their labors with true success. And how he can move upon human hearts! His assistance is better than all of the man-invented devices for filling empty pews. His presence in the souls of men is the only effective cure for worldliness and illiberality. His constant abiding alone can make ministers flames of fire and our churches centers of life and power, with penitents crowding their altars and the songs of victory and praise ringing out from their walls.

Shall we not, then, seek a fuller endowment of this power that cometh down from above? By sincere prayer, heart-searching, and a continual renunciation and surrendering of self, it may certainly be had. God never fails to bestow it when it is rightly sought. Oh, that our churches, in the midst of their complicated machinery and multitudinous activities, would ever remember that what they need most of all is to keep in touch with this mighty invisible Force that the Heavenly Father and the ascended Christ have sent into the world! If they would do this, the scenes now being witnessed in India would be repeated in all the lands of earth and such would be the strength of Zion that her enemies would melt away before her, being utterly unable to stay her triumphant advance.

"Spirit of power, come down; draw near,
Spirit of truth and holy fear;
Succor poor souls that strive with sin,
The foes without, the foes within,
And, like the morning sun, dispel
The shades of death, the powers of hell."

A STATEMENT BY BISHOP CANDLER.

We have made a great beginning of the University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which the Commission was instructed by the General Conference to establish east of the Mississippi River; but this is only a beginning. Our people intend to have a real university, and at every stage of its development it will be built solidly and strongly. All informed people will understand that so great a work cannot be done in haste, but must be done with the utmost care and deliberation.

The enterprise starts with contributions aggregating $1,527,500, besides the use of the Wesley Memorial building, a magnificent structure, which is worth not less than $300,000, and the Wesley Memorial Hospital, worth at a low estimate, $200,000. It is believed the trustees of Emory College will agree to become a part of the university system, and that institution, with its buildings, libraries, apparatus and endowment, is worth about $700,000, some people estimating it at a higher figure.

The Theological School Will Open First.

The first school of the university to be opened in Atlanta will be the theological school, the need of such an institution being the most urgent necessity now upon the Church.

This school of theology will begin its first session on or before the 1st of October. The exact date will be announced soon. For its support the Board of Education of the Church has appropriated $15,000 for the first year. In addition to this, the educational commission has set apart $500,000 of the endowment fund contributed by Mr. Asa G. Candler to the permanent endowment of this school of the university. It will be noted that the appropriation of $15,000 by the Board of Education for the school is the equivalent of 5 per cent on an endowment of $300,000. It may be said, therefore, that the school of theology begins with an endowment of $800,000.

The work of the school will be done in the commodious lecture rooms of the Wesley Memorial building, a structure equal to the best building occupied by any theological school in our section of the country, if we may not say in the United States. In this building there is the famous Wesley collection, which contains about 2500 rare volumes bearing on the history of Methodism, and a considerable number of the standard works of theology. In it also are many autograph letters and manuscripts of the Wesleys and their contemporaries, and an interesting collection of pictures and other objects of historic interest.

Will Select the Site Soon.

These facts are stated in order to show the scale upon which we propose to erect the various departments of this institution. Other schools will be added from time to time, and they will be projected on the same broad lines. A suitable site for the campus upon which to erect the other buildings of the university will be secured as promptly as the nature of the task will permit, and other buildings than those previously mentioned will be erected in due time.

There is widespread interest upon the part of the people in the enterprise and contributions, great and small, will enter into the making of the institution which is proposed. In this first meeting of the commission, subscriptions were offered ranging from $500 to $1,000,000. Two noble laymen of the Presbyterian Church have made subscriptions of $5000 each. Mr. T. T. Fishburne, of Roanoke, Va., makes a contribution of $25,000. I do not mention the several subscriptions made in Atlanta by other Methodist laymen, among which are several very generous contributions, because they are to be counted in the $500,000 which has been pledged for the city.

The faculty of the theological school will be announced in a few days. Very capable men are under consideration for this work, and will be secured.

No educational enterprise in the South was ever begun under conditions so cheering, and we believe the tokens of good will be multiplied with every passing day.

The Methodist Church and all the Christian Churches in the Southern States are going to strengthen their educational institutions and bind them more closely than ever to the Churches which have founded them. The work of higher education is not going to be surrendered to secularism.

W. A. CANDLER.

HAD SOMETHING BETTER TO DO.

Clamoring for rights seems to have been a thing little known among the early disciples of Jesus. Perhaps they were too busy telling the glad story of redeeming love to debate the question whether they had been given all the powers that were due them. Before the crucifixion and resurrection John and James wanted to sit one on the Master's right hand in his kingdom, and the other on his left, but they exhibited the spirit of self-seeking no more after Pentecost. The standard that Paul set for the first Christians was "in honor to prefer one another." Would it not be glorious if in this day we could see a General Conference dominated by that principle?

ATLANTA SECURES THE UNIVERSITY.

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which met in Atlanta on Wednesday, July 15, by a vote of 12 to 2, located the university which the General Conference ordered to be established east of the Mississippi River, in Atlanta. Birmingham, Alabama, was a stont competitor of the Georgia metropolis in her efforts to secure the institution, offering for it a bonus of $500,000.

Atlanta's Offer.

The offer submitted by Atlanta, according to the Atlanta Journal of July 16, was as follows:

"Cash—$1,500,000. Preston S. Arkwright presented this portion of the offer, in behalf of various interests. One of these is the Chamber of Commerce, which underwrote for $500,000. That Asa G. Candler had given $1,000,000 after the location in Atlanta had been announced, was given out on Thursday. This is part of Atlanta's cash gift.

"A site. The value of this is not stated definitely, inasmuch as some one of the several sites offered by individuals or groups of individuals may be selected and its value cannot be anticipated; or the University authorities may prefer to pick a site not offered free, and buy it. The latter is not probable.

"Absolute and unrestricted use of the Wesley Memorial Church and greater Wesley Memorial Hospital. This offer was presented in behalf of the trustees of those institutions by Major R. J. Guinn. It does not include deeds to the properties, whose value is considerably more than $500,000, but does include untrammelled use, the institutions to be maintained by their owners.

"A concise statement of the value of the foregoing would be as follows on a very conservative basis:

"Cash, $1,500,000.

"Site, not less than $250,000.

"Wesley Church and Hospital, free use without cost of maintenance, not less than $500,000.

"Total value, at a minimum estimate, $2,250,000."

The Theological Department.

The theological department of the University will be opened this fall, the General Board of Education having set aside $18,000 to assist in the employment of a faculty, which, of course, will be supplemented as much as may be needed by other funds of the University.

Mr. Asa Candler's Letter.

The following is Mr. Asa Candler's letter to the Educational Commission in announcing his purpose to give to the Church for the University $1,000,000—a communication which is destined to occupy an important place in the annals of the South:

"Atlanta, Ga., July 16, 1914.

"Bishop Warren A. Candler, Chairman of Educational Commission, etc.

"My Dear Brother: Impelled by a deep sense of duty to God and an earnest desire to do good to my fellow men, I make to you, as the chairman of the educational commission appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held at Oklahoma City, to take in hand the repairing of the loss inflicted upon the Church by the decision in the case of Vanderbilt University, the communication which follows:

"While I do not possess by a vast deal what some extravagantly imagine and confidently affirm, God has blessed me far beyond my deserts by giving to me such a measure of this world's goods as to constitute a sacred trust that I must administer with conscientious fidelity with reference to his divine will.

"During all the years of my life I have endeavored to do what good I could with the earnings of my toil, but at this time the Church and the country are confronted by a situation which, as I see it, requires that I do for the cause of Christian education what I am about to set forth.

"In my opinion, the education which sharpens and strengthens the mental faculties without at the same time invigorating the moral powers and inspiring the religious life is a curse rather than a blessing to men; creating dangerous ambitions and arousing selfish passions faster than it supplies restraints upon these lawless tendencies in human nature; stimulating into activity more of the things by which men are tempted to wrong than it quickens the powers by which temptation is resisted with success.

Religious Education.

"I am profoundly impressed that what our country needs is not more secularized education, but more of the education that is fundamentally and intentionally religious. I see no way by which such religious education can be supplied without institutions of learning owned and controlled by the Churches. Under our political system the limitations upon the civil government in matters religious put such education beyond the reach of that power. And I cannot agree for a moment that the best type of religious education is that which some claim is propagated in an unwelded state, outside any and all Churches, by institutions which are subject to neither civil nor ecclesiastical authority and which acknowledge no responsibility to the people whom it proposes to educate.

"Boards of trustees that are independent of all government must inevitably change in person and policy with the changeable years. But the Church of God is an enduring institution; it will live when individuals and secular corporations have perished. It is not easily carried about by the shifting winds of doctrine which so affect men and institutions too responsive to the transient modes of thought and custom which come and go with the seasons. Hence, I desire that whatever I am able to invest in the work of education shall be administered by the Church with a definite and continuous religious purpose.

"In this I do not seek a sectarian end; for I gratefully acknowledge that I have received benefits and blessings from all the Churches of our land. I rejoice in the work of all the denominations who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and seek to do good to men.

Faith in His Church.

"But to some one Church I must commit my contribution to Christian education, and I see no reason to hesitate to trust money to that Church to which I look for spiritual guidance. To that Church at whose altars I receive the Christian gospel and sacraments, I surely should feel able to safely entrust the things I possess. Its history in the work of education justifies me in believing that it will use what I entrust to it in a liberal and catholic-spirited manner; for in all of its institutions of learning it has on occasion engaged Christian men of other denominations when the needs of the work seemed to require the services of such instructors, and it has never used its schools for purposes of proselyting the sons and daughters of other Churches.

"I cannot believe that the promotion of the evangelical and brotherly type of Christianity for which it stands will fail to benefit the people of my section and country without regard to denominational lines.

"This type of Christianity has prevailed generally in the South, and I desire to do what I may be able to perpetuate it, believing as I do, that it makes for a wholesome conservatism politically and socially, and for a blessed civilization crowned with piety and peace.

"I wish that the characteristic excellences of our people may be made better and that the things which blemish our lives may be speedily obliterated.

"To this end, as far as education can accomplish it, I offer to the Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, charged by the General Conference with the duty of establishing an institution of university grade east of the Mississippi River, the sum of one million ($1,000,000) dollars, for the endowment of such an institution, the plans and methods of which are to be definitely directed to the advancement of sound learning and pure religion. To the end that the institution may be secured to the Church beyond the possibility of alienation at any time in the future, I will accompany my contribution with a deed of gift explicitly so providing.

Seeks No Controversy.

"In making this contribution under these terms and with this expression of my views and purposes, I seek no controversy with any who may hold opinions with reference to educational work at variance with the sentiments above expressed. It is surely permissible that I should endeavor to strengthen the things in which I steadfastly believe without giving just offense to any who are of a different mind.

"I fully appreciate that $1,000,000 is insufficient to establish and maintain the university which is needed and intended by the Church. Indeed, no amount of money alone is adequate for such a purpose. The faith, the love, the zeal, and the prayers of good people must supply the force to do that which money without these cannot accomplish. But I trust all these precious things will be given, together with many other gifts, great and small, from people of large means and from people of small means, so that in due time the great institution, which is proposed may be fully equipped for the blessing of men and the glory of God.

"In humble trust in the Christ to whom I look for salvation, I dedicate the means with which Providence has blessed me to the upbuilding of the divine kingdom. In the confidence that my brethren and fellow citizens of Atlanta, Georgia, and of our Southern Methodist Connection will join with the Commission in carrying this great enterprise to speedy and large success, I offer this contribution to its foundation.

"Respectfully,

"ASA G. CANDLER."

Comment of the Atlanta Constitution.

The following is the major part of an editorial on the University and Mr. Candler's magnificent gift, which appeared in the Atlanta Constitution of July 16:

"A phenomenal feature of the cash bid was that two-thirds of it, or ONE MILLION DOLLARS, was contributed by one individual—ASA G. CANDLER. Never in the history of Georgia, or of the South, has one individual or one corporation given a sum even approximating this to any educational, religious, or philanthropic cause. Even among the multitude of millionaires of the North this beneficence would stand out conspicuously. Occupying a solitary eminence in the South, it holds a position that is no less than historic.

"This gift of Mr. Candler's comes as a climax to his gift of $100,000 toward the rehabilitation and modernizing of the Wesley Memorial Hospital. For each dollar raised by the devoted women sponsors of that enterprise, he offered to give three dollars. So that for the $33,000 raised by these devoted women he contributed $100,000, not held in abeyance or with a string tied to it, but deposited three for one in a bank as the other subscriptions were deposited.

"The liberality that now finds its climax is characteristic of the man. He has always done his share, and more. "Doing his share" has from his youth up been a passion with this wonderful man. As a young $40-a-month drug clerk, he was proportionately as liberal in aiding any worthy cause as he has ever been since. It is axiomatic among those that know him, that at every upward turn of his life he has followed the policy of giving every penny he was able to spare toward human betterment. Many of his acts of charity, many of the enterprises he has aided, will never be known save to himself and a few friends.

"What a splendid inspiration and asset is such a man to a community! If every man "did his share" according to the Candler plan, this world would very nearly approximate millennium!

"Full realization of what the Methodist University means to Atlanta will increase appreciation of Asa Candler's gift, that gift undoubtedly being the determining factor in Atlanta's securing the University. Here is an institution which starts life with a fund back of it amounting to $2,000,000 in cash and its equivalents. How such an educational plant must tower in the South is obvious. Backed by the tremendous Southern Methodist denomination, the University will achieve in the future dimensions beside which even the mammoth proportions of to-day will be dwarfed. Drawing patronage from every Southern State, carrying Atlanta's name to the educational world, the University will convey a prestige beyond the dream of the average citizen.

To this mighty enterprise, Asa G. Candler occupies the paternal role that John Harvard occupied to Harvard University. He has wrought for himself a monument that will stand through the decades. He has bestowed upon Atlanta and Georgia a distinction that will grow greater with the years."

SELFISHNESS INDIRECTLY TAUGHT.

By Rev. W. G. Henry.

Some weeks ago I wrote some words of protest against the practice of ministerial criticism. I did so because I believe that UNITY is our key word since we are a connection. Now I desire to say some things more about our work which is not generally appreciated. We must understand that a Methodist preacher cannot succeed as an individual (other ministers may) since the very genius of our church government demands co-operation.

Every interest of the Conference at large must also be the specific interest of each church within the bounds of the Conference. As I have never been connected with an educational institution as a professor or commissioner, nor with any church organ or Conference board in an official relation, I feel that I can say some things in behalf of these brethren who are so related to these interests. We should feel a very decided personal interest in many things which we now regard as subsidiary or even as nuisance matters. I am very frank to say that every pastor ought to be as much interested in his Conference evangelist, his church schools, his orphans' home, his church paper—in fact, in all specials ordered by his Conference—as he does in his local Sunday school, Epworth League, or Woman's Missionary Society. These all alike are related vitally to the local church and should each receive its quota of attention. When, therefore, the special representative of any interest offers to come to our church to represent that cause, we damage that cause and our own church by saying, "I would be glad to have you, but local conditions make it impracticable for you to take a collection just at this time."

Of course, there are such times, but may we not set an early convenient time for such a representation? We should not suffer the spirit and grace of the liberality in our people to dry up. There is a great fallacy in thinking that one collection will interfere with any other. It has been demonstrated times beyond computation that liberality for one cause will engender liberality for many causes. To refuse to respect the orders of the Conference for general and special funds is to inculcate and foster in our people a spirit of selfishness for which we can give no adequate reason. The most of us need a wider horizon that we may see further than our own little interests. Happy that day when all college presidents, editors, missionary secretaries, etc., will be regarded as assistant pastors. Happy that day when every member of every church will speak of these institutions as "mine."

HINTS TO YOUNG PREACHERS.

By Didymus.

Preachers, old and young, often fail to be acceptable on account of "little things," as they are called. There should be in every theological school a "Professor of Common Sense." As we have no such teacher, may a graduate of "Brush College" offer a few suggestions to the younger brethren?

1. Dress neatly, becomingly, and, above all, be clean. The man who affects to despise care at this point fixes in a large measure both his appointments and effectiveness. Godliness and cleanliness are closely associated by the Holy Spirit. The late Dr. Broadus used to say: "Young gentlemen, in dress, do not necessarily advertise that you are a preacher; but do not dress so that people who see you will be surprised to learn that you are a preacher."

2. Avoid exaggeration of every sort, and about everything, both in the pulpit and out of it. He who deals with eternal truth should above all things be sure that he is within the lines of truth. People will never trust immortal interests to a man who exaggerates, or is hazy and doubtful. Exaggeration and lying are closely related.

3. Do not be a "jack of all trades," teaching the farmer, the doctor, the lawyer and the merchant the business in which he is probably succeeding. Almost any man knows that you are a failure if too versatile. You are not expected to know thoroughly but one thing—your own calling. Allow the other fellow something for the sake of politeness, if nothing else.

4. Be prompt in all matters, especially in business matters. Also, be reasonable. Why should a preacher consider himself exempt from the laws of common honesty, which are among the fundamentals of the gospel which he professes to teach?

5. Never beg for anything. The most despicable thing in the world is a chronic beggar. And "hinting" is a form of begging. It makes your gospel cheap and you contemptible.

6. Never presume. If others want to concede something to your calling, in good spirit, there can be no objection. In asking for favors, accept the obligations accompanying. For instance, in writing for information, or a church certificate, or in any case where you are favored, send postage and thank those who serve you.

7. Use good stationery in writing. It saves time and explanations. Remember, however, that its quality and general appearance is telling about your taste and culture.

8. In accepting hospitality:

(a) notify host when to expect you; (b) be as little trouble as possible; (c) if invited out for a meal, notify your host at the preceding meal if possible; (d) write to your host after returning to your home.

9. In all things, be manly and meet every legitimate issue squarely. This course will win in the end. A true preacher must be a true man.

DR. R. C. BETHEA.

Robert Cochran Bethea was born near Lotta, S. C., Dec. 12, 1831, and passed to his reward Dec. 3, 1913, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. S. C. Sample, near Brookhaven, Miss., and was laid to rest in Summit, Miss., on Dec. 4, 1913, the service being conducted by Rev. W. B. Hogg, of the Mississippi Conference, and Rev. I. H. Anding, pastor of the Baptist Church at that place. These dates mark the beginning and closing of an earthly career that was in many respects remarkable.

The preparation for life was begun in the home, and later, Wofford College, S. C., was the school chosen by the parents in which to have their son trained for life's usefulness. After finishing at Wofford, he took a course in medicine at Charleston, S. C., finishing in 1858. His family moved in 1853 to Packers' Bend, Ala. On July 14, 1852, he was married to Miss Mary E. LeGette. Of this marriage were born five boys and two girls. In 1859 he moved to Mississippi and settled near Meadville. He spent two years in the Confederate Army, being a member of the 7th Mississippi Regiment, under the command of Capt. Parker.

Dr. Bethea was converted in early life and united with the Methodist Church; was licensed to preach, and later ordained deacon and elder. He was a genuine local preacher, never aspiring to the position of pastor, except when requested by his presiding elder to supply charges, which he did acceptably. He served as a supply Pleasant Grove, Meadville, Anguilla and Oak Ridge at different times. He was a man of solid piety, who loved the Church and its doctrines. He was a constant reader of the Bible, and the Bible was to him in every respect the Word of God; its promises, its counsels, its warnings, were to him the words of a divine Father to a child. The writer was his pastor in 1887-88, and always found him not only ready, but anxiously willing to do anything to further the cause of Christ. If he was ever heard to criticize the Church or the preacher, it was not a criticism with a sting, but words of regret at the lack of the power of the Church or ministry. He was everybody's friend. As a physician he was ready to answer any call that came by day or by night, and often he was heard to say, in discussing the power of medicine to right the wrongs of the body, that he never wrote a prescription or gave a dose of medicine without asking God to aid in the accomplishment of its purpose.

After the death of his wife, which occurred on Feb. 19, 1895, at their home in Summit, Miss., he spent much of his time in the home of Rev. W. T. Griffin, who married his youngest daughter, and was very helpful to Brother Griffin in visiting the sick and aiding in the social meetings of the church. It could be said of him that he was a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit. He was a great believer in the gospel in song. He had but little patience with what the world calls fine music, but his face would light up at the singing of the great hymns of the Church. Often in conducting a prayer meeting, he would illustrate the truths that he would teach by singing hymns old and new. One of his favorite hymns was, "O, 'tis delight without alloy, Jesus, to hear thy name." When in the presence of penitents he would often sing the song-prayer, "Show pity, Lord, O Lord forgive." One of his favorite counsels in song to new converts was, "Take the name of Jesus with you."

Dr. Bethea's was a happy, Christian life, and while there came many trials to him, still in all he could say with Job: "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord!" I well remember when his splendid son, Dr. Walter Bethea, was taken suddenly out of the world, that his answer to a question as to how he felt, was: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not his benefits." At times some people called him extreme in his views with reference to religion, but he was living that life that "looked for a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The world has been made poorer by his having gone from it, and those of his family who remain can enjoy the rich heritage of a good name. With his wife and the children who have gone before, he is enjoying the fruitage of a life well spent in the service of him who said: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

By T. H. Lipscomb.

It was my privilege to be associated with Rev. W. S. Harrison in putting the manuscript of his book, "The Articles of Religion," in typewritten form. Before he had completed dictating to me the preface, I recognized that it was a book of unusual merit, by a man of unusual depth and breadth of thought, written in a style clear, epigrammatic, and interesting. Further acquaintance with the contents of the book, as we passed from chapter to chapter, only served to deepen in me this conviction. I came to reverence my venerable friend and brother as one of the sages—the wise men—who in perfect sanity and through quiet thought, come to see truth in all her pristine clearness, and to express truth in that rare simplicity which enables us to see it also.

So I heartily commend his book, not only to those who desire to understand more fully our articles of religion and the added truths which Methodism has proclaimed, but also to all who desire to come in contact through the printed page with a man who has not lost his head or his vision in this whirling life of ours, and who is therefore a safe guide for those who hardly know where they are or what they believe. Surely there are many who may well sit at his feet to-day. We will all rise, I believe, the wiser and the better for having done so.

The book may be had of the author at Starkville, Miss., or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, colporter, Winona, Miss., or of Smith & Lamar, publishers, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1 postpaid. Bound in brown cloth, gilt back and side titles, pp. 272. Now sit down and order at once.

Church News

The First M. E. Church, South, of Texarkana, Ark., has an Epworth League with 300 members.

The centenary of Methodism in Australia will be celebrated next year. Bishop James Atkins is expected to take part in the exercises of that interesting occasion as the representative of our Church.

At the meeting of the Book Committee, held in Nashville some two weeks ago, Rev. W. E. Vaughan was unanimously re-elected editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate for another quadrennium.

Because of their failure to pay expenses, the Western (Cincinnati), the Central (Kansas City), and the Northwestern (Chicago) Christian Advocates, three of the leading weeklies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have been reduced from 32 to 24 pages.

Dr. Ed. F. Cook, who has been designated by our General Board of Missions to accompany Bishop and Mrs. Atkins on their trip to the Orient, left Nashville on June 15 for San Francisco, from which point the party was scheduled to sail Tuesday of this week.

A portrait of President William McKinley was unveiled in the Wesleyan Methodist Central Hall in London, England, on July 14, by Mr. Walter H. Page, the American Ambassador to Great Britain. This painting was a gift of Mr. J. G. Butler, Jr., of Youngstown, Ohio.

Rev. R. A. Clark, pastor of the First Methodist Church (South) of Jackson, Tenn., has been re-elected president of the Pastors' Association of that city for another year. A great union meeting is to be held in Jackson in the near future, with Evangelist Burke Culpepper to do the preaching.

Dr. G. H. Detwiler, who was forced by ill health to give up the pastorate of the West End M. E. Church, South, of Nashville last spring, died in a sanitarium at Asheville, N. C., on July 5. Dr. Detwiler was a preacher of uncommon gifts and was considered one of the most effective pastors in Southern Methodism.

It is stated that Dr. F. B. Meyer has become pastor emeritus of the Regent Park Church of London, and that hereafter he will preach on only one Sunday of each month. Those who heard Dr. Meyer at the recent International Sunday School Convention in Chicago report that he appeared to be quite feeble physically.

The following figures show the number of communicants of the Southern Presbyterian Church in the leading cities of the South: Louisville, 4809; New Orleans, 4577; Atlanta, 4567; Richmond, 4037; Birmingham, 3605; Nashville, 3555; Charlotte, 3500; Memphis, 3304. The following churches of this denomination have over a thousand members: First Church, Nashville, 1562; Central Church, Atlanta, 1313; First Church, Houston, 1200; First Church, Dallas, 1153; Second Church, Charlotte, 1070; First Church, Charleston, W. Va., 1068.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate we take the following: "The First Baptist Church of Chicago comes forward with the claim to be a Church 'melting pot' of the first class. The pastor, the Rev. Myron E. Adams, states that in the membership of the Church, or in some way affiliated with it, are the representatives of 25 nationalities. They are: Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Hindu, Cuban, Negro, Jewish, French, Hungarian, Polish, Swedish, German, Norwegian, American Indian, Spanish, Bohemian, English, Irish, Scotch, Greek, Italian, Danish, Dutch, Austrian and American. Out of 269 children, enrolled in the kindergarten, there are 16 nationalities. These children all come from within one-half mile of the church."

The General Board of Trustees of the M. E. Church, South, at their recent meeting in Nashville increased the salary of Rev. John R. Stewart, who by virtue of his position as Secretary and Treasurer of the Board has in charge the work of managing and increasing the Superannuate Endowment Fund, to $2,500. This was a fitting recognition of the faithful service that he had rendered this important cause. His salary heretofore has been very meager. The Superannuate Endowment Fund is said to be growing much faster now than at any time since the movement to create it was started. The recent General Conference levied an assessment upon the whole Church for this important interest.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

To Friends of Christian Education in Louisiana, Greeting:

Centenary College needs your prayer and personal sacrifice. I am here as your servant by the will of God, in the interest of that which vitally concerns Methodism and the Kingdom of God in Louisiana for generations to come.

I need your help in securing students for the session which opens on September 15. Send me the name of any boy who ought to attend and let me try to get him.

I need help on scholarships or loan funds for worthy boys who are hungry to complete their education. This kind of help serves the double purpose of assisting the boy and of helping to maintain the college. I am constantly in receipt of letters from boys who want to work their way through school, but for whom it is impossible for me to provide.

I need money to put in necessary improvements before the opening of school.

Is there not some one who would like to contribute a memorial scholarship for a loved one who has gone to the heavenly world?

Any assistance at this time will be a timely blessing.

Wiley Memorial Cottage, Shreveport, La., July 16, 1914.

JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The 1914 session of the Jackson District Conference was delightfully entertained by the good people of Braxton, Miss., June 17-19. Our genial and ever courteous host, Rev. W. B. Waldrop informed us that the Conference had a unique distinction in the fact that 80 per cent of the membership of the Conference were entertained in Baptist homes. This was due, of course, to the fact that they largely outnumber our own membership in Braxton.

There was an unusually large attendance of laymen upon the Conference. Many of them remaining throughout the session. The pastors were all present, with one or two exceptions on account of sickness.

Our capable presiding elder, Rev. P. D. Hardin, had his work carefully planned, and no interest of our great Church was overlooked. His uniform courtesy and brotherliness was very much appreciated by the brethren.

We were visited by Rev. M. M. Black, Dr. I. W. Cooper, Rev. T. J. O'Neil, Rev. J. S. Purcell, Mrs. Sam Ewing, G. L. Harrell, Mr. R. A. Maddox, Rev. W. M. Williams, and Dr. J. M. Sullivan, each of whom was given ample time for the representation of the great work given him by the Church to do. The preaching of the Conference was of a high order—spiritual and uplifting. Rev. W. W. Hopper preached the opening sermon of the Conference and the following other brethren occupied the pulpit during the session: Revs. W. G. Henry, O. S. Lewis, I. W. Cooper, and M. L. White.

The District Conference rejoiced in the report that our district parsonage had been relieved of all debt, and a resolution was adopted commending two of our princely laymen, Maj. R. W. Millsaps and Mr. I. C. Enochs, for their generosity, and our presiding elder for his zeal which made this "consummation devoutly to be wished" real.

The reports of the pastors indicated substantial progress, and a note of expectancy with reference to revivals was sounded.

The Conference agreed to raise $400 for the furnishing of the Main Building at Millsaps College, and a committee was appointed to apportion the amount to the charges. The following ad-interim licensing committee was elected: M. L. White, R. P. Fikes, W. A. Terry, and J. M. Morse. Dr. J. M. Sullivan was re-elected to the position of lay leader. R. A. Maddox, W. E. Harris, J. W. Evans, and A. B. Kling were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Rev. R. A. Ellis, a superannuate of the North Mississippi Conference, and our own Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr., blessed the Conference with their presence. Brother A. L. Davis, a local elder, and the father-in-law of Rev. W. G. Henry, was a much appreciated member of the Conference also.

The Conference was also glad to have present as a member Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, who is doing efficient service in the evangelistic field. We regretted that none were before us for license to preach and are praying that there will yet be those within the bounds of the district to say "Here am I."

After appropriate resolutions of thanks, the Conference adjourned, sine die.

C. N. GUICH, Secretary.

RUSSELLS NOT REUNITED.

(Special to The Brooklyn Eagle.)

Asbury Park, N. J., July 6—Efforts on the part of "Pastor" Russell's disciples to effect a reconciliation between the "Millenium Dawn" leader and his wife, were disclosed to-day, when Mrs. Russell made a detailed denial that she was a party to any such arrangement.

Mrs. Russell's statement came in a letter addressed to the Rev. DeWitt C. Cobb, pastor of the Second M. E. Church of Asbury Park, who had asked her if she was about to return to her husband.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," wrote Mrs. Russell, from her home, 449 North School Street, Avalon, Pa. "For sixteen years we have walked far apart in every sense of the word, and paths so divergent give no assurance of coming together. If Mr. R.'s followers are circulating such a report, they have manufactured it out of their imaginings.

"About a year ago I was approached by one of them—a woman, an entire stranger to me, who represented Mr. R. as in a very feeble condition of health, and also as a penitent and greatly changed man.

"I replied that my position toward Mr. R. had always been only that of opposition to unrighteousness, which, as a Christian, I dared not either affiliate with or indorse in any way. And, I said, if there was anything I could do, even yet, to save his soul from sin and its consequences, I would do it, of course, as a Christian duty. I would go to him in his last hours with forgiveness, sympathy and prayer for his full reconciliation with God.

"That would be, however, only at his express request and acknowledgment of the wrongs he had done, for the time was (when I was with him) when he did not want my prayers, and said so. But to seek a reconciliation and live with him was out of the question.

"I am curious to learn if this report emanated from this source, for I have since discovered that Mr. R. was not either physically or spiritually as represented, and that the visit of this party and another subsequently were evidently for a very different purpose.

"I hope you will correct the falsehood.

Yours sincerely,

"MRS. M. F. RUSSELL."

Secular News and Comment

Greenville, Miss., has recently sold at a premium 5 per cent bonds to the amount of $65,000 for the erection of an additional public school building.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has announced that the next "dreadnaught" battleships to be constructed will be named in succession Arizona, California, Mississippi, and Idaho.

The following United States Senators are the sons of former members of that distinguished body: Gilbert Hitchcock, of Nebraska; Wm. Saulsbury, of Delaware, and John N. Camden, of Kentucky.

New Orleans received its first bale of cotton of the 1914 crop on Thursday, July 9. It weighed 405 pounds and was raised in Cameron County, Texas. It was sold at auction and brought $200, which was devoted to charity.

The Chautauqua movement, of which Bishop John H. Vincent was the founder, is now forty years old. There are said to be at present 2930 chautauquas in the United States, of which more than 2200 are conducted in tents.

It is estimated that the Nation's wheat crop this year will approach 900,000,000 bushels, which is about half as large as the average wheat crop of the world, and 137,000,000 more bushels than were ever before grown in the United States in one year.

It is stated that King George and Queen Mary, of Great Britain, give annually to charitable causes $250,000. They are said to receive every day about two hundred letters appealing for assistance, every one of which is given careful consideration.

Joseph Chamberlain, the noted British statesman, died of heart failure at his home in London on July 2, at 78 years of age. Mr. Chamberlain's wife, who is still living, was Miss Mary Endicott, a daughter of William C. Endicott, President Cleveland's Secretary of war.

The Pisgah Forest, near Asheville, N. C., recently purchased from the estate of the late George W. Vanderbilt by the Government for a forest reserve, embraces 86,000 acres. The 5000 acres immediately surrounding the famous Biltmore mansion were not included in this sale.

The State Supreme Court of Louisiana having declared the kidnaping law under which W. C. Walters was convicted in the Bobbie Dunbar case to be unconstitutional, the recent Legislature enacted another law covering that offense, for which the maximum penalty was fixed at 20 years.

A movement that will probably be successful is under way in Congress to restore to the State of Louisiana the original Secession Ordinance that she adopted, which came into the possession of the Federal government when Richmond, Va., was captured, and which has since been in the custody of the War Department at Washington.

It is stated that the revenue from the tax on individual incomes instead of amounting to $55,000,000, the original estimate, will probably foot up only about $31,000,000. Notwithstanding this expected shortage, Secretary McAdoo announced some days ago that the Government had wound up its fiscal year on June 30 with an income in excess of its expenditures by about $30,000,000. Of all the countries of the world, ours is by far the richest.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt has severed his connection with The Outlook, of which he has been a Contributing Editor ever since he left the White House. Mr. Lawrence Abbott stated that there had been no friction between Mr. Roosevelt and the persons who control The Outlook, but the rumor persists that the ex-President was displeased with that journal's course in approving of President Wilson's stand in favor of repealing the law exempting United States vessels engaged in coastwise trade from paying toll for passing through the Panama Canal.

Thomas E. Watson, the well known Populist leader of Georgia, is stated to have announced that he will take the stump for Gov. Joseph M. Brown in his race for the United States Senate against Senator Hoke Smith. Mr. Watson is also said to favor the gubernatorial aspirations of Col. Nat Harris in preference to those of his chief competitor, Mr. Wm. J. Harris. Tom Watson is undoubtedly a strikingly brilliant and forceful writer and speaker, but we think that his standing and influence have greatly waned during the past few years.

The Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, at a Fourth of July banquet in Paris, France, is reported as saying: "The authority of the President of the United States has grown until he now exercises more power than the Czar of Russia. But the people seem to like the change, even if it does make legislators mere rubber stamps." In his address, Mr. Depew is stated to have declared that President Wilson is the best educated and most cultivated of our Presidents, but that he is obviously lacking in business experience.

The Review of Reviews, which is one of the most ably edited of American periodicals, vigorously opposes the proposed treaty between the United States and Colombia, which is said to have been largely arranged by the Hon. Hannis Taylor, a distinguished lawyer in the United States, acting as attorney for the latter country. It is argued that there is no justification for paying Colombia $25,000,000, and that there is still less warrant for granting her so many special privileges, for which it is claimed she could well afford to pay as much as $200,000,000. This treaty has not yet been ratified by the United States Senate.

The late Jacob Riis had no money to leave to the settlement work in New York city that bears his name. He did not belong to that class of philanthropists who pile up money and enjoy it while they live and apply it to no worthy purpose until they die. Nor did he let employees work for starvation wages to amass for him a fortune that he could scatter around in such a way as to make for himself a great reputation as a benefactor—he felt too much sympathy for suffering humanity for that. He knew that it was better to help struggling men to help themselves and those dependent upon them by giving them larger remuneration for their work, than to keep their earnings at the lowest point and disburse the wealth that they had largely created to them in subsequent years as charity. Mr. Riis's philanthropy was of the true Christian type—the type that the world needs.

Tha never was a bit o' rib
Hooked outen Adam's side,

So if tha wan't no fust, w'y, course,

That makes it mighty plain t' me
Tha hain't none, yit, I reckon!

Then whar'd you come f'm, Sue, ol' gal.

An' if the Doc. is right, be gum,
Ye're but a make-believe.
Yer Bible hain't no good, because,
Sez wise ol' Doc., sez he,
They'r but a bunch o' lyn' scrubs,

Tha wan't no 10 Commandments, Sue,
'Cause Doc., ye know, he knows;
He clum up Siny fer a clew,

A searchin' here an' scratchin' there,
An' turnin' over stones,

An' climbin' rocks, an' diggin' holes,
An' sortin' critters' bones,
But nary a commandment
Could that ol' feller find;
An' he wus sent by Providence,

Then ol' Doc. he cum down th' hill,
An' fit with Josh-u-a.
Jes fer t' see th' sun stan' still,
An' lengthen out th' day.
But, bless ye, Sue, th' sun it had No legs on which t' stan';
Then Doc., he piped, They'r lies, bedad,
By ol' Bel-ze-bub planned.

Doc. clum up them mulberry trees,
Jes for t' see "th' goin',"
Then he clum down agen an' sed,
Dear me! tha's nothin' doin'.
Doc. sez thet Jonah's whale was short
On jaws an' storage room;
Some Isr'lite jes writ th' squib
T' pass away th' gloom.

An' Samson's but a meaz'ly joke;
That jawbone stuff's a fake,
Cooked up by some ol' Sheeny wlio
Was Sheeny on the make.
Fer Doc. he brought th' jawbone home,
An's han'lin' it quite well;
T' maul th' cocoanut o' chaps
Who still believe in hell.

So, put th' Bible up, dear Sue,
We're goin' out t' sea;
Without th' faith our fathers had Into eternity.
Fer if th' Word o' God is false
Tha hain't no kingdom cum,
An' you an' me has lost fer aye
Our everlastin' home!

Tha hain't no light t' guide our way,
Out thro' th' boun'less gloom;
Ner any hinges on th' door
That opens f'm th' toom.
But, somehow, darlin', I can't he'p
Believin' God knows more Than all the chesty critic folk
This side th' eternal shore.

The Bible's stood these thousand years
In spite o' knocks an' gibes,
Fool Athelsts an' infidels
An' all their noisay tribes.
So, dear, we'll jest keep right along Confidin' in his Word;
An' as twixt God and Eliot,
'Th' Almighty is preferred.

A QUESTION.

I am writing a note to ask for information or facts that will set me right concerning the Sunday school work in Louisiana. In seeking this information, I am sure that no one will understand me as being opposed to any and every form of work that lends inspiration to this mighty arm of the Church. But the question is, are we as a denomination doing our Sunday school work in the way that will mean the most for us as a Church and the Kingdom of Christ.

Last year it was my privilege to attend a district Sunday school institute under the leadership of Brother Lowrey, our Conference Sunday School Secretary, where we enjoyed a feast of good things given us by Dr. and Mrs. Hamill. In a short time we were invited to go and carry delegates to the State Interdenominational Sunday School Convention, where we were taught the identical lessons that we were at our district institute. In another short time we were invited to attend the Parish Interdenominational Convention, where the same lessons were taught. Are we called upon to do service in the Sunday school work outside the Church that we love so much and beyond the limits of a denomination? Is it expected of us that we as a great Church shall leave the channels through which the work of the Sunday school has been done for these years, to meet the demands made upon us? I do not so understand my duty, but I may be wrong. Not long since the report was made that more than 75 per cent of the subscriptions to the interdenominational Sunday school work of Louisiana was made by representatives of our Church. Our Conference Sunday School Secretary was discontinued last December, on account of a lack of funds to support him. There is a strong denomination in Louisiana, whose leaders, almost to a man, are advising against the interdenominational Sunday school work.

It occurs to me that if we as a Church must bear the burden of an interdenominational work, however much it is doing, the real and only logical thing for us to do, is to turn our efforts into the channels of our own Church, where the efforts and means can be better conserved and directed to greater ends. We have publishing plants adequate to supply all demands for literature. Our literature is as good as any and better than some I know. We have leaders, plans and methods that are second to none. It may be that some of our Methodist folk are so broad in their conception of the Sunday school work that it is necessary for them in order to satisfy their convictions in the matter, to continue in the interdenominational sphere.

The doors of the Methodist Church are closed against no one who feels a need of the grace which it supplies. All are invited to come, partake of and enjoy the benefits that accrue from its services. I believe there is room for any amount of holy service, latitude for the exercise of the best gifts, and a field white unto harvest, through the channels of the tried old Methodist Episcopal Church, South. As for me I am ready to go and willing to do as far as my ability reaches. It may not be much, but I expect to stand hard by her teachings until further orders.

Set me right, brethren—these things have bothered me. I would be taught. Yours in his service, J. A. ALFORD.

AN APPRECIATION.

The subject of this sketch, Mary Eleanor Jackson, daughter of James and Amanda Jackson, was born in Austin County, Texas, on Sept. 28, 1846, and died at Greenwood, La., on April 5, 1914.

On Oct. 1, 1867, Miss Eleanor was happily married to Mr. De Orsay Alfred Simpson, who a year later brought his young wife to his native State, settling in Caddo Parish, Louisiana, where the remainder of the life of this goodly Methodist couple was spent. This union was blessed with seven children, three of whom preceded their father and mother to heaven. The four surviving children are, Mrs. S. A. Alexander of Greenwood, La., Dr. E. E. Simpson of Taylortown, La., D. A. Simpson of Greenwood, La., and Mrs. A. S. Lutz of New Iberia, La.

Sister Simpson was converted in girlhood at a Methodist altar, near her Texas home. A glance at the date of her birth will remind us that her girlhood embraced that stormy period of our country's history marked by the Civil War. But however stormy the times, revival fires were burning brightly on Methodist altars. We have often noted the fact that many of the brightest religious experiences of our fathers and mothers date from that period. This was especially illustrated in the case of Sister Simpson. None who ever associated with her failed to note the steady, unwavering light that shone in her life. Her Savior having lit this light in her soul, faithfully she let it shine through a long life marked by many hardships. The clouds that settled about her seemed to but intensify its brightness and the winds of adversity that blew keenly at times only fanned it into a steadier and brighter flame.

For many years the setting of her religious activities was in the midst of one of the most historically interesting church organizations that this writer has been privileged to be acquainted with. I refer to the old Friendship Church of Caddo Parish, La. Friendship was the mother church of Caddo Parish, if not of Northwest Louisiana. The religious life-blood that has gone into many of our churches in North Louisiana can easily be traced to old Friendship. At her altars many of our staunchest laymen and some of our strongest preachers were converted.

For a number of years the evangelistic fervor of this Church found expression in the Cypress Bayou Camp Meeting, which for a number of years was such a moral and religious power in this part of the State. Here that rare old type of Southern hospitality, of which we hear so much, was shot through with spiritual fervor. Here social life reached its highest and purest level. Here physical recreation became spiritual recreation. To one who has moved in the midst of the scenes of one of these old camp meetings, it is hard to restrain the tears that blind the sight of their passing. To this camp ground the Simpson family came every August for seventeen summers. In the midst of its activities Sister Simpson found a sphere for the service of her Lord. The Recording Angel alone can tell what a large contribution she made to the splendid history her Church was making in those days.

But the life which gives expression to itself most beautifully and effectively in the wider scenes of church life may be expected to shine with still more fervent, if calmer, brightness in the home. Here in the God-ordained kingdom of real womanhood, one must needs have known our sister to appreciate to the fullest extent the real nobility of her character. Every pastor whose privilege it was to minister at the altar of that old country home will agree with me that there was a charm about the place which proved both a gracious benediction and a subtle temptation to the Methodist circuit rider: a benediction because here in the genial atmosphere of that home he found that relaxation to tired nerves and rest from physical weariness, which often he so much needed; a temptation, because it was so easy here to forget that Wesleyan rule of ministerial deportment, "not to spend any more time in one place than is absolutely necessary." Here the wife and mother was the center of that happy, joyous and loving family, and the source of the aroma of peace and joy which pervaded the place. She was the stay and comfort of her husband in the midst of all his plans and toils; and the genial companion and confidant of her children. Here she lived and loved not only those who composed the charming circle of her family, but the gracious ministry of her happy, loving disposition overflowed until it touched with a gracious uplift the lives of all, high or low, rich or poor, white or black, with whom she came in contact.

One of several swarms that went out of old Friendship found a hive in Caddo Chapel, to which the membership of the Simpson family was transferred. Here the religious life of old Friendship repeated itself. Here the children began to share with their parents the activities of the Christian life.

'Tis sad to contemplate that physically the old home is deserted as well as the old churches, but while this is true, the real life of which these things were but the expression is not dead. The churches still live in a number of other religious organizations. The sweetness and fragrance of that old home still lingers with the children and has been transplanted to homes of their own.

The last few years of Sister Simpson's life were marked by sadness and grief. First, in 1909, came the death of her daughter, Melissa, who had been happily married but a little while before. As Brother and Sister Simpson turned away from the grave where their lovely daughter had been laid to rest, it was her precious babe that they took back to their old country home whose halls had been robbed by time of the other children. It looked like beginning all over again. How beautiful it was to see the life of this couple become centered again in the cradle of their grandchild! Her baby hands were to dry the tears from their cheeks and bind up their broken hearts.

Then, in 1911, came the death of Brother Simpson. After 44 years of companionship with him, she must walk the rest of life's journey alone. To us that loved her it looked for a while that even the unusual buoyancy and brightness that had marked her life would be eclipsed. We wondered if that pitiful look of wistful longing to follow him had come to stay. But again the little arms of Melissa tightened about her and bravely she turned to the task of caring for the little one, now growing every day into the likeness of her mother.

The old home was broken up and a little cottage was built in Greenwood where two of her children lived. Here life seemed to brighten and she took up her work in the missionary society and other forms of church life at Greenwood. Here, just a few weeks before she died, the writer was her guest during a Sabbath visit and was strengthened again by her keen interest and her prayerful sympathy in all the work of the Church. Here children and grand children came for companionship, counsel, and comfort. Here it seemed that another stretch of years of beautiful living was before her; but alas! as the spring day was dying and just after an afternoon spent in visiting her children, sharp and sudden the summons came and we knew and she knew that it was only a question of hours. After the first hour of shock and strain from the stroke, she lapsed into unconsciousness and for forty-eight hours there was no opportunity for a parting word. In vain her loved ones watched for a moment of consciousness that she might give her parting blessing, but it came not. However much they might have wished for this, surely they needed no final message. The parting blessing could not have added to the benediction that fell from her whole life.

To this all too imperfect tribute we add the words of one who, as her family physician, knew her perhaps more intimately than any of us. He said at her funeral, "She was the most remarkable woman I have ever known."

THOUGHTS.

When a little child is naughty,
And is cross with everything,
All his thoughts are changed to hornets
That go flying off to sting.

When a little child is happy,
Then his loving thoughts, I think,
Are turned to floating butterflies,
All white, and gold, and pink.

TIM'S MOTHER.

Dr. Henry Ostrom tells this pathetic story of a little newsboy's devotion to his mother. We know that Tim must have been kind and thoughtful and helpful to his mother while she was living, or he never would have thought of doing what he tried so hard to do for her when she was taken away from him.

Tim's father was dead and he had no brothers and sisters, so he and his mother were all in all to each other. But one sad day, after a very brief illness, the tired mother folded her weary hands on her breast and went home to the heavenly Father, leaving Tim all alone in the world, with only a few dollars which together they had managed to save from their hard earnings.

The little boy heard the pitiless clouds fall on the casket lid of the only one who had loved him, and saw the earth smoothed over until at last there was nothing left but a little green mound. Heartbroken he turned away, but resolved in his heart that there must soon be a monument there to mark her last resting place, and to show his appreciation of all she had been to him.

He went to a monument dealer and tried to bargain for a tombstone, but the man had nothing in reach of his purse, or that he could ever hope to pay for by selling papers. But the dealer was a kind hearted man, and seeing Tim's distress, he finally let him have for a very small sum, a broken piece of marble. The big rough stone was too heavy for Tim to carry, but two of his playmates helped him construct a rude little wagon on which he hauled the stone to the cemetery. With a broken old shovel, and his own two little hands he carefully dug a hole for the foundation and planted the stone at the head of his mother's grave. Then he procured an old dull chisel, which he laboriously sharpened on a wheezy old grindstone, and every day, rain or shine, after his morning papers were sold, Tim sped to the cemetery and tried to chisel on the headstone a loving inscription to the memory of his mother. But the tears fell fast, and the little hands trembled so, that often the chisel made marks which he did not intend it to make, and Tim knew little of spelling and the use of capitals. But the work progressed, until finally many a curious spectator paused to read the rude inscription: "My mother—she died last week. She wuz all I had. She said she would be waitin' fur"—But the line was never finished.

One day a traveling man stopped in the town and was told about Tim and his monument. The gentleman went out to the cemetery and found the grave with its queer little headstone. Touched to the heart, he went to the keeper of the grounds and asked where he could find the lad who had shown such tender devotion to his mother. Sadly the man replied: "Didn't you see the little grave by the side of the bigger one? That's Tim's. A team of horses ran over him one day while he was selling papers. He was taken to the hospital and cared for tenderly by the doctors and nurses, but all their skill could not save little Tim. He just looked at them pitifully and said: 'I—I—didn't get it finished! But she'll know I meant to finish it, and it will be all right, won't it? She said she would be—be—waitin' fur me. Waitin'—fur—me!' They brought his poor little broken body out here and we buried him beside his mother, but the inscription has never been finished."

The traveling man walked slowly back into the town, hunted up the marble dealer and told the story. The men in the shop helped him select a stone and together they sent it out to the cemetery and had it placed over the two graves lying side by side in God's acre, carving thereon a suitable inscription so that the passers-by might know how one boy appreciated his mother.—J. R. G., in Western Christian Advocate.

TWO PINK ROSE-BUSHES.

By Hilda Richmond.

"My pink rose-bush is going to be planted right here where folks can see it," said Amy, showing a sunny place in the lawn that was easy to see from the street. "I want people to say, 'Look at that lovely rose,' as they go by."

"I'm afraid I can't plant mine where folks can see," said Bess soberly. "We have such a teeny-weeny lawn, and it's so crowded now."

"Well, it doesn't make much difference, for you've planned to cut off all your flowers," said Amy. "You said you would send one to Jennie Gay, and one to Grandma Curtis, and one to that lame boy back of our house, and—I can't remember who all, so your bush won't have anything on it ever."

"I don't suppose it will," said Bess. "There's so many folks who need pink roses that maybe there won't be enough to go around."

"Your roses will do only one person good, while mine will make lots of folks happy," said Amy. "I'm so anxious to hear what they'll say when they see the lovely flowers. Mamma says the book told about these bushes, and said they were big and sweet and pink."

"I'm so glad!" cried Bess, jumping up and down. "I guess Grandma Curtis never saw a big, sweet, pink rose. Won't she be surprised?"

When the rain and the sunbime had done their work the dainty pink buds began to appear on the sturdy rose-bushes. The two little girls could hardly eat or sleep for watching the wonderful plants. They carefully watered them in dry weather, and put coarse grass about the roots to protect them when it was too hot, so that it was no wonder the plants did their best to send out pretty buds.

"For me?" cried poor old Grandma Curtis when the first fine rose was laid on her lap. "This is the most beautiful flower I ever saw. Dearle, will you put it in a glass of water where I can see it all day?"

The next rose went to Jennie, and the next to the lame boy, and every time a rose opened there was somebody to give it to. The poor bush went the entire summer looking almost as bare as it did in spring, though it always had pretty green leaves.

"Your rose-bush hasn't anything on it either?" said Amy one day in August when she happened to see the bare rose-bush in Bess's yard. "Mine hasn't bloomed for a long time."

"Mine has bloomed all summer!" cried Bess in surprise. "I took a big rose to Aunt Letty only yesterday."

"You did! I haven't had a rose for weeks and weeks. And I took such good care of mine. Let's ask Mr. Anderson about it."

And what do you think Mr. Anderson said? He told the little girls that roses must be cut if one expects more roses. "Amy did the wrong thing with her plant in saving the flowers, while Bess had roses all summer to give away. It is very much like giving away happiness," said the old gentleman. "The more we give, the more we have, and Bess will have roses till frost comes."—Sunday School Times.

MAKING RAINBOWS EVERY DAY.

A child is naturally an idealist, and when in normal health visualizes the world in roseate hues. A boy was told the story of Noah and his rainbow. The lad did not appear surprised, but said, "That is nothing! I can make rainbows every day!" He meant that he could make soap bubbles any time. The child is by nature a maker of rainbows, some of them bubbles, and others realizable day-dreams. It is worth a good deal to any home to have one or more such dreaming Josephs in the domestic circle, for we older ones tend to become less hopeful, or at any rate less Utopian, as time goes by. We need, then, to be recalled from a humdrum prosaicalness by the cheery and unabashed optimism of the youthful rainbow-makers who, after the showers have fallen, call to us to look to see where God is inscribing his golden pencillings athwart the sky!

What would this oft gloomy life be without its rainbows, its symbols of hope, its outlooks into heaven? Then let the sunshine of celestial promise into home and heart, and when you cannot discern any literal spectrum in the tear-stained sky, nevertheless rejoice in that spiritual hope shed abroad in the soul, whose source is found beyond the empyrean, and which supplies the peace which the world cannot give nor take away.—Zion's Herald.

It is not the events of life, nor its emotions, nor this nor that experience, but life itself which is good.—Phillips Brooks.

THE NEW METHODIST UNIVERSITY.

Thursday, July 16, was a great day for Southern Methodism. As will be seen elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, it marked the completion of the labors of the second meeting of our Educational Commission in Atlanta and insured to the Church a new institution of learning which will immeasurably strengthen her educational system and bless her youth, as well as increase her general working forces, for generations to come. That within less than two months after the adjournment of the General Conference our Commission has been able to locate and project a university with resources amounting to more than $2,000,000, is nothing short of marvelous. The holdings of Vanderbilt University prior to the time of Mr. Carnegie's late gift probably did not amount to more than $3,000,000; so it will be seen that at one leap the new university has attained to a financial strength such as it took the school on the Cumberland decades to reach, and which it had not gone so very far beyond until it disgraced itself to obtain additional funds. And no campaign at all has yet been made in the Church. The success of the movement to establish a great university east of the Mississippi River is now beyond question, and there is little doubt that by the time of the assembling of the next General Conference the school will have assumed such proportions as will guarantee it a place in the front rank of the higher institutions of learning in the South.

No better site than Atlanta could possibly have been chosen for the new institution. It is the most enterprising and progressive city this side of Mason and Dixon's line and is easily accessible to the whole of that part of the Church which the projected university is expected to serve. It is in the center of a vigorous and aggressive Methodism, the city alone having within its limits more than 20,000 Southern Methodist communicants. And Georgia is the Empire State of Dixie—the best developed, the wealthiest, and the most forward-looking of all her commonwealths. But while her face is toward the future and she is throbbing with a new and expanding industrial and commercial life, she is yet loyal to Southern traditions and ideals and unashamed of the past record of our people. Never has she shown any disposition to truckle to secure Northern recognition and favors. The atmosphere that envelops her is a most wholesome one in which to rear and train the sons and daughters of our Church and of the South.

And the new university is especially fortunate in having had Bishop Candler placed at its head. The institution has been planned somewhat after the type of the British universities, a Chancellor, a President, and Deans of the various departments being provided for in the form of government that is to be put in operation. The Chancellor will not be charged with administrative details, but with the general oversight and the public representation of the institution. Though he protested against being named for the position, Bishop Candler's fellow-commissioners unanimously elected him to this responsible office and he has consented to serve, at least until the next General Conference, as the work will not materially interfere with his episcopal duties. This gives to the school now being cradled as its leader one of the strongest and most resourceful men in world-wide Methodism. The fact that his hand is on the helm is a guarantee that the work of establishing the university will be carried forward with wisdom and energy, that no questionable alignments of any kind will be made in securing funds, and that religion will be anchored deeply in its very foundation and given its rightful place in all its affairs—that it will be in every department, from the highest to the lowest, a thoroughly and unchangeably Christian institution.

Let it also be particularly noted that Mr. Asa Candler states that this property will be so deeded to the Church that it can never be wrested from her. She will own and control it, and no little coterie of men will, with supercilious airs, insist that she is incompetent to govern it and that they must perform that service for her. And we dare say that the school will soon make such headway that never again will any man have the effrontery to hand out such twaddle as that an institution controlled by the Church can never be anything "but a poor little Methodist college."

With the Southern Methodist University at Dallas going steadily forward upon a scale that challenges universal admiration, and the new institution at Atlanta so magnificently launched, never was the educational outlook so bright for Southern Methodism as it is to-day. God is surely with us, and if we will only be loyal to him, there is every reason to believe that he will do great things for us in the future. The contentions of those who insisted that the Church would suffer an irreparable loss if she did not hang on to Vanderbilt University under the humiliating conditions imposed by the Tennessee Supreme Court have been utterly disproved, and the wisdom of the course pursued by the General Conference has been abundantly vindicated.

Surely this should be a happy time with loyal Southern Methodists everywhere. It seems to have been such with the members of the Educational Commission at their recent meeting, as is shown by the following extract from a letter written by one of the most distinguished of them soon after their adjournment. "If an institution was ever born under the power of the Holy Spirit, this surely was. Such a scene as that in the Commission yesterday I never saw before. A baptism of the Spirit fell upon us like that of Pentecost. It was a marvelous hour."

But let us not lose sight of the fact that, splendid and inspiring as is the progress that has been made, the work of establishing our university has only been begun. Two million dollars is not enough to equip and endow it; we need at least that much more. Every Methodist east of the Mississippi River, rich and poor, should resolve to have a part in this great enterprise which means so much to the Church. None should fail to give it his hearty support and contribute to it all that he can. In view of the situation created by Mr. Carnegie and the Vanderbilt Board of Trust in their subtle assault upon our educational system, we have, as a denomination, no duty which is at present quite so urgent and imperative as this. Doubtless, rallies will be held at all the Annual Conferences and every one will be given a chance to help the cause. And we confidently expect to see our people make such a response to these appeals as will attest their devotion to the Church and form one of the brightest chapters in its thrilling and unsurpassed history.

"THE SOUTH WAS RIGHT."

This is the subject of a brilliant essay lately issued in an attractive pamphlet of 67 pages, by the Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D., of Columbia, S. C. Dr. Steel is as eloquent and entertaining with his pen as he is with his tongue, and in this discussion he is at his best. He has made a careful study of the causes that led to "the War for the Union," which he insists is the proper name for the memorable conflict that took place in the Sixties, and he justifies the course of the South in that titanic struggle in an argument that is masterful and convincing. This booklet ought to be read by every Southern youth, and it would be a fine thing if it could be placed in the history courses of our public schools. Dixie is fortunate in having so able and scintillating a defender as this gifted ex-Mississippian, whose every heart-beat is loyal to her, and who as an orator ranks with Lamar, Ben Hill, and Charles B. Galloway. May he live long to shiver a lance in her behalf when he thinks it is necessary! The price of this little volume is 50 cents and it may be had of the author. Send for a copy.

WHOLESOME DOCTRINE.

The following recently appeared as a telegraphic dispatch in the St. Louis (Mo.) Republic: "Pettie Springs, Mo., July 7.—The annual meeting of the State Epworth League of the Southern Methodist Church convened this morning. 'Popular Amusements' was the subject of an address by Rev. C. M. Aker. Card playing, dancing, and theaters, including picture shows, he said, caused the youth of the land to be led from the Church and tended to cause them to look upon the religion of their fathers as a worn-out creed. He advised the 400 young delegates present to take up active Church work instead. Members were told to use their time to help their fellow-men in distress instead of passing their days in idle games and dances."

We regard this as sound and wholesome teaching. Nothing could be more foolish than the widespread notion that life is a gala-day to be spent in pleasure-seeking. On the contrary, it is a serious thing to live and men and women are called upon to do something higher and nobler than merely to try to have a good time. The present age is mad on the subject of amusements, and some even insist that the Church should regard fun-making as one of her chief functions. When did the Master ever do anything of the sort? Occasional innocent pastimes are well enough, but they should not come too often or be too long continued. The Wise Man said in the long ago, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting," and one of the inspired writers who contributed to the making of the New Testament wrote, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." Blessed is he who finds his highest joys in a ministry of helpful service to his needy and suffering fellow-men!

MR. ASA CANDLER'S MAGNIFICENT GIFT.

By his gift of $1,000,000 to our Church for the cause of Christian education, Mr. Asa Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., has placed Southern Methodists under a great debt of obligation to him. Such a splendid benefaction is unprecedented in the South where large fortunes are almost unknown. And certainly no philanthropist anywhere has been inspired by higher motives in giving his money, or ever gave to a worthier cause at a more opportune time. Robbed of an institution which she had been instrumental in founding and had largely built up with her patronage, through the connivance of a man who apparently tried to use his money to influence the Court and who sneered insultingly at the cause of denominational education, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, refusing to be bought or intimidated, had set her hand resolutely to the task of trying to repair her shattered educational system as best she could. She did not shrink from the struggle before her, though she realized that it might be a long and trying one. But fortunately Mr. Candler in his great generosity has come to her relief and has made comparatively easy what otherwise might have been an exceedingly difficult undertaking.

And in doing this he has shown his deep love for his Church and erected to himself an imperishable monument. Bearing a distinguished name that is known and honored throughout the South, he has rendered it still more illustrious by his large munificence. The generations to come will be richly blessed by the investment that he has made and will revere and cherish his memory for decades and centuries after he has passed from this earthly stage of action. May the benisons of Heaven continue to fall upon his pathway, and may he long be spared to serve his Church and country!

The letter in which Mr. Candler announced his noble gift breathes the loftiest sentiments and shows the fine spirit and majestic measure of the man. A saner and worthier utterance we have never anywhere seen. It ought to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of the Methodists of the South and cause them to rally enthusiastically to the support of this great and indispensable enterprise of the Church, to which Mr. Candler has given such a forward impetus.

In estimating the character of a man, no testimony is entitled to so much weight as that of his home people. On another page we have reproduced largely what the Atlanta Constitution had to say concerning this distinguished son of Georgia in commenting upon his generous benefaction, and we will close this brief editorial with a quotation from the Atlanta Journal of July 17:

"Never has a Southern community had a citizen more alert to its high interests, or more loyal to public endeavor. Truly, he has regarded his measure of wealth as 'a sacred trust,' and has dedicated it freely to the advancement of great ideals. Mr. Candler's gift to the university crowns a long series of liberal donations. He has contributed a hundred thousand dollars or more to Emory College, and some two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the Wesley Memorial Church and Hospital; he gave generously to Agnes Scott College, Oglethorpe University and to kindred institutions; he was among the strongest supporters of the successful campaign to build a worthy Y. M. C. A. in Atlanta; he has aided practically every public enterprise advanced in this city; and beyond his known charities, stretches an innumerable throng of good deeds of which only he and those he has helped are aware. Always in a spirit of modesty, shrinking from public praise, as unostentatious as liberal, Mr. Candler has devoted his talents and means to human betterment. It is upon such men that the greatness of Atlanta abides, and in the hearts of such men the destiny of the South is secure."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Delhi (La.) Progress of July 18 says: "Rev. V. D. Skipper preached an excellent sermon last Sunday to a large congregation."

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. W. H. Saunders, the pulpit of our church at Fernwood, Miss., was filled at 11 a.m. on Sunday, July 12, by Rev. J. B. Stepp, of McComb, Miss.

Brother G. H. Lauderdale, of McCool, Miss., brought us under obligations to him last week for a club of subscriptions. He may be assured that we appreciate this service rendered the Conference organ.

Rev. T. W. Holloman, of Alexandria, is one of the most active and useful laymen in the Louisiana Conference. He has lately been assisting in raising the collections for missions in the near-by pastoral charges.

Miss Martha Nutt, the head missionary at St. Mark's Hall of this city, is now away on her summer vacation, which she is spending in Colorado. She expects to return to New Orleans and take up her work again in August.

In a brief note, written from Seminary, Miss., on the 18th inst., Rev. T. J. Norsworthy says: "The interest in the meeting here deepens with every service. I will begin a series of services at Union, Miss., on the night of July 22."

Ex-United States Senator Murphy, J. Foster has been appointed by President Wilson Collector of Customs at New Orleans, which is a responsible and remunerative position. Mr. Foster is a member of our church at Franklin, La.

The pastors in the Alexandria District have received this year up to the present date about 500 members into the Church. The revival campaign is now on in earnest in several of the charges, and doubtless this number will soon be largely increased.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, the President, has written a letter to all the pastors and presiding elders of the two Mississippi Conferences, requesting their co-operation in securing pupils for Millsaps College. Give him your prompt and earnest assistance, brethren. This is your work, as well as his.

Mr. J. F. H. Barbee, of Memphis, Tenn., who recently went to Cleveland, Ohio, to consult medical specialists about his health, was operated on for appendicitis there on July 15. We are happy to know that he passed through the ordeal in good shape and has promise of a speedy recovery.

We are informed that the Seashore Camp Meeting this year, at which Dr. S. H. Werlein did the largest share of the preaching, was one of the best that has been held at that historic campground in several years. Believers were edified and strengthened and there were a number of conversions.

The Oakdale (La.) church has been made a station and plans are under way to build a parsonage there in the near future. Elizabeth, the other appointment on the Oakdale work, as it has heretofore been constituted, has been connected with the Oakdale Mission, which has been raised to a circuit.

Mrs. J. R. Bew, a most estimable lady of Greenwood, Miss., and an esteemed member of our Church in that city, died in Knoxville, Tenn., last week, where she was visiting relatives. Her remains were brought to Greenwood for interment, the obsequies being conducted by Rev. J. E. Cunningham.

Rev. B. F. Bullard, of Sturgis, Miss., is having success in his work. Children's Day has been observed at all four of his churches and he is pleased with the general outlook in his charge. Brother Bullard is remembering the Advocate in his rounds, and favored us with several subscriptions a few days since.

Mrs. E. T. Clark, of Cleveland, Miss., and a party of friends have recently spent some time at Biloxi, Miss., enjoying the breezes of the Gulf. Mrs. Clark is the district secretary of the woman's missionary work in the Greenville District and is making her influence strongly felt in developing that important arm of service.

In forwarding some subscriptions to the Advocate, for which he has our hearty thanks, Rev. T. J. Hopper, of Cedar Bluff, Miss., adds: "My first meeting of the season will be held at Pheba, with Rev. L. F. Parrish, of Sylacauga, Ala., to do the preaching. We ask your readers to pray for the success of these services."

Read what Dr. R. H. Wynn has to say concerning the work at Centenary College on another page. Do not, however, stop with merely reading, but send him instantan a check for the worthy causes for which he asks assistance. We do not know a school anywhere that is more deserving than Centenary, or which is serving the Church more faithfully.

We regret to learn that Mrs. D. B. Brannon, of Winborn, La., has recently been quite ill, but are pleased to know that she is now better. In renewing her subscription to the Advocate, Sister Brannon takes time to tell of the pleasure and comfort she derives in reading it from week to week. We receive many such letters, which encourage us not a little.

Rev. C. V. Breithaupt writes: "In my article on 'The Houma Mission,' which appeared in the Advocate last week, it was stated that our people have 'to supplement what we get from the Board of Missions by about $60 to keep the work going.' The figures should have been $600. I do not know whether the mistake existed in my copy, or was made by the printers."

We are informed that Dr. H. G. Henderson, our pastor at Lexington, Miss., is receiving congratulations on his election to a professorial chair in Millsaps College. It is not Dr. Henderson, but Professor H. G. Henderson who has been thus honored. Perhaps it was because they knew of his superior qualifications that the correspondents of the former fell so easily into this error.

We have received from Dr. T. C. Wier, of Starkville, Miss., a brief account of his recent labors among the brethren, which will appear in the next issue of the Advocate. Dr. Wier, in a personal note to the Editor, says: "I am glad to be able to do some work for the Church and our blessed Lord." No choicer spirit than this veteran itinerant ever served in the North Mississippi Conference.

The district parsonage of the Alexandria (La.) District will soon be in splendid condition, having had about $1000 expended upon it in improvements. We do not know anyone who works harder to extend the Master's cause than Presiding Elder May, and who more richly deserves a comfortable domicile for himself and his loved ones. It is not in every diocese that the people are so kind to their district superintendent.

From the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News of July 18, we take the following: "Rev. A. L. Davis, his daughter, Mrs. W. G. Henry, and her four little boys, will leave next Thursday for Sans Souci, a delightful resting place on Trinity Mountain, of the Appalachian range. It is not far from Decatur, in North Alabama. In addition to the fine climate, they expect while there to enjoy the pleasant association of kindred and old-time friends."

Dr. J. M. Henry, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, occupied the pulpit of the Parker Memorial Church of this city last Sunday both in the morning and evening, and delivered two impressive and helpful discourses. Rev. R. H. Harper spent the Sabbath in Bogalusa, where he went to preach in the absence of the pastor, Rev. L. I. McCain, whose health is not good and who is recuperating in the West.

Writing from Brookhaven, Miss., on July 17, Rev. L. E. Alford, the new financial agent of Whitworth College, says: "You may state that the old Brown House, which has long been a familiar structure on our campus, has been torn down and that work on the new brick dormitory and administration building is now proceeding rapidly. The concrete foundation will have been finished by the close of this week."

Mr. James Faulk, of Leakesville, Miss., writes: "The Carradine meeting opened here on Friday, July 10, and will continue 10 days as announced. The services are being conducted in the neat Methodist Protestant Church, which was erected about six years ago. Dr. Carradine is preaching with characteristic power, the attendance is good, and the altar is often crowded. People from the several churches of the town are co-operating in the meeting."

Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Pickens, Miss., says: "We have just closed a fine district conference at Goodman. The Holy Spirit was manifest from the beginning to the close. We really had a spiritual feast. Brother Shipman makes a splendid Bishop in a district conference." How would it do to run him for the episcopacy when the next General Conference meets? We heard it said at Oklahoma City that "Bishop timber" is getting to be very scarce.

From Weir, Miss., Rev. J. M. Wyatt, under date of July 18, writes: "Brother J. G. Irving of this place passed away yesterday at 3 o'clock p. m. His influence was continually felt for good. How we shall miss him!" Brother Irving was indeed a worthy and useful man, who loved the Church and did what he could to promote the success of its work. We regret to be informed of his death, and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to the bereaved.

Mrs. J. A. Randolph and her daughter, Mrs. McDonald, are spending the summer months at Waynesville, N. C., where they are delightfully situated and are greatly enjoying the mountain breezes. It will be remembered that they were in New Orleans from last January until June with Mr. V. P. Randolph, a son of Brother and Sister J. A. Randolph, who was graduated in medicine from Tulane University at the last Commencement of that institution.

We clip the following from the Lexington

(Miss.) Advertiser of July 17: "The new pipe organ ordered by the Methodist Church at this place has arrived, and the Pitcher Pipe Organ Builders of Louisville, Ky., through their expert representatives, are installing it at present. It is hoped that it will be completed in time for the quarterly conference service next Wednesday evening, when Rev. W. S. Shipman, the presiding elder of the Durant District, will preach."

Rev. C. H. Ellis sends us the following note from Camden, Miss.: "Our meeting at Shiloh closed at noon on Friday, July 10. The attendance was small at first, but increased to the last service. A good interest was developed, and the membership of our church at that place was raised from 12 to 17. Brother Chisolm had no ministerial help; I could not be with him on account of the illness of my dear wife. We are still hoping to have the joy of her presence with us on the charge; but if God should say otherwise, we can both say from our hearts, 'Good is the will of the Lord.'"

Brother and Sister W. H. Saunders of Fernwood, Miss., brought their babe, which was very ill, to New Orleans last week and placed her in the Presbyterian Hospital, where she was treated by Dr. Fenner. The little one began to improve very quickly and Sister Saunders returned home with her last Monday afternoon, feeling that she was safely on the road to recovery. Brother Saunders was in the city until Friday, July 17, when he was forced to leave to be present at his quarterly conference, which was held last Saturday and Sunday by Rev. Robert Selby, presiding elder of the Brookhaven District.

Mr. J. F. Miller, Principal of the Pinola (Miss.) High School, writes as follows: "I have heard Rev. E. L. Whiddon's lecture on 'White Slavery' twice, and I strongly endorse his exposition of this important subject. It is full, practical, and forceful. I am a Presbyterian, doing high school work here, and can say that he handles his theme in a clean manner, so that no woman or girl need fear that anything immodest or improper will be said." Brother Whiddon is now lecturing in Texas, and will in the near future visit his parents who reside in the Lone Star State.

From Anacoco, La., on July 19, Rev. T. H. Morris, our pastor at Mansfield, La., wrote as follows: "I am here assisting Brother J. E. Napper in a series of services at the Holly Grove Church. The outlook is for a good meeting; we expect to close on July 24. Our quarterly conference at Mansfield will be held on July 26 and 27, after which I shall take a vacation, my board of stewards having given me the time and a bunch of friends the money to do so. They insist that I shall have a real rest. I will go to my daughter's home near Mexico, Mo., to spend the month of August, laying down all work for the first time in my life. Mansfield is still the best charge in the Louisiana Conference."

Mr. Gid D. Harris, an esteemed member of our Church at Columbus, Miss., went to Athens, Ga., a short time since, to receive a diploma from the University of Georgia, where he was a student at the outbreak of the Civil War and entered the Confederate Army before completing his course, never returning to finish it. The University decided last year to confer degrees upon the young men who left its halls to fight for their country, and who were thus deprived of an opportunity to complete their education. In Mr. Harris' case, when his diploma was presented, particular mention was made of his college record and attention was called to the fact that fifty-five members of the Harris family had been graduated from the University, and that five of them had served on the Board of Trustees.

Our congregation at Clarksdale, Miss., has launched an enterprise to erect a $40,000 church, and Mr. Galsford, a skillful architect of Memphis, has been ordered to submit plans for the new edifice, which is expected to be patterned after an old English church built about eight hundred years ago. Clarksdale is growing very rapidly, many very handsome buildings having been projected lately, and our Methodist people there feel that they must keep up with the march of progress that is going so steadily on in their community. Our pastor in this progressive Delta city is Rev. W. S. Lsgrone, who is truly a workman that "needeth not to be ashamed." Brother Lagrone is now conducting his evening services in the open air, at which he discourses to audiences passing the 300 mark, some of whom never attend preaching in a house of worship.

PEWS FOR SALE.

The officers of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, are anxious to sell the pews which are in the old church building to make room for chairs. The building is now being used for a Sunday school and pews are unsuited for the purpose. The pews are made of oak, and are in good condition. Any one interested will please communicate with Rev. J. G. Snelling, the pastor, or Mr. A. H. Ahten, Station B, New Orleans, La.

JAMES S. FORREST was born in Harrison County, Miss., July 7, 1850, and died in New Orleans, La., on May 29, 1914. He was buried in Springfield, La., on May 30, with Rev. W. Rounds officiating at the grave. Farewell, my precious brother. I hope to meet you one day, in the beautiful, the glad forever. His sister, M. E. FAYARD.

NOEL B. NORWOOD, Jr., infant son of Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Norwood was born in Metairie, La., in November, 1913, and died July 2, 1914. Noel was a bright, beautiful little boy and was loved by all who knew him. He was sick about three weeks and during that time all was done for him that loving hands and kind friends could do, but God knew best. From the garden of this world a beautiful bud has been transplanted to bloom in the Paradise of God. His little life was short in this world, but very precious to those who loved him, and the memory of the sweet little fellow will be fondly cherished by his parents and relatives. We well know that it is not the longest life that always does the most good. May the God of all grace bless the heart-broken father and mother, and may they look forward to the time when they shall be with their darling baby boy again. Let us think of the words of our dear Lord, "Suffer the little ones to come unto me and forbid them not."
C. B. POWELL, P. C.

ALFRED HASTY LACY was born in Rankin County, Miss., on Aug. 5, 1840, and spent the most of his life in that county. In the year 1850 he joined the Christian (Campbellite) Church, and so far as the writer has been able to ascertain lived a consistent life as a member of that Church. He was always cheerful and never lost his faith in the moral and financial conditions in the world about him. "Uncle Al" as all knew him, lived to the ripe old age of 73 years 11 months and 2 days, when his death came suddenly on July 7, 1914. He was driving to see some of his relatives when his horse became unmanageable and threw him to the ground, the fall resulting in paralysis from his shoulder down. He served his country in the Civil War, and at the close of the warfare of life peacefully laid down his weapons to await the time when all soldiers must report. There being no minister of his faith available, the writer conducted the funeral services at the request of his loved ones, after which he was laid to rest by the Masonic body of which he was a respected member, at Braxton, Miss. "Gone but not forgotten."
W. B. WALDROP.

A. P. SMITH, Sr., was born Aug. 20, 1843. He went into the Civil War at the age of 18, and served four years. He was first married to Miss Laura Wright in 1865. He was married the second time to Miss Fannie E. Chambers, and his third marriage was to Miss Jennie Phamber, in 1891. Six children survive him all of whom were born to him by his second wife. It was my privilege to associate with Brother Smith for nearly four years. I learned to love him because of his true, noble Christian character. His home was the preacher's home, and the Holy Bible was his constant companion. As long as he was able to go about he was kept on the official board, and he was a faithful steward always attending the quarterly conferences. This good man passed away May 16, 1914. His remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Pisgah Chapel where he had been a member for years. May God's blessing rest upon the dear family is my prayer.

P. N. SWEENEY.

CLAUDIE BUCKLEY FOXWORTH was born in Marion County, Miss., on May 22, 1876, and departed this life on April 27, 1914. He lived on the old homestead until about 12 years ago. He then moved to the little town of Hub about two miles from the place of his birth. Here he built a good home, where he lived till the time of his death. He joined the M. E. Church, South, about twenty-five years ago, and was a consistent member of that church as long as he lived. He was a regular attendant at church and a noble supporter of its work. The writer only knew him for a few months, but found him to be a true friend to his pastor. His schoolmates and those who knew him best say that he was always a good boy. Many have said a better man never lived. In his death the Church at Hub has lost one of its best members, and the pastor one of his best friends. I visited him a number of times during his illness. He was weak, and the nurse would not allow him to talk much, but he always asked me to read to him from the Word of God, the Book that had been his guide so long. He bore his sickness with the patience none but a Christian could. He was married to Miss Ida Regan on Oct. 13, 1895. Of this happy union were born three sons. His was a happy home, and he was a loving husband, a kind and affectionate father, who loved his family and his home. Brother Foxworth leaves a sorrowing wife, two sons, three brothers, five sisters and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Weep not, sorrowing ones. We hope to meet him again in the sweet by and by where sad partings come no more. His Pastor,

IN MEMORIAM.

Thomas J. Porter was born near Kosciusko, Miss., March 27, 1847, and went to rest from the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. P. Morris, in St. Louis, Mo., May 17, 1914. The remains being interred at Zwolle, La. Most of his life was spent in Louisiana, in the parishes of Red River, Natchitoches and Sabine. He was married on Feb. 10, 1876, to Miss Alabama Hopkins, their union having been blest with seven children, five of whom, with his faithful wife, survive him. In 1868 on the Beulah Camp Ground in Natchitoches Parish, he was converted. He joined the M. E. Church, South, and was elected a steward when but a boy, which office he filled for many years, riding as many as forty miles a day collecting quaterage, and seldom failing to attend the quarterly or district conference. During the latter years of his life he was greatly afflicted, but bore his sufferings with a sublime patience that was born of an unfaltering faith in Romans 8:28, which was one of his favorite texts. His acceptance with God was, for a number of years, a conscious, living reality, and he welcomed the thought of the transition to his heavenly home.

When, after a year's separation, the writer entered his room during his last illness, a radiant smile illuminated his emaciated countenance, and he joyfully exclaimed, "Son, I'm ready to die." His life gradually ebbed away until on a Sabbath afternoon he peacefully breathed his last, and went to meet the God he had so faithfully served for almost a half century.

We who are left behind, though lonely, sorrow not, but rejoice in the rich heritage of faith and patience he has bequeathed us, resolved to so emulate his godly example that we may be reunited on the celestial shore. His first born son,
S. HOPKINS PORTER.

Tidings From the Field

Oxford, Miss.

Things are moving along very nicely at Oxford. Brother E. S. Lewis is in great favor here with all the people. We Methodists are looking forward to a season of refreshing at the old Oxford Camp Ground. Our annual camp meeting begins there on the first Sunday in August. We are having the severest drouth at this time this country has ever known. Farmers are very much discouraged, but it takes the drouth to make us truly grateful for the bounteous harvests.—Mrs. Fount Callaway.

First Church, Memphis.

Memphis has been hot for six weeks. Really, the city is dry. We have had very little rain for eight weeks, and I am informed by several gentlemen that there is less whiskey sold in Memphis now than ever before. First Church is moving along in pretty good style. At present a large number of my people are away, but we have enough left to make it interesting. During the three years and eight months I have been here, I have received 1155 into the Church, and our present membership is 1887. On a recent Sunday 27 States were represented in the congregation. It is an enormous task to keep up with this large membership. They are scattered all over the city. I try to visit all the sick, the strangers, and push the delinquents. I find city work quite strenuous, and sometimes I feel that I need to be four men at least, one to preach, one to respond to calls for help, and two to keep up with the work during the week. Fortunately, the Church is well organized, and I have a large number of faithful men and women who are always ready to help. Just as I am getting my hands fully on the situation, my time is out and I must go. With the temperature soaring up into the nineties, one longs for a cool spot far away from telephones and street cars.—T. W. Lewis.

Memphis, Tenn., July 10, 1914.

Hollandale, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Doubtless many Methodists over the State and all former pastors of the Hollandale Church will be elated over the fact that the Methodists here are in the near future to have a new modern brick Church, costing about $6000. The old wooden structure, which has been in use for over twenty years, will be torn away and sold to make room for the beautiful new building. It is strikingly beautiful to see the unity of spirit and the harmony which have characterized every movement in the building of this edifice. There has not been a dissenting voice or an ill-spoken word to mar the enthusiasm of the projectors. Our lovable and untiring pastor, Rev. L. W. Cain, put the wheels in motion, with the earnest co-operation of our beloved presiding elder, Rev. H. S. Spragins. The entire membership is standing loyally behind every movement, not only supporting the enterprise with loyalty and earnestness, but with their means also. We are going to have this beautiful new Church at an early date. We are also going to have a great dedication then, and, Mr. Editor, we extend to you, right now, a cordial invitation to be present. The following compose the Building Committee: R. J. Moseley, president; J. B. Drew, treasurer; E. E. McKinny, secretary; F. H. Russell, J. D. White. A committee to solicit funds has been appointed by the president of the board and already a handsome sum has been subscribed.—J. D. White.

A TRIP TO A FORMER CHARGE.

Under the three years' pastorate of Rev. Timothy V. Peters, that indefatigable and successful pastor of the St. Tammany Circuit, it has grown from a struggling mission to a splendid well-organized charge. Brother Peters is one of our growing young men, and is destined to make his mark and do a great work for the Church. He is completing his seventh year in the itinerant work, having previous to his present pastorate successfully finished a quadrennium on the Slidell charge. His present charge is in a prosperous condition: several new houses of worship have been built, a number of revivals have been held and the membership has increased considerably. The writer at the instance and urgent invitation of the pastor and his good people, recently held a meeting at Waldheim (formerly known as Tallsheek), which was a spiritual uplift to the church and a blessing to the community. It was my good fortune and privilege to have been pastor of this charge during the first year of my membership in the Conference, and it was indeed an enjoyable and pleasant time that I spent there during the meeting. Old friendships were renewed and new acquaintances formed.

I will say to my brethren, that while I am for the present in the local ranks on account of my health (which however, has greatly improved), I am ready to meet all calls for service in the Master's cause, as my life is dedicated to his work.

ALADIN R. HOFFPAUR.

Estherwood, La., July 13, 1914.

FROM BROTHER HENRY.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am writing to inform you of my father's death—Robert Fillmore Henry. I feel sure that many of my friends are not apprised of that fact. He had many friends in the North Mississippi Conference, as he lived in Alabama just east of Columbus. He lived in great peace of heart and died in full assurance of faith. We buried him in Columbus, Miss., in the lot where three generations of the Henrys are buried. My grandfather lived and died in Columbus, and my father was born there but moved to Alabama at the close of the Civil War. My brother, Dr. T. H. Henry, now lives there and is a member of Brother Duren's church. Methodism in Jackson is vigorous and progressive. Brother Hardin and the other pastors seem to watch every opportunity to further our interests. I am now planning to have an Advocate Day in the autumn. Selah! I hope to put many more subscribers on the list for our own sake. W. G. HENRY, Pastor.

Jackson, Miss.

This is the way to do a good day's work: Begin it with God; do all in the name of the Lord Jesus and for the glory of God; count nothing common or unclean in itself—it can be so only when the motive of your life is low. Be not content with eye service, but as servants of God do everything from the heart and for His "Well done." Ask Him to kindle and maintain in your heart the loftiest motives and be as men which watch for the coming of the Master of the house.—F. B. Meyer.

AT LIBERTY.

Liberty is a little chapel four miles out from Kosciusko, Miss. This little chapel is well located and is built on the bungalow plan. It will indeed be a little gem after the finishing touches are put on. How this work has been accomplished, the good Lord only knows.

Last fall, Brother Curtis, the Kosciusko station pastor, went out and held a meeting for these neglected people and started the building spirit, which was crystallized under the able leadership of the new pastor, Brother Gladney. More of this going out into the surrounding country by our station pastors and developing the neglected districts into organized and working bodies would no doubt largely enrich the kingdom and Methodism.

This elder had the privilege and pleasure of three first things at Liberty last Saturday and Sunday. I held the first quarterly conference ever held there last Saturday, and preached their first night sermon Saturday night. The Church was well lighted, too. And Sunday morning I had the pleasure of attending and taking part in their first Children's Day program. The children had been trained by Miss Angie B. Hannah and Mrs. Bertram Ray. How they did so well, with only a week in which to train them, is one of the wonders that this elder has found. All honor to these good women! The special feature of the program was a Cradle Roll number—a real cradle with a real live baby in it. I rather think it was his first appearance on the stage, because he was mighty short and tiny.

Surely other people and country churches should take courage; for the accomplishment of such things at this place a year ago was unthinkable, and there is no telling whereunto this thing may grow.

W. S. SHIPMAN.

THE TROUBLE IS NOT INSIDE.

The myriads of parasitic germs which cause Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc., cannot be killed internally. They live and feed on the surface and must there be treated. Tetterine is the common sense treatment that has scientific principles to back it up. E. A. Kennedy, druggist of Brooklyn, Fla., says: "Tetterine has cured quickly and permanently several stubborn cases of tetter that came under my personal knowledge. One of 15 years standing." ## A NOTE FROM BROTHER NORSWORTHY.

Dear Mr. Editor: On last Sunday, July 12, we began, in Seminary, Miss., with Rev. J. S. Parker, a revival campaign which promises large results for the Kingdom of God. From the very beginning, the interest has been good. Large and enthusiastic congregations have attended all the services, and the splendid new church has been taxed to its utmost capacity, and on several occasions has been entirely inadequate to accommodate the throngs who have attended the services. I was informed that a hundred persons were turned away from the doors last night because of the crowded condition of the house. Up to date (Friday afternoon, the 17th), 26 persons have given their names for membership in the Church, and the good work goes on. Brother Parker and his faithful and most capable wife are abundant in labors and enjoy the love and confidence of the people of the town.

On the night of July 5 we closed a meeting with our good friend, C. C. Griffin, in Carthage, away out in the "Free State of Leake" County. The meeting there, while not specially fruitful in visible results, was very enjoyable, and was, notwithstanding the unusually hot weather which prevailed over the country at that time, attended by large congregations.

Brother Griffin, the pastor at Carthage, is in high favor with his people, who as an expression of their appreciation of him and his good wife, gave the parsonage a heavy pounding during the meeting, and presented the pastor with a "silver offering" at the close of the campaign. Brother Griffin is said, by his most intelligent people, to be among the very best preachers Carthage has had.

"TRI-MU" CLASS AT McCOMB.

A postal card has just been received from Mrs. T. B. Clifford, wife of our pastor at Centenary Church at McComb, in which she says that she has organized an adult Bible Class, the local name for which is "Tri-Mu," meaning "to develop the three sides of one's nature, muscle, mind and morals." It is a mixed class numbering about sixty members. On a recent Sabbath there were forty members present and a collection of $5.35 was taken. The average attendance to date has been over thirty and the local papers are used freely for items of interest from the class. This is a good work, and the results will be incalculable. We thank Sister Clifford for this newsy letter.

Chairman, Sunday School Board.

MODERATION THE LAW OF HEALTH.

Every good thing under the sun is capable of being abused and is abused by a limited number of people. Physicians tell us that too much food and too little food are the most common causes of disease. Too much exercise produces one class of ailments while too little exercise produces another. Too much sunshine is about as bad as too little sunshine and too much bathing as bad as no bathing at all. Too much meat causes one class of diseases, too little meat, another. Too much vegetable food results in hardening of the blood vessels, while too little causes rickets. Too much or too little sugar in your food and too much or too little water will sooner or later give rise to trouble.

All foods and drinks are poisonous and all forms of recreation are injurious when indulged in to excess. Moderation is the law of health; intemperance the cause of disease.

Many of our freak notions about diet have resulted from a false interpretation of what we have observed in reference to the abuse of various foods and drinks. The vegetarian observed injurious effects from the use, or rather the abuse, of meats and so he eats only vegetables. A Chicago professor observed the bad effects of too frequent bathing and so he goes to the other extreme and teaches that bathing is injurious. And so it is with Coca Cola, coffee and tea. They are good, in fact, they are decidedly the best of all beverages, and according to the highest authorities are positively beneficial to health. Coca Cola, being free from tannic acid and the other acrid vegetable substances that are found in tea and coffee, is especially refreshing and helpful. But the gourmandizer could abuse Coca Cola just as he abuses meat and other foods.

Those who enjoy Coca Cola will be interested to know that Dr. Schmeideberg of Strassburg, Germany, the greatest living authority on pharmacology, states that from seven to fourteen glasses may be used throughout the day without any injurious effects so far as the quantity of caffeine is concerned. He says:

"Rather might the amount of liquid and of sugar taken at the same time prove injurious by impairment of the digestive activity of the stomach. As a matter of fact, such large quantities of the beverage will rarely, if ever, be taken. Most consumers will undoubtedly limit themselves to less. In such cases injury is entirely out of the question."

If you would like to read the expert opinions of the world's leading scientists, proving the wholesomeness of Coca Cola as a food product and its beneficial effect in refreshing mind and body write for free literature which will be sent, postpaid, on request. ## YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish that I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read this one carefully and then give me a chance to make you write me one very much like it. Here is the letter:

701 Barnard Street,
Savannah, Ga., Dec. 28, 1910.
Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.:
Dear Sir—As you are aware, in 1909, I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders, and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation, was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M.D.

This is not a selected case, nor the result unusual. It is only one of the thousands I receive. They come from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may be—dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, or any chronic ailment due to impure blood—I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you simply say so, return the empty demijohns, and I will promptly and willingly refund your money—every cent. Sign below:
Shivar Spring,
Box 17B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Address.....

(Please write distinctly.)

Note:—The Advertising Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is personally acquainted with Mr. Shivar. You run no risk whatever in accepting his offer. I have personally witnessed the remarkable curative power of this Water in a very serious case.

A YANKEE VETERAN'S STORY.

"My entire body," writes Thos. Larkin, Soldier's National Home, Maine, "was broken out with some peculiar skin disease, and I thought sure I would never find a cure for it. But after making a few applications of Gray's Ointment I began to improve, and being encouraged continued its use until now I am entirely cured.
Words are inadequate to express my gratitude." Gray's Ointment is older than the veteran who wrote this. For 93 years it has been a priceless boon to sufferers from skin troubles—blood sores, boils, ulcers, festering wounds, etc. 25c at drug stores. Write Dr. W.

INDIA'S MASS MOVEMENT—AN ANSWER TO PRAYER.

"From first to last, this task—the making of Christ known to all men—is a super-human work. Every other consideration and plan and emphasis is secondary to that of wielding the forces of prayer."—Edinburgh Conference.

Years before this report was given in Edinburgh our Indian Church had learned this lesson. The magnitude of the opportunities and the desperation of the opposition had driven our people to their knees. In the Meerut district, in which there has been, including parts later going into other districts, over 50,000 baptisms, there has been a daily covenant of prayer among the workers for over twelve years. They daily pray for each other, for their people becoming Christians, and for openings among the higher castes. I have been sending annual letters for years to Christian papers in England and America asking for God's Spirit to be poured out upon the Chamars, and God has answered until they are turning to Christ in such numbers that we have not workers to shepherd them. May I, under these circumstances, ask God's people to pray "The Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers?"

At our last Central Conference in 1912, when we had delegated representatives present, from all parts of the field, for a whole day all business was suspended and the whole Conference united in waiting upon God; and to the writer that was the greatest day of his life, because of the marvelous conscious presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The prayer was for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit during the years until the Central Conference would convene in 1916. Truly, God has answered that Day of Prayer.

It has for some years been the custom for our annual and district conferences to give up a day to waiting upon God in prayer. These in both annual and district conferences have come to be seasons of marvelous manifestations of spiritual power. Then in several conferences there are prayer cycles, in which names of all the missionaries are printed, and each are prayed for on a certain day in turn by all the members of the conference. Literature has been circulated on the prayer life.

Prayer First, is our Motto.

The revival or spiritual movement toward "higher ground" in the life and experience of our missionaries and Indian preachers has grown in power through these years of prayer, and is now in a wonderful manner reaching down among our village communities and bringing conviction of sin to those in higher castes. I would like to hear testimony to my personal conviction that the propelling and sustaining power of the Mass Movement in India is prayer.—Frank W. Warne, M. E. Church, India.

OUT-GOING MISSIONARIES.

After a year's furlough, Miss Lily A. Stradley, Director of Collegio Piracicabano, Brazil, returned to her work, having sailed on the steamship Vestris from New York on June 27. Miss Lochie Rankin and Miss Mildred Bomar will return to China on the Empress of Asia, sailing from Vancouver on September 3. Misses Louise Robinson, Nina Stallings and Sue Stanford, the new missionaries who were appointed to China, will accompany them.

GLEANINGS FROM THE AUXILIARIES.

Mrs. E. R. Kennedy writes of the Lafayette, La., Auxiliary: "Our Woman's Missionary Auxiliary is still alive and working even during this hot weather. We have 50 or 60 members and meet twice a month. Our last meeting was quite interesting, as we had several talks by the members on live topics of the day, besides the regular business session. The subjects discussed were: 'Civic League Work,' 'Cost of Crime,' 'Business and Prohibition,' and kindred topics. We expect another very interesting meeting in the near future, at which time we are to have a talk on 'Responsibility of the Voter,' another on 'Social Impurity,' and still another on 'The Chinese Women and Industry.' We also finish at our second meeting this month the little book entitled 'America, God's Melting Pot,' and commence the study of 'Mexico To-day,' by Dr. G. B. Winton. So you see, we are not altogether idle."

Mrs. W. S. Norwood, of the Second M. E. Church, South, New Orleans, writes: "Our Auxiliary has pledged $100 for missions this year. We have taken up the study of immigration. Have held monthly meetings with an average attendance of 15 to 18 out of a membership of 30. We will continue our meetings during the summer months, as the devil never takes a vacation, especially in this section of New Orleans. We make quarterly reports of our work and believe firmly in sending delegates to all board meetings and conventions. Our president is now on a vacation in Texas, but the work will continue under the capable management of Mrs. L. H. Hempke; and this is easy for her, for we all work with one accord, in one place, at one time."

MISSION OF THE BIBLE WOMEN.

In foreign fields the name "Bible Woman" is never applied to those whom we know as Bible women. They are known by a term which in the Chinese language literally translated, means "God's Word woman." This is an appropriate title, for it well expresses her object and mission in life, which is to carry the incarnate Word in her own heart to every one she meets and in every form that Jesus' can be expressed in human lives. She goes forth with her life-bearing, light-giving message in order that those receiving it may become the children of God. She goes forth daily visiting, first, for the pastor in the homes of the congregation, then for the schools, and also for the hospitals in the homes of the returned patients, to nurture the seed planted during their stay in the sick wards.

In addition to her Bible, she carries her hymn book, simple texts and verses, which are used for the comfort of the needy, and the pleasure of the children. She is a welcome visitor in the homes, for her gentleness and refinement appeal strongly to the tired, hungry, unsatisfied lives to whom she ministers.

Every Bible woman works under the direction of a foreign missionary who supervises her studies and plans her work. Weekly reports are made

"THE OLD RED MILL" TURNS CANE JUICE INTO DOLLARS

Most any Cane Mill will crush the cane, but the mill you want is the one that will grind out the most DOLLARS while it presses the juice.

You want a Cane Mill that is strong, light running, finely finished and economical in operation. You want a mill made by the Chattanooga Plow Co., a mill that's familiarly known wherever cane is grown, like THE OLD RED MILL, a mill which years of use has proved the best under all conditions and for all varieties of sugar cane and sorghum—the planter's standby.

Has steel shafts, almost no friction, steel set screws, which regulate pressure on rolls, preventing mashing at ends; patent bottoms preventing juice from wasting or getting in oil box; working parts enclosed; strongest, easy and economical to operate; most reasonable in price and so simple a child can run it.

Thousands in use—each one an actual proof of the superiority of "THE OLD RED MILL" over any mill made.

The Old Red Mill is always ready—always reliable—ranges in size from light one-horse to four-horse—and is correctly proportioned by proved principles.

Before you think of buying a cane mill write for our free catalogue describing the unequalled Chattanooga line. Write now and it will be sent you immediately, without one penny of cost to you. It contains clear and accurate illustrations and descriptions of our mills and tells just what to seek and what to avoid when buying cane mills of any make. Write to-day.

to the missionary in charge, of every visit made, every meeting held, and every tract distributed. The women either go out together, or in large groups with or without the foreign teacher. They hold neighborhood meetings in the home of some woman who has become interested and who invites her friends in.

Some of the older Bible women have charge of the country day schools. They minister to the sick, comfort the sorrowing, brighten the hopeless lives of the women who have absolutely nothing to do but live their aimless, despairing lives, and give the bread of life to hungry souls. God's blessings rest upon such labors.

THAT SPECIAL EDITION AGAIN.

Did you notice Dr. Meek's article entitled "Why Not?" in the Advocate of July 9? If you are really interested in this edition, we want it placed in the hands of every woman in our three Conferences. And, by the way, it is a most excellent time to begin the campaign for those 300 subscribers which you pledged several months ago. We haven't as yet heard of any new subscribers being secured from this source. Now, Dr. Meek was not canvassing for subscribers when he published his article, but we are. He has been very kind in boosting our special edition. Why should not we return this kindness by the most vigorous campaign we have ever participated in? Place the special edition in the hands of every woman in your church and thus gain friends for the mission cause as well as subscribers for the New Orleans Advocate. Lose no time in sending in your order for the number of extra copies you want.

THAT BOY OF YOURS.

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee, has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs, and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built and equipped and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the association with clean, high-minded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects in the men to whom it entrusts its greatest affairs, be they business, professional, religious or social.

Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. He is a graduate of Webb School, Bellbuckle, Tenn., and of Vanderbilt University.

The boy deserves your most careful thought. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee, to-day, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.—Advertisement.

A LETTER FROM BROTHER SWEENEY.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am glad to say I am still improving; and I feel that I will soon be restored to my accustomed health. I was so glad to get the dear old Advocate. It was like meeting a friend when I opened its pages. I will say right here, Doctor, that the New Orleans Christian Advocate has been coming into our home since my first recollection—fifty years; so I have a right to claim it as a dear companion.

The great Billy Sunday meeting closed last night. At least 12,000 people listened to the last sermon of the evangelist. His theme was, "Ye must be born again." Salvation is only found through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ. He makes no compromise whatever with sin. He is in the prohibition fight wherever he goes. The influence of this meeting will be a great help in putting this State among the dry States of our Union. He will hold another meeting at Denver in December, a short while before the election, at which time the prohibitionists expect to make a hard fight (and by the way the women vote in this State).

There were 4,238 conversions during the meeting. Three hundred and thirty-four professed conversion last night. The gospel has not lost its power to save. Among this number were all classes of men and women—lawyers, judges, doctors, merchants, traveling men—and of all ages. It was a great sight to see these people coming to the altar, shaking hands with the preacher, and asking for prayer that they might be saved.

A volunteer collection was taken yesterday and $6000 was raised. Mr. Sunday left this morning at 10 o'clock and 5000 people followed him and his party to the train.

My heart swells with gratitude as I think of my friends of the Wilson Circuit who have been so kind to me and my family, especially in rendering me such assistance as to get the very best treatment, I shall never forget my Baker and Ponchatoula friends. Brother Spiller, secretary of the Masonic Lodge, has just sent a kind remembrance from several of the brethren there, for which I am grateful. Oh, how these things gladden our hearts! I find the grace of God sufficient amid all my affliction. Yours in Him,

F. N. SWEENEY.

A STATEMENT FROM OUR EDUCATIONAL COMMISSION.

In the Episcopal Address to the General Conference held recently in Oklahoma City, the Bishops of our Church, after reciting the history of the loss of the Vanderbilt University, said: "We do not presume to indicate to you what course you should pursue to repair the loss which has been inflicted upon the Church. That is for the wisdom of the General Conference to determine, and we venture to express the opinion that our people will promptly supply whatever means you may judge necessary to make up for the institution which has been taken from the ownership and control of the Church. It is respectfully recommended that the whole matter be referred by the General Conference to a select committee to report what should be done as the case now stands." Accordingly, the General Conference appointed a committee, the final report of which was unanimously adopted, under the terms of which report the undersigned were appointed as a commission with specific instructions concerning the work to be done.

The Commission was instructed to provide at the earliest possible time for the establishment and maintenance of a Biblical school or theological department, where young men may be taught and trained for the ministry of the Church. It was also instructed to consider and determine the advisability and wisdom of establishing an institution or institutions of higher education of the grade of a university; and authority was conferred upon it to establish and provide for the location, maintenance, and endowment of such institution or institutions of higher learning, and the establishment and the location, maintenance, and endowment of a school of theology. The Commission was clothed with full power and authority to act for and on behalf of the General Conference in these matters as fully and freely as the General Conference would or could act for itself. The Commission was further directed to meet at as early a date as practicable and issue to the Church a full and complete statement of its aims and plans.

Accordingly, the Commission has acted as promptly after its appointment by the College of Bishops as the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the work to be done, permitted, and now issues this statement to the Church:

To Secularize Education.

It is a notable fact that there is a distinct movement in our day to secularize education in all its branches, and the higher education especially. It is well known that strong tendencies exist to remove from all responsibility to Church or State, institutions of higher learning, the advocates of such an educational program miscalling such irresponsible institutions independent. The right of the Church to own and control educational institutions has been brought in question in the most unequivocal and offensive terms by the advocates of this policy of making colleges and universities independent of and irresponsible to the people of the country.

The educational work of the Churches has been decried as being injurious to both culture and religion. It has been affirmed that in the schools of the Churches both education and religion are subordinated to the sectarian interests of the Christian bodies which own and control such institutions.

The Churches of the land are thus challenged in the doing of that great work whereby they have so greatly blessed the country during all the years of the past. By the very nature of the case the Christian schools of America must be owned and controlled by the Churches of the country; and that they serve the interests of the denominations which own and control them does not make them less useful to the Nation, but rather more so, if the Churches to which they belong are to be esteemed as useful and not injurious organizations.

Churches Foster Schools.

Our Church refuses to be warned away from the field of education as an inexperienced, incompetent, and injurious agent, exercising itself with things too great for it and quite outside the scope of its mission. In common with all the great Churches of Christendom, from the very beginning of its history, it has founded and fostered schools. In so doing it has not departed from the course of the Church of Christ in all the ages, nor entered upon any novel or unwise experiment. It has simply conformed its methods to the plans of the Church from Apostolic times to the present hour. By the hands of the Christian Churches have been laid the foundations of nearly all the great universities of the world in which literature, art, science and religion have, side by side, found a safe and enduring home. If, from the work of education by which modern life has been so enlightened and elevated, the contributions made by the Churches were taken away, the remainder would be an inconsiderable residuum. Who can say what would be the present condition of our country if the colleges and universities, founded and operated by the Churches, had never been opened? Who can forecast how dreadful would be the effect on the civilization of the future, if the educational establishments of the Churches were closed? In asserting and exercising their educational functions, the Christian Churches of the United States have not undertaken needless tasks nor rendered worthless services to the Nation. They have been most truly about their Master's business when engaged in educational work. Thousands of the strongest and noblest minds by whose high services both Church and State have been blessed were educated in the institutions of the Churches. Moreover, the Christian schools of the Nation, by the constraining force of their example and the leavening power of their influence, have imparted a spiritual quality to other institutions in the United States which has been as a saving salt to the education of the Nation, and which would quickly disappear and leave the whole mass to decay, if the Churches should abandon their educational enterprises.

A New and Untried Thing.

The experiment of secularized education is a new and untried thing. Until the present time no Nation in ancient or modern times has ever undertaken such an experiment. Nearly or quite all of the colleges of America for almost two hundred years of the Nation's history were religious institutions. Within recent years only have any of them showed a disposition to disavow their connection with the Church and disclaim their religious character. Upon the nature of the influence which in the last decade has allured many of them away from the purposes of their devout founders we forbear to comment. It is enough to say that present conditions make it more necessary than ever in the past for the Churches to strengthen their educational enterprises. Both patriotism and piety impel them to put forth to the utmost their energies in the work of Christian education. The democratic institutions, social welfare and religious interests of our country cannot be best secured and served by a bureaucratic type of secular education imparted in institutions, which in separation from the control of the Church and State boast of their irresponsibility to the people, and seek support from sources of supply infected with the same evil spirit of spurious independentism.

The Church proposes institutions of learning in harmony with the spirit of American institutions and filled with the benevolent purposes of the Christian religion. The schools of the Church are designed to be profoundly religious institutions without being narrowly sectarian. They encourage a freedom of thought as liberal as the limitations of truth, and they give no place to an anarchic liberalism, which in bondage to pride sacrifices real intellectual freedom by casting doubt upon all the settled principles and accepting in haste and fickleness all novelties of belief in order to win by its meretricious methods a reputation for independence of thought. Intimately related to the Church of God, in serving it they will serve every other worthy interest of the country also.

Plans Formed by Commission.

In keeping with these principles and in pursuance of the specific instructions of the General Conference, the Educational Commission has taken steps, formed plans, and projected work which we now proceed to state in detail.

The General Conference, in adopting the report by which the Commission was created, expressed the belief that there should be east of the Mississippi River an institution of university grade owned and controlled by the Church, and one such institution west of the Mississippi River, in order to meet the needs of the extended territory embraced within the limits of our wide connection. With this expression of the General Conference, the Commission is in hearty accord, and it has acted accordingly.

For the university west of the Mississippi River, the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, Texas, has been adopted, provided its Board of Trustees and the Annual Conferences controlling it meet the conditions prescribed by the General Conference for the ownership and control of the institution. This we are assured will be done, and the university for the region west of the Mississippi River will be opened at Dallas in September, 1915.

The Commission is glad to be able to report to the Church the auspicious founding of a great university for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Money Now in Sight.

Atlanta has been selected as the location for it. A gift of $1,000,000 from one member of the Commission and $25,000 from another member, and a subscription of $500,000 from Atlanta, assured by the Chamber of Commerce of the city, all aggregating $1,525,000, were made on the day the location was fixed. On the day following smaller subscriptions were made by members of our Church, not residing in Atlanta, which amount to $3000. In addition to these gifts the use of the Wesley Memorial Hospital, an institution worth $200,000, is given for the school of medicine, and the Wesley Memorial building for the school of theology. The latter property is worth $200,000. In this imposing building there are admirable lecture rooms for the work of the school of theology, and the "Toursfield Smith collection," composed of about 2500 rare volumes, a number of autograph letters and manuscripts of the Wesleys, Bishop Coke, Fletcher of Madeley, and other Methodist celebrities. With this excellent equipment we are able to open a school of theology at once with a competent faculty. We have provided a number of scholarships of value from $50 to $100 each to be bestowed upon young preachers who need such assistance to enable them to pursue their studies in the school of theology. No worthy young minister of the Church need seek elsewhere for such assistance. More particular information concerning the work of the theological department will be published at an early day.

Other Departments to Be Opened.

Other departments of the university will be opened as soon as the nature of such work will permit. Our people will understand that much time and patience and care must be bestowed upon a task so large as the founding of a great university; and the Commission believes that the Church would not approve anything short of the most solid and worthy things in its university. In due time a proper site for the institution will be selected, several admirable areas having been offered; the campus will be laid out, and the work of erecting other necessary buildings undertaken.

It will be observed that the gift of $1,000,000 made by Mr. Asa G. Candler, Sr., is for the endowment of the institution. For buildings, libraries and apparatus we must look to the connection at large, and the Commission relies most confidently upon individuals and churches to make generous contributions to this great enterprise, which is inaugurated under such unusual and cheering circumstances that its success seems assured from the beginning.

The Commission has requested its chairman, Bishop Warren A. Candler, to undertake the work of Chancellor of the university during the period of its organization and until it can be turned over to the General Conference for further direction; and he has acceded to the request and will do this labor additional to his work as a Bishop.

In the Address of the Bishops to the General Conference, recently held in Oklahoma City, it was said, "It would be a monstrous perversion of history to say that the Churches through their institutions of learning, have done little or nothing for the welfare of the people of the country; but, on the contrary, have subordinated both religion and education to ends of bigotry. The answer to such an indictment is the more energetic and effective prosecution of the work of education by all the Churches."

Answer of Church Positive.

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, believes without doubt or wavering that all the people of our wide connection will unite to make the answer of the Church positive and unequivocal. A new and nobler era in our educational history has begun. We will found and equip our two universities in a manner worthy of our great Church, and we will give generous support to all our educational enterprises of every grade.

The boards of trustees, who are charged with the oversight and management of all our schools and colleges, will see to it that these institutions are firmly fixed in the ownership and control of the Church, and that their religious character is in keeping with the pious motives which impelled consecrated men and women to make the gifts by which they were established.

We believe our people will supply now more generously than ever before whatever means may be necessary to maintain the efficiency of our educational work.

Through the desolations of war and the destitution and poverty of later years our people walked undismayed and labored in faith and hope. Now that our God has blessed so abundantly the labor of their hands and prospered the Church of their love, they will not disappoint the purposes of His grace and providence concerning them. Rejoicing in his salvation, in the name of our God, we set up our banners anew. The Lord will fulfill our petitions; He will hear us from His holy heaven with the saving strength of His right hand.

CHRISTIANITY AND NATIONALITY.

By Rev. Principal Forsyth, D.D.

(In view of the fact that we are hearing much in this day about "the International Mind" and that there is considerable talk to the effect that as Christianity increases Church and national lines will more and more be wiped out, the following article which appeared on the front page of the British Weekly of July 9, is pertinent and thought-provoking.—Editor of the Advocate.)

It is the work of Christianity to develop national feeling as well as Church feeling. It does not pass over the nations like a roller, erasing frontiers, and levelling peoples to a featureless humanity. That is mere cosmopolitanism, and not international solidarity; and it is certainly not the way of a Christian Universalism, which has a moral interim, and finds in the conscience the true unity of the race. Cosmopolitanism is no more the true Catholicity than Romanism is. It is only the opposite pole in the way of falsehood. The true Catholicity springs from something more ethical, free, and national than either. Mere cosmopolitanism is no more Catholic than a tourist is a traveller, or an expert in hotels knows other lands: It is a sterile way. It was the way taken by the Humanitarianism of the Illumination in the eighteenth century, which was but egoism in multitude; and it ended in the French Revolution, which ended in Napoleon, who sacrificed all the nations of Europe to the egoism of one. All those international tendencies which ride over national values are abstract and not concrete. They are non-moral, and they have immoral results. So it is with Jesuitism which in clericalizing all, denationalizes all. So it is with Islam and its leveling monotone of a theism arid as its desert. So it is with Socialism and its organized ennui or its machine-made variety, sacrificing national feature and freedom to a tyranny of organization. So with the yellow international of gold and finance, which is not concerned with nations, but only with gain.

Humanity, as it is much more than civilization, is also more than a sympathetic, and therefore unstable, fraternity; which dissolves the concrete features of the nations in a too homogeneous brotherhood, without variety, distinction, or worship. Brotherhood is a fine movement, but it is only a movement; it is not a Church, and it is only interim. It does not represent the true Catholicity; it is but the monotony of the natural level—a green monotone, but a dweller in the plain. Nor is the Roman the true Catholicity, which levels or erases nationality by a false supernatural and a monotone of splendor. The true Catholicity is the evangelical, with the rich harmony of the new creature. Rising in the conscience, which is man's true focus, it begins with his moral redemption, works by an inner freedom, develops the variety of the New Creation, rears round the regenerate conscience a symphony, not of mere individuals, but of vast magnitudes, and sets up nations that cohere in a universal kingdom. A Church with a distinct national type is inevitable. The Free Churches of England offer a type different from those of America, and one that should not be lost to the other. It is not necessarily a State Church because it is national. And it enriches the Kingdom of God without dividing it. It increases spiritual wealth by enriching personality (individual and corporate) in the shelter of that controlling unity. There is a pagan cosmopolitanism which pursues the glorification of a vague humanity, keen for self-enjoyment, and there is a Christian cosmopolitanism which enriches humanity to glorify God in the variety of those who enjoy Him for ever. Multiply the nations so long as they increase the joy, so long as they are serving and complementary nations, whose egoism, honor, and self-respect are under the banner of the new Kingdom of Humanity. For that realm is more than the brotherhood of men; it is the brotherhood of peoples. It gathers up national and not merely individual souls. It gathers them under one Soul and King. And the Soul of Christ is too great to be but a covert for a crowd of souls. The nations of the earth also bring their glory and honor into Him.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

By Laura F. Montgomery.

It is a sad reflection on the intelligence of this day that the greatest and grandest book in the world is excluded from our public schools—"the Book of books," beside which all other books sink into insignificance; the one that contains the words of Him who spake as "Never man spake"; the Bible, that our noblest thinkers have loved, and loved so dearly that many laid down their lives for it.

Some of the greatest writers have delighted to honor it. Lord Byron, I believe, pronounced one of its chapters, the grandest poetry in the world; and Lord Macaulay, when asked where he got his style, said, "From the Bible." Burns wrote in his "Cotter's Saturday Night:"

"The sire turns o'er, with patriarchal grace,
The big ha'—Bible, ance his father's pride."

And again he says:

"The priest-like father reads the sacred page,
How Abram was the friend of God on high."

And again:

"Perhaps the Christian volume is the theme,
How guiltless blood for guilty man was shed."

History brings before us the beautiful and touching picture of one of the daughters of King Charles the First of England, the young Princess Elizabeth, dying broken-hearted with her little brother, the Duke of Gloucester, and her cherished Bible for companions. Jehovah calls it "The word of God," and "the sword of the Spirit."

"It is the golden casket
Where gems of truth are stored;
It is the heaven-drawn picture
Of Thee, the living Word."

Natchez, Miss.

STRIKING STATEMENTS FROM A HIGH SOURCE.

The Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society recently held in London, England, a diamond jubilee, at which Sir William Ramsay, the eminent Biblical scholar, who had just returned from Constantinople, was the principal speaker. We are indebted to The British Weekly for the following report of some of his most striking utterances:

"He said that the missionaries have done far more toward regenerating the Ottoman Empire than all the Ambassadors of Europe. He mentioned that a Methodist Bishop in Asia Minor told him that the Mohammedans have their eyes turned at present on Japan, for they believe that if this great military nation could be converted to Islam the conquest of the world might follow. Referring to the progress of research in Palestine, the speaker said that thirty years ago the Book of Acts was regarded with doubtful feelings by even the more conservative European critics. Even the most orthodox were disposed to pass it by on the other side. Now it is safe for any scholar to champion the credibility of the narrative. A hundred good reasons may be given for accepting it as trustworthy. St. Luke was described as 'one of the great historians of the world.' He showed how the words of Luke ii. 1-3 had long been suspected, but are now known to be accurate in every detail. He referred in a very interesting passage to his own discovery of the inscription with the name of Quirinius at Antioch in Pisidia. He believes that Antioch will yield many other treasures."

THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

A Great Fight in the Legislature. Rev. A. W. Turner Well Fitted for the Work Assigned Him.

In a very interesting analytical review of the most important work of the General Assembly, T. O. Harris, editor of the Shreveport Times and its representative at Baton Rouge during the session of the Legislature, refers to Rev. A. W. Turner in the following complimentary words:

"If the General Assembly of 1914 had accomplished nothing else, the manner in which it cured an ugly situation growing out of the prohibition law enforcement fight would entitle it to the thanks of the people of the State. At its inception this question threatened to plunge the Legislature into a bitter and acrimonious struggle. It ended with all interests being satisfied. The prohibitionists had four laws. One of them got through intact; the others were compromised and passed.

"The Buie Bill, permitting school boards to set aside a portion of their revenues for detective work in dry territory went through both houses without serious opposition. The Shell Bill prohibiting the sale of near beer in dry territory was defeated, but its place was taken by the Parkerson measure regulating the sale of this non-alcoholic and throwing around that sale such restrictions that it seems impossible to employ it as a subterfuge. The Locke Bill, restricting the shipment of liquor from wet into dry territory, was amended in the Senate and accepted in this form by its author in the House. The 'search and seizure' and 'blind tiger' act, introduced in the Senate by Senator Dowling of DeSoto, gave way to a committee substitute, thoroughly acceptable to its author.

"The four measures were signed by the Governor and became laws. While the prohibitionists did not get the full measure of legislation they demanded, their leaders are satisfied with what they did obtain, and the anti-prohibitionists are not complaining. The threat of State-wide prohibition, frequently heard in the early stages of the Legislature, was not heard toward its close, and Mr. Shell of Morehouse did not press the measure he had prepared to make the congressional unit the test of local option on the liquor question.

"While many interests seeking legislation were represented at the session just ended, none of them attained the measure of success achieved by the prohibition leaders. That this was largely due to the tact, discretion and unremitting energy of Rev. A. W. Turner of Shreveport, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, is not to be questioned for a moment. Dr. Turner appeared to be peculiarly fitted for the important task assigned to him, that of guiding the law-enforcing measures through the legislative shoals. He commanded the admiration and respect of friend and foe alike and the record is greatly to his credit."—Weekly Caucasian (Shreveport, La.)

DURANT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Durant District Conference was held at Goodman, Miss., July 8-10, 1914. Rev. W. S. Shipman, presiding elder, was privately and publicly commended for his wise leadership and ever deepening devotion to the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

An unusual number of laymen were in attendance upon the conference. A large number of visitors from the town and surrounding country filled the church at nearly all the services. Our visiting brethren from a distance pronounced this one of the best district conferences of the year. This may be the reason; prayer testimony, and the preaching of the Word were magnified. We all had sweet fellowship one with the other and were made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. The preaching was done by Revs. E. Nash Broyles and V. C. Curtis and Drs. A. F. Watkins, J. M. Sullivan, and H. G. Henderson. It was all good to the use of edifying.

Rev. V. C. Curtis gave his message on the extension of the kingdom through the Sunday school. This tireless worker is going into the places where he is needed most and is helping the preachers and superintendents to stir the people to greater diligence in the study of the Word of God. Miss Willingham, teacher of the adult organized class at Eupora, told of some of the possibilities of this kind of work. One thing that her class is doing is supporting a missionary. Rev. T. H. Lipscomb represented the Board of Education. Dr. A. F. Watkins and Dr. J. M. Sullivan gave an encouraging report as to the work at Millsaps College. The district agreed to raise $400 to help pay for the furniture needed for the new main building now in process of construction.

Dr. T. J. Bailey, an honored member of the Baptist Church, and a representative of the Anti-Saloon League presented the needs of the League and the progress made in driving the drink evil out of our State. He also took a spirited part in the discussion on books and periodicals.

Brother Bachman, our beloved veteran colporteur, treads softly now, but his bow abides in strength. His labor and his presence blessed many hearts. Our State Superintendent of Education, Mr. W. H. Smith, spoke as to the needs and possible development of the consolidated school and of the consolidated country church.

F. A. Howell, J. Lem Seawright, Rev. W. M. Commander, and Judge T. M. Lamb were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Messrs. George Ramsey and R. E. Wilburn were elected alternates.

J. Lem Seawright was elected district-lay leader.

Eupora was selected as the place to hold the next session of the district conference.

The town of Goodman and the pastor Rev. J. D. Simpson entertained in the good old-fashioned way. Hospitality and good cheer abounded.

R. H. B. GLADNEY, Secretary.

THE SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Owing to the fact of the building of the new church at Columbia, which is in course of construction, and also to the fact that the Annual Conference is to meet there this year, the District Conference was changed to Poplarville. It convened on June 10 and was in session two days. The pastor and people of Poplarville gave the Conference a royal welcome, and all were much delighted with the many courtesies shown, as was duly expressed by a rising vote at the close. The Conference was called to order Wednesday morning, June 10 by the presiding elder, Rev. W. H. Huntley, D. D. It was the regret of the body that a message called him to Hattiesburg to the bedside of a sick son, and he was absent during the first day. A president of the Conference was appointed for the day, and the business went on.

All of the pastors were present except five, who were kept away by sickness and by revival services. The attendance of the laymen numbered about 25; six local preachers were present—there are about twenty-five in the District.

The reports from the charges were encouraging, showing that the preachers in charge are busy about the Lord's work. Two modern brick churches are in course of construction—at Columbia and Moss Point.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. W. L. Blackwell, who was said to have given a good account of himself; other splendid sermons were preached by Brothers Gunn, H. J. Moore and Burton. We were visited by Rev. W. H. Lewis, of Brookhaven, who represented the interests of Whitworth College; Rev. T. J. O'Neill, who addressed the Conference concerning his school, the Port Gibson Female College; Rev. H. W. VanHook, who spoke of the good work that is being done by one of the newest of our schools, the Seashore Campground School, of which he is president. The Conference was delighted to hear of the fine progress of this school, which bids fair to be one of the best training schools in the South. Rev. M. M. Black was present and presented the great cause of missions, as Secretary of the Conference Board of Missions. The Methodist Orphans' Home was well represented by Miss Golding, who is principal of the school that is being maintained there.

The Conference voted to supplement the salary of the pastor of the Derby Mission to the amount of $100, about half of which was secured, and E. C. Gunn was appointed to attend to its collection. Bond was selected as the next place of meeting.

On suggestion of the president of the Board of Trustees of the district parsonage property, made in his report to the Conference, the Board was vacated by vote of the Conference, and the following were elected a new Board of Trustees: R. W. Hinton, L. N. Dantzler, J. S. Otis, Dr. W. A. Dearman, and J. C. Ross, and the Board was authorized to make certain repairs on the building which will improve it very much. The following were elected to succeed themselves as trustees of the Seashore Campground School for a period of three years: M. L. Burton and S. A. Tomlinson. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: R. W. Hinton, W. E. Lampton, T. M. Evans, H. P. Hopper. The Licensing Committee was elected as follows:

L. A. Darsey, B. F. Jones, G. A. Guice, and Brother Moore. J. C. Ross was elected lay leader. C. O. Miller was recommended to the Annual Conference for local elder's orders.

Altogether the Conference was a pleasant one. The presiding elder of course had things well in hand, and he showed a trained hand in directing the affairs of the Conference. The various interests of the Church were carefully looked after, and nothing seems to have been neglected.

W. B. JONES, Secretary.

WOULD CALL IT COKE UNIVERSITY.

Editor of the Advocate: Now that it is a settled fact that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is to have a new university east of the Mississippi River, the question of a name for this new vehicle of service is not without interest.

This is the centenary anniversary of the death of Bishop Coke, one of the greatest men and one of the greatest scholars of early Methodism. So far as I know no fitting monument to this man, who in a very true sense stands with Asbury as father of American Methodism, exists either in America or in England. We who were so fortunate as to hear it will never forget the truly great address of Bishop Candler at our General Conference, in which he paid a well deserved tribute to our first Methodist Bishop. The greatness and the worthiness of the man stood out in bold relief as his eminent successor told in analytic style the story of his self-sacrificing life.

Now is there not opportunity in this new university to bestow, delayed honor upon our first American Bishop? What better or more appropriate name could be found than Coke University?

JOHN L. WEBER.

COMMENDS IT HIGHLY.

Rev. W. S. Harrison's late volume, entitled "The Articles of Religion as Amended, Supplemented, and Explained," is meeting with great favor. It is especially suited for the home libraries of our Methodist people. Captain J. L. Collins, a leading layman of Coffeeville, Miss., wrote Brother Harrison, as follows a few days since:

"At Potts Camp recently, as a lay delegate to the Holly Springs District Conference, I bought of Brother Bachman your late production, 'Articles of Religion,' and have just finished reading it. I cannot refrain from congratulating you on giving out such an interesting and valuable book—logical, concise, and irrefutable in every detail. It deserves a place in every man's library, regardless of denominational tendency. I shall commend it heartily to every intelligent reader I come in touch with."

The price of this excellent work is $1. Send for a copy.

TO OUR PREACHERS.

The management of this Advocate has decided to let our preachers and agents offer six months trial subscriptions at 50 cents during August, September and October. This offer will be withdrawn on the 10th of November, 1914. Subscriptions must be sent in in clubs and money orders used in making remittances so as to save expense.

In soliciting new subscribers, please explain to them that the six months' subscriptions are taken with the understanding that, after their expiration, the regular rate of $1.50 will be charged for annual subscriptions unless they are ordered canceled.

We are making this offer for a three-fold purpose:

First—To build up our subscription list before the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee.

Second—To get funds to help tide us over the summer and fall months.

Third—To induce our Methodist people to take the Conference Organ and read it.

Concerning the New University

PUBLISH THE GOOD NEWS!

Dear Dr. Meek: Tell it, sir! Tell it from Dan to Beersheba! Let it be known throughout our borders and in the regions beyond, that Southern Methodism is true to her traditions, and that she will keep her ideals. The God of hosts still guides her advancing columns. The pillar of fire and of cloud yet overshadows them, and his Spirit is among them. May it ever be so! The good news that we shall not long be delayed in our great educational movements cheers the heart of every true Methodist. Our new University is to be at Atlanta, and we begin with more than $2,000,000! Isn't it great, Meek? My heart has been beating faster ever since I first read it. The entire Church will rally to it and make of it what otherwise we could never have had. It will become a really great institution. The Church wants and needs a real University. It is a part of her mission to put the stamp of her Christian ideals of manhood upon the young men who come to her for training. The righteous indignation we feel toward those who have despoiled us of our own has aroused our militant zeal and the new institution, let it be called Candler University or what else, will have our most intense loyalty and support. All honor to Mr. Candler for his princely gift! He bears an honorable name in the history of his State. They are a clean people, and the Church could hardly get a fairer name for its University than that of Candler.

Henceforth Atlanta becomes the "hub" of Southern Methodism. Slowly all our connectional interests will move that way; not by any landslide or sudden revolution, but by a perfectly natural gravitation. Not as a matter of spite or revenge, but as what will be found best. Mark this forecast (I would not hasten it, neither retard it): The years are not many before it will be found desirable to have our publishing interests there.

For the present, let all local enterprises be subordinated to the needs of this, our greatest undertaking. So should it be throughout the entire Church. "The house which we build is great, for great is our God."

Columbus, Miss. W. W. WOOLLARD.

A VOICE FROM THE DELTA.

Dear Dr. Meek: What could be more gratifying to every loyal Southern Methodist than the splendid work done by the Educational Commission in locating and launching the new University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South? No better site could have been found than Atlanta, and the great beginning made must certainly be reassuring to even the most timid and doubtful throughout our Connection. Out of the recent prolonged and much-to-be-regretted controversy over Vanderbilt University, our Church has come with her garments undefiled, and now, with clean hands and a pure heart, she sets herself to the great task of building up and equipping another institution of the highest rank. In itself, this is an undertaking worthy of her best efforts and her largest liberality. But let no man think that this is all that is embraced in this movement. The whole question of Christian education is involved, and our Church has been placed in a position where she is to have a commanding voice in the solution of this vital question. Can anyone doubt what that will be?

I shall be greatly surprised if every loyal Southern Methodist east of the Mississippi River does not rally to the task before us with such enthusiasm and liberality as will not only make glad the hearts of the men who are in the forefront of this great movement, but which will also speedily achieve results which will be a lasting blessing to all coming generations. We cannot afford to do otherwise.

Greenville, Miss. H. S. SPRAGINS.

A LAYMAN SPEAKS OUT.

Mr. Editor: It must have been a most shocking surprise to the plunderbund at Nashville and its adherents throughout the country when the announcement was made that such ample funds and provisions had been furnished at Atlanta for opening the new university which the people called Methodists propose to "own and control." And one imagines that it fairly took the Dean's breath away when it was stated that the theological school of the university will open this fall.

Noting the announcement in your issue of July 23 that the theological faculty is being selected, one ventures to hope that none but men of tested loyalty and soundness will be chosen—men who not only hold sound views, but who also have the courage to maintain them. If our doctrines and polity are not worth fighting for, then they are worth nothing at all. It will be an easy matter to find men in agreement with our standards, but it will not be nearly so easy to discover those who will on all occasions and in all relations stand for them and rebuke those who challenge them. And pray employ teachers of theology who will lead the Church's young ministers to believe and not to doubt. No greater mistake could possibly be made than just here.

The administrative arm of the Church seems to have been paralyzed in dealing with the heretics among us. These latter care nothing for blows so long as they are favored with the best places in pulpit, office and school. May one not hope for a blending of practice and precept at this point?

It is difficult to see how any loyal Methodist who considers the matter at all can continue to patronize the institution of which the Church has so recently been "robbed." It is still more difficult to believe that a single Annual Conference will admit to membership in the traveling connection any young minister who continues to attend its theological school. Self-respect demands something. Self-defense demands much. The whole line of loyal Southern Methodists should now advance with passionate devotion to the support of the new university. And it will!

Greenville, Miss. J. D. BARBEE.

FROM THE CAPITAL DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Dr. Meek: My heart overflows with joy and gratitude to Almighty God for the truly great beginning of the new University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which has been located in the city of Atlanta, Ga. God is in the movement and it will succeed. No enterprise in the history of our great Church has been inaugurated under more favorable auspices, nor with promises of greater returns in the future.

The Educational Commission is to be commended for so promptly and satisfactorily obeying the behests of the General Conference in this respect. The Church is to be congratulated in that she has preserved her self-respect, and by her action in this matter she has won the admiration of the Christian world.

I rejoice that there are those among us like Mr. Asa Candler who still have faith in the Church of God. He believes that she may even be entrusted with the ownership and complete control of a great university. And so confident is he in this opinion that he has made the largest gift ever made by any Southern man to the cause of education. We "thank God and take courage."

With such men as Bishop Warren A. Candler, the greatest defender of the faith and traditions of our fathers among us at the head of affairs, we may rest assured that the interests of the Church will be protected and that there will be no danger of a repetition of the shameful and humiliating experiences of the recent past. In order to insure the largest and speedy success of this great movement, the co-operation of every Southern Methodist will be required. Our prayers, our money, and our influence and support will be needed. We are told that this enterprise was born amid Pentecostal scenes and experiences. May it always be nourished and strengthened by the prayers of the saints!

Our means should be promptly forthcoming to strengthen this great enterprise. Let us not leave the financing of this institution to the rich alone. We should all have some part in it. An average of one dollar from every Southern Methodist would give additional resources amounting to $2,000,000.

Let us begin at once to direct the attention of the parents and young men of the Church to this, our own University, as deserving and claiming the patronage of every loyal Methodist east of the Mississippi River.

I am glad that the Biblical Department is to open this fall. I trust that in the first enrollment of students Mississippi will be represented by a number of choice young men who realize that this is the place for the education of the young ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Yours for the new University,

PAUL D. HARDIN.

Jackson, Miss., July 24, 1914.

DR. HUNTLEY PLEASED.

Dear Dr. Meek: The mere announcement of the Educational Commission installs like a great dynamo, wireless at that, releasing waves of influence to flow instantly and generally over Southern Methodism. We are infinitely more comfortable already. For a number of years Mississippi has felt some uncertainty regarding the returns from Vanderbilt University. Our young men reported rather in the spirit of the ten than the two spies. We sensed the sore spot, anxious about the equipment upon which we were so dependent for ripening and returning to us our young ministers, rooted and grounded for the work that waited.

It was a strange Samson which got into our educational temple. Perhaps it was a blind Samson. With the girdling of the columns by the arms of a partial State court and a hostile, alien ironmaster's money, the collapse was complete; but not destructive.

"For a beginning," the generous, broad foundations announced by the Commission is unexampled in our Southern history. Not destroyed, not even cast down, a young Hercules of a University strides quietly, quickly, into position, to delight the Church with his striking proportions and to stimulate her to the work of nourishing to greater, glorious growth. Atlanta receives and houses the University. Alabama is due honor for her effort—iron-ribbed, clad in clanging metal garments as a knight of olden times. Different in the quality of her founding, Atlanta is a composite. I recall some losses to smaller cities of Georgia whose more ambitious citizens turned toward Atlanta more than 40 years ago. From La Grange, for instance, my home town, went such forces as Park, and Spalding, and Ridley, and Douglas, and Speer. Scions of choice families from over the State made the Gate City their Mecca—all qualifying and contributing to the founding of a solid city. From Villa Rica came the Candler, Milton, and Asa. And, with his election to the Bishopric came Warren to cast in his lot with the weal of the city. He has become the man of this movement. God's hand is to be seen in the results before the Church. Warren is the matured product of a wholesome interpretation of Southern Methodism as could ripen under instruction and years of itineracy with Atkins G. Haygood and George F. Pierce. Who more surely could pilot the eager young University than this man, this athlete, with such trainers?

Why—thanks to Bishop Candler and those like-minded with him—the right atmosphere had been preparing for this peculiar situation.

The Wesley Memorials raise splendid structures to become subject to free use by our students. Benignly institutional, sympathetic with the suffering are the Memorial Church and Hospital. The library is eloquent with volumes, letters and reminders of the Wesleys. Years of Bishop Candler's industrious life have been devoted to searching for and the gathering of this Wesleyana.

Mr. Asa Candler's letter announcing his generous gift must rank in future as the model for all Christian men who bring with their offerings to the Lord's altar, and with the humility of a thankful child return to him the talents committed to their hands.

Is it still in order to wave a hand kindly and say, "Vale Vanderbilt?" Sadly to declare, "Some time since we've felt you were an honor to us, and we a pleasure to you?" "Good-bye and good luck!"

And, Hail to thee, young University! Let us name you the King's own. W. H. HUNTLEY. Biloxi, Miss., July 24.

FROM A LOUISIANA VETERAN.

Dear Dr. Meek: Allow me to join you in your congratulations to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, upon having obtained so soon the prospect of securing her so greatly desired University, and especially to commend the Commission for the work it has accomplished. And beyond this, to praise God for supplying a donor in the person of Mr. Asa Candler, who made the thing possible, yea, practicable. Let him live as long as he may, his benefaction will far outlive him. Yours fraternally,

ROBERT RANDLE.

REV. R. W. TUCKER SENDS A MESSAGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have no words to express my satisfaction as I read the good news concerning our new University. I thought of Bishop Wilson's opening words at the Missionary Conference held in New Orleans some years ago. He arose amid a perfect storm of applause and pausing until quiet was restored, he said: "Thank God, the old Church has life in her yet." So after I read the Advocate to-night I said, "Surely, if anybody has doubted whether the educational life of the Southern Methodist Church would be able to survive the shameful and glaring injustice done her by the Vanderbilt Trustees and Tennessee Judges, dominated by the Kirkland-Carnegie influence, that doubt is now removed."

I really believe, Dr. Meek, that nothing has happened in years to give our Church such an impetus and inspiration as the turn things have taken in educational matters. To feel that we are to have an institution true to the doctrines of Methodism—doctrines which have beyond doubt been a blessing not only to our own Church, but also to all evangelical Churches; and to have an institution with such a man as Bishop Candler at its head; to feel that men will be in charge who will teach God's Holy Word—who really believe that holy men "moved by the Holy Ghost, wrote it"—men who will rule out worldliness and destructive "higher criticism"—I say that this is at least a comfortable feeling—a feeling some of us have not had concerning Vanderbilt for years.

I agree with you in saying, "Surely, this should be a happy time with loyal Southern Methodists everywhere." My whole heart is heartily in the movement. I hope that there will be at once a general rally and funds secured which will place the University in the front from the first. To this end, let every Methodist pray, work, and give.

R. W. TUCKER.

ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING THE SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

The faculty for the theological school of our university, which has been located at Atlanta, is as follows: Rev. W. J. Young, D.D., of the Virginia Conference, Professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Theology; Rev. Plato T. Durham, D.D., of the Western North Carolina Conference, Professor of Church History; Rev. H. C. Howard, D.D., of the North Alabama Conference, Professor of Systematic Theology; Rev. Andrew Sledd, D.D., LL.D., of the Alabama Conference, Professor of Greek and New Testament Literature; Rev. W. A. Shelton, D.D., of the West Oklahoma Conference, Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Literature; Rev. W. A. Smart, A.B., B.D., of the Virginia Conference, Professor of Biblical Theology.

It is expected that several assistants also will be engaged later.

The members of the faculty are able, scholarly, consecrated men, who are well known to the Church and who, from the first announcement, will command, as they deserve, the confidence of our people as men well qualified for the work assigned them.

Scholarships ranging from $50 to $100 will be given to worthy young ministers who may need such assistance in order to pursue their studies in the School of Theology.

The school will be opened in September, the exact date to be announced soon.

It will be opened in the Wesley Memorial Building, an imposing and commodious structure, which is well adapted to the purposes of a school of theology.

In the building is a valuable library consisting of about 2500 volumes. In the library are many rare books bearing upon the history of Methodism and a number of autograph letters and manuscripts of the Wesleys and their contemporaries. Atlanta, Ga.

AN OMISSION.

By an omission in copying or printing the statement issued by the Educational Commission, the name of Rev. A. J. Lamar, D.D. did not appear among the signers to that statement. He is in thorough accord with the statement, and that no one may misunderstand the failure of his name to appear, I write this notice. No man on the Commission has rendered more earnest, wise and effective service than Dr. Lamar.

REV. R. J. HARP CALLED HOME.

Dear Brother Meek: You have no doubt noted in the daily press the death of Rev. R. J. Harp, our oldest preacher, who was 85 years of age. He was admitted on trial into the Memphis Conference in 1844 when only 15 years of age. He was transferred to Louisiana in 1846, and assisted in the organization of our Conference. Were it not for the fact that for a period of a few years he took a local relation, he would have been in our traveling connection for 70 years. He died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Whitworth, of Shreveport, La., on Friday, July 24, at 2 a. m., and was buried from First M. E. Church, South, to-day (Saturday). The service was conducted by myself, assisted by Brothers Coleman, Brown, and Means; a number of other ministers being present. A more extended account of the life and labors of this noble veteran will be sent to the Advocate later.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are building, and will soon complete, the Gibson Memorial Methodist Church in Vicksburg. It is, so far as I know, the first church erected to the memory of the Rev. Tobias Gibson, the first Methodist preacher to come to the Natchez country, in our Conference, or in the State, for that matter.

His remains now lie not far away in a beech grove, but we hope soon to have them resting under the shadow of the new church built in his honor. We thought it fitting that the Mississippi Conference should put a memorial window in this church for Mr. Gibson, and finding that it met the approval of some of the preachers to whom I mentioned it, I have written to all the preachers of the Conference for contributions to this fund, and I hope they will respond liberally and quickly, as we are ready for the window, but cannot order it until we know how much we may expend upon it.

While several have promised $5 each and others less, Dr. I. L. Peebles is the first to send his check for $5. Who will be the next? If any of our good laymen wish to help to honor this worthy itinerant, their contributions will be appreciated. We wrote the preachers because we had their addresses.

I shall be glad to report all contributions through the Advocate. The memorial window will cost $100.

With best wishes, I am fraternally yours,

L. L. ROBERTS.

MISS JULIA WASSON TO SAIL FOR CHINA.

Miss Julia Wasson, our beloved missionary to China, who has spent the past year at home, on her first furlough, will return to China by the Canadian Pacific route, sailing from Vancouver on the Empress of Russia on August 6. Messages of love and God-speed to her, if written promptly after this notice is read, and addressed to the steamship Empress of Russia, at Vancouver, may reach her on the eve of her departure, and serve to cheer her on the way. During her year at home she rendered most efficient help to her Conference Society, having made an itinerary of the Conference last fall in company with our deaconess, Miss Mary Daniel. Besides this, she rendered valuable help in our annual meeting at Aberdeen.

In a recent letter she says: "The year has sped away at a rate unknown before; but I am grateful for every day of it, and there is compensation for its rapid flight. It only brings me nearer to that other home, and to my adopted people whom I love to serve. Sweet memories of the annual conference will linger with me as I go back to China. My prayer for myself and those I love is found in Colossians, the first chapter, beginning with the ninth verse. I believe God is able to fulfill that in our own lives, and I long for him to do that for me."

I am sure that my constituency throughout the Conference will appreciate this parting message from our very own brave, true missionary girl, and that many prayers will ascend daily to the throne of grace in her behalf.

President North Miss. Conf. Missionary Society.

REV. C. H. CARSON, JR.

Fifteen years ago there came to the State of Louisiana an itinerant preacher, broken in health, and deeply grieved that he could no more do the work of an itinerant. He had a brilliant mind, a big soul and an iron will in a feeble body. He was given a place in the faculty of the Louisiana Industrial Institute, located at Ruston. For fifteen years he taught continuously in this institution. Several times his strength seemed almost gone, but the school could not give him up—he was too valuable a man. In the early spring of this year, however, it became apparent to all that his labors were ended. He was carried to his old home in Savannah, Ga., where on June 5 he fell on sleep and his soul went home to God.

On the following Sunday, the church of which he was a faithful member and a liberal supporter—Trinity Methodist Church, Ruston—in connection with the Lord's Supper, held a memorial service for him. For fifteen years he had assisted in this sacramental service—no wonder he was missed that day!

His going changed the Commencement service at the Industrial Institute on July 19 from the regular to the irregular. There was no Commencement sermon. It was truly a memorial service. The Ruston Daily Leader of July 20, in reference to the service and concourse of people had this to say: "Fully a thousand people composed of citizens of Ruston and members of the student body of the Louisiana Industrial Institute gathered in the large auditorium at the institute yesterday morning at 11 o'clock to listen to tributes to the memory of the late lamented Dr. Carvell Hynson Carson." Dr. J. E. Keeney, president of the institution, represented the faculty; Mrs. H. J. Y. Moss represented the Alumni, and Colonel A. T. Prescott, of the State University at Baton Rouge, represented the citizenship. It was a great service.

Mr. Carson was truly a good and great man. As a student, he knew the secret of application; he was thorough to the minutest detail. As a teacher, he knew how to impart information, and more, how to make every student his friend and inspire him with an ideal—the ideal of simple goodness. As a preacher, he loved to preach, he was thoughtful, clear, and effective. A holy life was back of every sermon. As a citizen and as a man, he enjoyed the very highest esteem and respect. Everybody had confidence in C. H. Carson's Christianity.

He was overwhelmed and crushed when his physicians in Georgia said to him: "To save your life you must give up the itineracy." But was not the hand of God in it all? For fifteen years in a State institution C. H. Carson lived a holy life in the presence of thousands of young men and young women. He was Christianity incarnate to them. From the Throne of God through him there emanates an influence that shall never die.

His wife, a daughter of Rev. Thomas B. White (deceased) of the Louisiana Conference, a daughter, and a son survive him. May the blessings of God, and the godly heritage handed down to them by that faithful husband and loving father enrich their lives from day to day! If faithful unto death, they shall see him again, for beyond the shadow of a doubt he has joined the company of the redeemed.

Church News

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, the well known Brooklyn (N. Y.) pastor, is summering in England.

The Korean Religious Tract Society circulated last year 1,074,341 copies of books and tracts, and the demand for Christian literature is reported to be steadily increasing.

Dr. L. G. Broughton, now of London, has been asked to take charge of the Baptist Tabernacle in Atlanta, Ga., again, and is considering the question as to whether he shall do so.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix will attend the International Peace Conference to be held at Constance, Germany, August 2-8. Zion's Herald of July 15 contained an article from the Bishop's pen entitled "The Passion for Peace."

It is said that a canvass of the cities of the United States shows that the contracts for new churches to be built during the remainder of the year foot up over $40,000,000. This is considerably in excess of the average for the past ten years.

It is stated that the Duke family have given Trinity College (Durham, N. C.) $75,000 in cash and land worth $200,000 for the Co-ordinate Woman's College that is to be established in connection with it. Trinity is continually expanding, and its future is very bright.

In a recent number of The Constructive Review, Professor J. Augustin Leger, a Roman Catholic, discussed "Wesley's Place in Catholic Thought," showing some appreciation of the Founder of Methodism and his work. Truly, the era of fraternity among Christian denominations seems to be dawning.

Dr. Milton S. Terry, for many years a Professor in the Garrett Biblical Institute of Chicago and one of the most eminent scholars in the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at Los Angeles, Calif., on July 13. When on his way West last winter, Dr. Terry spent several days in New Orleans and paid the Advocate office several appreciated calls. We keenly regret to learn of his death.

We have regretted to note the recent illness of Dr. G. C. Rankin, the virile Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, who has been forced to undergo surgical treatment in a Dallas sanitarium. We trust that his physical afflictions will be of brief duration and that his trenchant pen will soon be at work again. He cannot well be spared from either the tripod or platform while a prohibition campaign is on in the Lone Star State.

When King George V of Great Britain recently distributed his birthday honors, four prominent Methodists were included in the favored list: Lieut.-Col. John Barnsley, J. P., of Birmingham, Mr. Ellis Denby, J. P., of Shipley, and Mr. Edwin Hamer of Blackburn, were knighted, and the Hon. Joseph Cook, Prime Minister of Australia, who is a local preacher, had conferred upon him the Privy Councillorship.

The task of carrying out the educational plans projected by the late General Conference lies heavily on the heart of Bishop Candler. In his impressive address at the banquet recently given the members of the Educational Commission in Atlanta, he said: "The establishment of the new Methodist university is the work of the rest of the days of those of us who have started it. It may cut my days shorter than they would have been, but it is a work in which I would gladly die."

Mrs. Medora Rice Duncan, widow of the late Bishop W. W. Duncan, died at her home in Spartanburg, S. C., a few days since. She had been in feeble health for some time and her decease, though somewhat sudden, was not altogether unexpected. Of her, the Spartanburg Journal says: "She was an estimable woman who was unpretentious in her life, and of her many noble characteristics none stood out more prominently than the earnestness of her service to her Church and the Christian associations with which she was affiliated."

Granbery College, in Brazil, is in a flourishing condition. The number of students matriculating in the several departments during the session ending Nov. 30, 1913, was 390, and of these about 70 were graduated. Courses in dentistry, pharmacy, law, and theology are maintained. There were 12 students for the ministry in attendance. The total income of the institution, including the appropriation of the Board of Missions and a Government subsidy, was $73,000, and its expenditures amounted to $66,500, leaving in the treasury a balance of $6,500.

It is expected that the cessation of war in Mexico will set before the Protestant Christian Churches of America a wide open door of opportunity, and they seem to be getting ready to make the most of it. According to Bishop Oldham, chairman of the committee representing the various mission boards operating in that country, as soon as the way is open a great united religious and educational campaign will be inaugurated there. The Bishop says: "A big educational university will be established and at least one high school for each of the sexes will be opened in connection with every mission. Schools of higher grades will be consolidated and every organized congregation will have its elementary school where the domestic and manual arts will be taught."

The Pacific Methodist Advocate of July 16 says: "A personal letter from Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, D.D., announces his return to California and that he and his family intend to continue to reside in Los Angeles during the year. The Bishop expresses his continued interest in the work on the Pacific Coast and a desire to be of help as opportunity may present when he is at home, and also a purpose to give the coast work special attention among our churches in the East. The readers of the Advocate will remember that Bishop Waterhouse was the father of our great memorial church enterprises at San Francisco and Oakland, and will be pleased to know that his zeal for these great churches has not abated and that he expresses himself as hoping to do considerable toward helping to raise the $25,000 Church Extension Special for these buildings. He is also much interested in the Church Exhibit at the coming Panama-Pacific Exposition, and has placed himself at the call of the Commission having this religious work in hand for consultation and service."

A political contest is on between the Democrats and Progressives in South Louisiana over the election of Congressmen. A new home for the Italian Embassy in Washington, D. C., is to be constructed at the cost of $1,000,000. The Times-Picayune heads a Washington dispatch as follows: "THE UNITED STATES MAY SPANK BLACK REPUBLICS"—referring to Haiti and Santo Domingo. We do not believe it. Our authorities seem to have repudiated the good old philosophy, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," too completely for any such thing to happen. Moreover, Mr. Carnegie and his peace associates must also be reckoned with.

Bentley Rinehart, an inventor who has contributed to the perfecting of the phonograph machines of the Victor Company, of Camden, N. J., claims that the tango and other modern dances have enormously increased the earnings of such companies and has filed a suit against the one with which he is connected for $600,000 as his percentage of this increment under the existing contract. It is, indeed, an ill wind that blows good to no one. This doubtless is an explanation of why the phonograph manufacturers are so given to parading pictures of dancers in their advertisements.

THE DEACON'S CONVERSION.

At the sound of carriage wheels on the gravel driveway, Mrs. Bennett stepped onto the vine-covered porch. "Silas! oh, Silas!" she called, her voice trembling with excitement. "How did the meeting turn out?"

Silas Bennett reigned up his horses with a jerk; the wrinkles on his brow deepened.

"They voted to ask for his resignation. What in common sense did you expect they would do?" Without waiting for a reply, he continued: "A church with a $200 debt on it could hardly do anything else."

A look of bitter disappointment settled on Mrs. Bennett's face; her chin quivered piteously. "Silas Bennett! do you intend to let the church die for a pittance like that when you have more money than you can use. Why, it's a great wonder the Lord don't punish you right here in this world for such daring unrighteousness."

It was not often that Silas Bennett's wife expressed herself; when she did, it was most unpalatable to her husband.

"For goodness' sake, Lucinda, I wish you wouldn't be forever harping on that strain; if I choose to keep my own money, why, it's my business, and not yours. If I'd give all I have to keep up the churches, we'd soon be in the poor-house ourselves."

With a defiant toss of his head, he drove on to the barn. He had just returned from the church meeting, where it had been voted to ask John Arnold for his resignation as minister of the Danville Church.

When he came to dinner a few minutes later, he was walking very erect, but with little jerks, indicating that he was still very indignant. Years ago, when he was young and poor, he had longed to enter the ministry, but as the opportunity had not offered itself, he had gradually grown away from the desire. Now he was so absorbed in the accumulation of wealth that he cared for little besides. To-day he was the richest man in the county, and although he was deacon in the little church at Danville, his heart was so callous that seeing the work given up did not move him. He paid twenty dollars a year on the minister's salary, besides throwing a few small coins into the contribution basket on Sunday mornings, and considered himself very liberal.

"As for missions, they were a perfect absurdity to which he never gave a cent; the heathen must look out for themselves as he did for himself," was his never-falling reply when asked to help.

But his wife was different; her whole heart was in the work. To her, missions were a sacred, God-given trust, not to be lightly used.

"Why, I couldn't enjoy heaven if I had never tried to bring some other poor soul there," she would argue with her husband, but to no avail. Evidently, Silas Bennett could not be reached.

The two lived alone in the old, yellow farmhouse to which they had come on their wedding day, thirty years before. They were without relatives, except Dick, their handsome, reckless, wayward boy, from whom they had not heard for two years. Slowly but surely he had drifted from his mother's side, and entered the paths of vice. By nature thoughtless and easily influenced, he had been led into the use of intoxicants by merry companions, and at last, while under the influence of liquor he entered his employer's store and stole a sum of money; it was not large, but he was arrested and thrown out of employment in disgrace.

Then followed a stormy scene between him and his father, which ended in his leaving home, only to sink deeper in sin. For the first year he had written occasionally to his mother, but resolutely refused all invitations to return home. After that the letters ceased. During those two years of silence the name of their missing boy was never mentioned between them, yet each knew that it was a crushing weight on the other's heart.

It was in the afternoon of a late day in April. Mrs. Bennett stood in the doorway looking at the familiar landscape, the rugged, wood-crowned hills, the broad pastures just putting on their vivid, clean, fresh green of spring, and the great, brown, furrowed field that stretched far up the valley. It was very beautiful, this Western home, despite the gloom that had settled about her own life. As she stood thinking over the past, a neighbor, coming from town, handed her a letter that gave to her troubled heart the wildest thrill of joy it had known for months. It was from Dick. He had written to say that through the tireless effort of a home missionary in Dakota he had been rescued from a life of sin and debauchery, and had given his heart to Christ. "And," he added, "if father will forgive me, I am coming home. Precious word, how much it means to me now."

Trembling beneath the weight of this new-found joy, she ran to the distant field where her husband was at work.

"Oh, Silas! A letter from our boy. He's coming home if you write him; you will, won't you?"

With eager, trembling hands he took the letter and read it through; when he handed it back his face was white and drawn.

"You'll write for him to-day, won't you, Silas?" she repeated.

"No," he replied firmly, and turned away that he might not see the tears streaming down her faded cheeks.

He came in to supper early, but left his food almost untasted. "I have to go to town, and I'm in a hurry to get back against milking-time," he said by way of explanation.

Once out of sight of his own house, he drove furiously. The telegraph operator was an old friend. "See here, Ben, I want you to send this message for me, and don't say anything about it." He handed over a scrap of paper on which was written an address and these words, "My dear boy, come home."

To ward off questioning he hurried from the office.

The first Sunday in May was one of the sweet, calm days when the whole earth seems filled with light and love and hope—fit emblem of the blessed opportunity of bringing the "light of life" into Christless hearts and homes. A murmur of surprise ran through the audience when they saw Dick Bennett sitting between his father and mother, his face lighted with a new-born joy.

At the close of the service John Arnold read his resignation in a sad, wistful voice. "But," he added, "I am made to rejoice even now, for our last offering is our very best. This morning we have given fifteen dollars to send the 'Bread of Life' to hungry souls."

When he ceased speaking there was a hush all over the church; then a murmur of voices and suppressed sobs. Deacon Bennett rose suddenly: "I believe it was on account of a church debt that Brother Arnold was obliged to resign. And I want to say that we won't hear anything of it! We can't let him go!" He drew a paper from his pocket. "Here is a check for five hundred dollars to be used by this church; and while I don't want to dictate, I would suggest that two hundred be paid on the minister's salary, and the other three be added to our Home Mission collection. For I am satisfied now that once is America converted, we shall take the world for Christ."

For a moment there was awed silence; then Dick, in a strong, sweet voice, started the hymn, "There's sunshine in my soul." One after another took up the strain, and, as the music rose heavenward, the hearts of the people rose with it.

The next day John Arnold drove out to the Bennett farm. After a long, serious talk it was settled that Dick should "brush up his mind," as he expressed it, and be ready to enter college in the fall to prepare for the ministry.

"Oh, father," cried Dick, after a pause, "Brother Stanley's oldest boy, Harold, is studying at home with his father because they are too poor to think of sending him to school! Couldn't we pay his way, too, and let us go together? I'd be willing to live on half rations myself to make up for it."

When the kindly letter was received in the lonely little Dakota home, there was great rejoicing, for it not only contained an offer to send their boy to college with Dick, but also two crisp, new ten-dollar bills.

"Mother, dear," said Harold, as he laid his arm lovingly across the tired shoulders, "Your kindness to that boy was bread cast upon the water, and no mistake."

"It is ever so, whether we see the results or not," responded the mother, gently.—Christian Standard.

TOO BUSY TO BE USEFUL.

"I sometimes think we are in danger of being too busy to be really useful," said an old lady thoughtfully. "We hear so much about making every minute count, and always having some work or course of study for spare hours, and having our activities all systematized, that there is no place left for small wayside kindnesses. We go to see the sick neighbor, and relieve the poor neighbor, but for the common, every-day neighbor, who has not fallen by the way, so far as we can see, we haven't a minute to spare. But everybody who needs a cup of cold water isn't calling the fact out to the world, and there are a great many little pauses by the way which are no waste of time."—Southern Churchman.

DR. LAMAR TO BE COMMENDED.

The action of Dr. A. J. Lamar, one of our Publishing Agents, in declining to accept from Dr. W. F. Tillett for our various periodicals issued in Nashville an advertisement for the Vanderbilt Biblical Department in which it was proposed to blazon it abroad as a "Theological School for the education of ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," was in our opinion entirely proper, and we think that he deserves the hearty commendation of the Church for the prompt and courageous manner in which he met the issue presented. The fact is, the more we see of this distinguished son of Alabama the more we admire him. Though quiet, gentle, and considerate of others, he is clear-visioned in discerning what is right and is fearless and uncompromising in his maintenance of it. With him, self-interest weighs little when principle is at stake, and the thought of being politic when the welfare of the Church is in jeopardy seems never to occur to him. His course at the recent General Conference showed this to be true, even more impressively than did the recent incident in which he bore himself so worthily. He bears a name which throughout the Nation is synonymous with what is high and noble, and he is in every way fully worthy of it.

It may be thought by some that in uttering these sentiments we are somewhat inconsistent, as Dr. Tillett's advertisement in its original form appeared in the New Orleans Advocate a time or two; but in explanation of this we will state that we did not see it until it had been published. We do not always inspect our advertisements in advance, but having an understanding with our associates that if anything appears to be questionable it is to be brought to our attention, it is our rule to trust them to do this. In this instance they did not discern the impropriety involved in the Dean's announcement, and hence said nothing to us about it; but as soon as we laid eyes upon it, we saw that it was objectionable and had taken the matter up with our Publisher before we knew of its rejection by Dr. Lamar.

In this connection, it may be not amiss to state somewhat more specifically why we think Dr. Tillett's proffered advertisement was improper. The recent General Conference by withdrawing all appropriations from the Vanderbilt Biblical Department, as well as by the paper which it adopted concerning the University as a whole (in which provision was made for the establishment of other schools of theology for the training of the ministry of the Church), clearly showed that it no longer regarded the Vanderbilt seminary as a suitable place for the education of our young preachers. The Vanderbilt Board of Trust, for whose opinions Dr. Tillett seems to have very great respect and deference, in their formal resolutions construed this action of the General Conference as evidence that it had thoroughly repudiated the University, in toto; and that body also had declared the University in all its departments to be completely separated from and independent of the Church. Hence, when Dean Tillett presumed to publish that he would continue to run his department as a Methodist school, he manifestly did what he had no authority to do, and what we think was misleading and quite reprehensible.

It is true that in his report to the Board of Trust Chancellor Kirkland recommended that the usual appropriations should be made to the Biblical Department for the next four years, and that "perhaps at the end of that time a new adjustment could be made with the General Conference;" but in view of the fact that Dr. Tillett had himself, among many other suggestions made to the Church before the last General Conference met, included the one that it might seek to acquire this department, and that it was utterly ignored by that body, which proceeded to make other arrangements for the instruction of our ministers, the Chancellor's recommendation did not at all justify the Dean's effort to parade the school of which he is the head as having in any sense the sanction of the Southern Methodist Church. We would not presume to invade the realm of motive, and we will not say that Dr. Kirkland's recommendation and Dr. Tillett's proposed announcement were shrewdly designed as a bid of the continued patronage of the Church for the various schools of the University; but we do affirm that such would have been the inevitable effect of their statements if nothing had been said in opposition to them. For, if the Church should silently acquiesce in having those who are to occupy her pulpits trained and equipped at Vanderbilt, she could not consistently object to having her other sons and daughters attend that institution. To yield on the one point, would necessarily be to surrender the whole question.

Nor can we hint wonder why this part of the Chancellor's report to the Trustees was published under such glaring headlines in the Nashville Banner. If he had such a proposition to make to the Church as has lately been given out, why did he not make it to the last General Conference? Not a syllable from him came to that body. So extremely anxious were some of the brethren for some message from the Vanderbilt Board of Trust that they even went to the trouble of wiring Col. Ratcliff, its President, inviting him to come before the Special Vanderbilt Committee, but he did not deign to put in his appearance. It would seem from his belated recommendation, that Dr. Kirkland, notwithstanding his reported utterance that the loss of the cooperation of the Methodist Church would not at all hurt the University, is, not after all, so utterly unconcerned, as some have imagined, as to the result. In his speech at the Alumni banquet in Atlanta on May 26, as reported in the Atlanta Journal (which he himself has endorsed as correct), the Chancellor showed that he is yet relying not a little on the Methodists. He said: "We are conscious that, regardless of the (General) Conference's action, thousands of good Methodists will continue to send their sons to Vanderbilt."

Before leaving this subject, we desire to say with the utmost emphasis at our command that we do not think that the Church can ever afford to take over the Vanderbilt Theological Department under any conditions. 1. Because the atmosphere that surrounds the University is so hostile to the Church that to train our ministers in it would be to disaffect them and unfit them for the largest usefulness and to scatter through the Church a disloyal and harmful element.

2. Because the work of the present faculty is distrusted by a large part of the Church, and if the Church should displace any of its members after getting control of the department, a great hue and cry of persecution would be raised. These gentlemen may not be aware of it, but there was a very strong feeling throughout the connection that if the Church succeeded in winning her lawsuit there would be some straightening out of things in the Vanderbilt Biblical School; but this would now be practically impossible. The following which some of these gentlemen managed to muster at Oklahoma City may seem to be somewhat in conflict with this statement, but it should be remembered that they secured their strength there chiefly by sounding out the war-cry of "hanging on and fighting 'em." If they had squarely submitted the proposition of falling in with the Board of Trust, there is no reason to believe that they could have rallied around them more than a corporal's guard. We repeat that there is a very general feeling among Southern Methodists that the teaching now being done by the Vanderbilt theological faculty is to a considerable extent out of harmony with our standards of doctrine, and that most of the professors have been disloyal to the Church in the fight for the control of the University and are yet largely out of accord with her educational aims and purposes.

3. If we should educate our preachers in a seminary connected with Vanderbilt, it would, as we have already said, have the effect of endorsing the University as a whole. This, too, when the Carnegie transaction pulled off (with the humiliating conditions attached, while the litigation with the Church was pending in court) has left a disgraceful stain upon it which "all ocean's waters could not wash away" and which will abide forever.

4. Two well equipped theological seminaries will be enough, and with one in Dallas and another in Atlanta, we will have no need for a third one in Nashville. Some of the pro-Vanderbilt men are having much to say about turning our backs on the great opportunity open to us in connection with Vanderbilt University and the Peabody College; but let it be remembered that these schools have been in existence for years and that the Vanderbilt Biblical Department, with the whole Southern Methodist Church behind it, enrolled last year only 101 students. Why, some of our colleges which maintain courses of Biblical study had nearly half that many young ministers in attendance. We dare say that the manly young men who in the coming years will go to the Peabody College will have a higher regard for the Southern Methodist Church and will be much more accessible to her influence, if she has the self-respect to sever all connection of every kind with Vanderbilt University, than they would if she should obsequiously hang on there in spite of the humiliating treatment that has been accorded her.

No, no; the line has now been clearly drawn, and our Conferences, preachers, and people, and even the Vanderbilt theological professors must decide under which flag they will march—whether they will align themselves with Kirkland, Carnegie & Company, or whether they will be loyal and true to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The time for straddling, compromising, and manipulating is past, and a re-reading of our Church vows and a proper adherence to them is the duty of the hour. Let our Bishops, our pastors, our prominent laymen, and our connectional officers cease to honor Vanderbilt University with their presence, or in any way to give to the men who have been in league with this rebellion any prestige to be used against the Church. This is not persecution; it is simply self-preservation. There is not an organization in this country, from the Government down, that would continue in places of honor and trust and give prominence and influence to men who are out of harmony with its vital plans and policies; and the maudlin sentiment that would have the Church act otherwise is supported by neither good sense nor sound religion.

IN THE MASTER'S NAME.

The following incident, which occurred within the bounds of one of our Southern Conferences, came to our knowledge recently. We give it to our readers as a most remarkable example of service to a brother in the name of the Master:

An old preacher had a protracted spell of serious illness. During this time milk formed an important item in his dietary, and he was accustomed to take his breakfast quite early. A brother furnished his milk supply by rising before day, milking his cow, and then walking a distance of several blocks, no matter how severe the winter weather, so that before sunrise the old brother had an abundant supply of good, rich milk. This was continued several weeks.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Little is yet certain concerning the future course of events in Mexico. The resignation of Huerta and his departure from the country has increased the prospect of peace, but has by no means assured it. There are afloat rumors of serious disagreements between the leaders of the Constitutionallists, and parleying is going on between General Carranza and Carbajal, the successor of Huerta, as to the terms of the surrender, which the latter is expected to make in the very near future. General Carranza is reported to be demanding that the Federal forces shall unconditionally lay down their arms, while Carbajal is seeking to secure before his capitulation some assurance of merciful treatment and amnesty for those who have supported Huerta in the struggle now apparently approaching its end. The United States also is using its good offices to prevent the wreaking of vengeance upon the conquered, and fortunately by virtue of the fact that she still has troops at Vera Cruz, is in a position to exercise considerable influence in the interest of clemency. The other foreign nations seem to be watching the proceedings very closely and some of them are already beginning to talk of money indemnities for the wrongs inflicted upon their citizens and the destruction of their property.

The great need of Mexico at this crucial time seems to be the rising up of a leader with a head and heart large enough to grapple with the perplexing situation and bring order out of the long-existing chaos. Of the men now in the public eye, Carranza seems to give the most promise of this, though he is charged with having been a defaulter and as lacking in integrity. Villa is undoubtedly a man of force and has many of the elements of leadership, but he has been a handit and numerous crimes are alleged against him. It may be that he who can read the inmost secrets of the human heart and rightly weigh the worth of men has hidden away somewhere in torn and distracted Mexico a leader who will prove to be the man of the hour and who can bring deliverance to this unhappy and suffering people. It still behooves Christians everywhere to remember earnestly at the throne of grace this stricken land in which bloody strife has so long reigned.

FROM BISHOP MURRAH.

It was our pleasure to receive a few days since a letter from Bishop W. B. Murrah, from which we take the following extract: "I have just reached Jackson after a round through Oklahoma and parts of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Georgia, holding district conferences, dedicating churches, laying corner-stones, and attending the sessions of the Educational Commission in Atlanta. Letters of importance have been chasing me from point to point, and some of them possibly may have failed to reach me at all. If any persons who have written me have not received a reply to their communications, or if others have had a delayed response, this statement will serve to explain to them the reason why."

Referring to the work of the Educational Commission in Atlanta, Bishop Murrah says: "In my judgment, great things will come from the movement that we have inaugurated."

Everywhere our Mississippi Bishop goes he is making a fine impression. While at the General Conference in Oklahoma City, we heard some of his leading colleagues speak in terms of the highest appreciation of the service which he is rendering the Church.

REV. R. J. HARP.

In the death of Rev. Robert J. Harp, an announcement of which appears elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, the Louisiana Conference has lost its oldest and one of its worthiest members. A Tennessean by birth, he came to this State before he was grown, and for more than half a century his influence had made for the upbuilding of Methodism in this commonwealth and section. Up to the time that his advancing years, with their physical infirmities, forced him to retire from the active ranks, he was a tireless worker and a tower of strength to the Master's cause. He filled a number of important appointments in his Conference, served efficiently in various capacities, and helped to establish the Church in many new and difficult fields. It was largely through his efforts that the money was raised to purchase the Advocate and depository property on Camp Street in this city, and he was always one of the Advocate's most loyal friends. His character was exalted and Christlike, and there was not a single blot upon his record.

Brother Harp had been on "the honor roll" of the Louisiana Conference for several years. The last congregation that he served was that of the Noel Memorial Church of Shreveport, and his last public service as a minister was to participate in the exercises of the laying of the corner-stone of our new First Church in that city, a little more than a year ago. He had been gradually growing weaker for some time, and knew that the day of his home-going was not far distant. Only a few weeks before, his beloved wife had heard the Master's call and had preceded him to the Father's house. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. J. R. Whitworth, at whose home he passed away. To her and the other bereaved ones we extend our deepest sympathy.

We hope to give our readers at an early date a more extended account of the life and labors of this noble itinerant from the pen of some one who is fully informed concerning his long and useful career.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. G. E. Cameron, of Alexandria, La., assisted Rev. W. S. Henry in a series of revival services at De Ridder last week.

Rev. L. E. Wicht, of Eastabuchie, Miss., under date of July 23, says: "We will begin our revival meeting here to-morrow. Rev. R. A. Allums, of Ovette, Miss., will do the preaching."

Rev. W. S. Henry, our energetic pastor at De Ridder, La., reports the raising recently of $2000 toward the construction of the new church soon to be erected by our people at that place.

In a business note to the Advocate office, Rev. G. A. Baker, of Mooreville, Miss., adds: "I will start my revival work to-morrow (July 26). I have secured some very efficient helpers and we are expecting great results."

Rev. L. T. Sargent, our active pastor on the Greenwood Springs (Miss.) charge, brought us under obligations to him for some subscriptions to the Advocate last week. The work is progressing favorably in his field.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., of Poplarville, Miss., has our hearty thanks for a club of 6 subscriptions, forwarded on July 24. Do not miss reading the interesting letter from Brother Lewis which appears on another page in this number of the Advocate.

We ask our contributors to be patient with us for the present. We have been overrun with copy this week, and our next issue will be devoted to the Woman's missionary work. We cannot extend our forms a single inch. We often wish that we could.

Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of the First Methodist Church (South) of this city, has been resting for a few days at the Seashore Campground. In his absence the Editor occupied his pulpit last Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and was greeted by a good summer congregation.

Work is now proceeding on the new $20,000 brick church that the Southern Methodists are erecting at Moss Point, Miss. It is expected that this structure will be ready for use by Nov. 1. We congratulate Dr. B. F. Jones and his choice flock upon this forward movement.

We have been pleased to note that several of the presiding elders' districts in the two Mississippi Conferences have pledged as much as $400 toward furnishing the new Main Building at Millsaps College. This is a movement in the right direction, and every district in Mississippi should lend it a helping hand.

From Paris, Miss., Rev. C. Wesley Baley, who is one of the hustling pastors of the North Mississippi Conference, gave us on the 20th inst., a club of 5 subscriptions. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate Brother Baley's kindness in remembering the interests of the Conference organ during these dull summer days.

By request of Miss Zora Saucier, the Secretary of the managers, we make the following announcement: "The McHenry Holiness Camp Meeting will begin on Sept. 4, and will continue for ten days. Rev. C. M. Dunaway, of Georgia, and Rev. F. E. Wells, of Arkansas, will be the leading workers during these services."

We greatly regret to be apprised of the death of Sister Oaks, the beloved wife of Rev. T. L. Oaks, our pastor on the Poplar Springs (Miss.) Circuit, which occurred on July 5. She was ready when the summons came and met the last great enemy as a conqueror. Our heart goes out in tender sympathy to Brother Oaks and his sorely bereaved children.

Dr. I. W. Cooper wired us last Tuesday as follows: "Miss Barge, of Whitworth College, won the piano medal at the Crystal Springs Chautauqua last night." This was in a contest with nearly all of the leading woman's colleges in Mississippi. A Whitworth girl also bore off the prize in this contest last year. Great is Whitworth, and Dr. Cooper is its prophet.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, our strong and resourceful pastor at Sardis, Miss., has our thanks for a club of subscriptions sent in on July 14. This list of names for our mailing files, with a check to correspond, looked somewhat refreshing in this time of financial dearth. These are the months when a church paper most appreciates assistance upon the part of its friends.

Rev. H. W. May, the active presiding elder of the Alexandria (La.) District, says: "In the Advocate last week the number of members stated to have been received in our territory since the Annual Conference was excessive. We have received about 300, not 500." The figures in the letter from which we took our statement were indistinct. We are sorry to have made this error.

We have on our table an attractive catalogue of the Port Gibson Female College. The past session of this historic institution was a good one in every respect, and the outlook is auspicious for a fine opening on Sept. 9. We regard this school as most fortunate in having secured as its president Rev. T. J. O'Neill, who is one of the strong and resourceful men of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. H. Bass, of Columbus, Miss., writes: "I have just closed a meeting in a community near Columbus, where I have an afternoon appointment, with 36 additions to the Church. The name of the Church which I serve in Columbus is Central Church, not 'Second Church,' as you had it in a recent number of the Advocate." We regret to have given Brother Bass' congregation a wrong designation, and we are much obliged to him for calling our attention to the mistake.

Under date of July 21, Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, wrote as follows from Flora, Miss.: "I am here in the midst of what the pastor, Rev. M. L. White, calls in many respects a remarkable revival. Thirteen have already given their names for membership in the Churches, 8 of them coming to our Church. Large audiences are attending and the interest is increasing at every service. I go from here to Deasonville, Miss."

Under date of July 24, Dr. W. H. Huntley, who, with some of the members of his lately scattered family, is now sheltered in a cottage on the Seashore Campground, in a personal note to the Editor, says: "The Christian Workers' Assembly opened last evening with a pleasing study of William Carey, by Dr. H. A. Jones, the Presbyterian pastor at Gulfport, who was born in England. The Campground is full of resting tenters—orderly with a family feeling toward one another."

Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of Ackerman, Miss., writes: "About half the tents and the tabernacle of the South Union Campground were burned last Wednesday evening, July 22. The Camp meeting was to have begun last Sunday, but has now been postponed. The people have already commenced to rebuild and hope to have things in readiness to begin the deferred services on Thursday before the 4th Sunday in August. This camp meeting has been held consecutively for more than forty years and it is a sacred place to many people."

Rev. L. L. Roberts, pastor of the Gibson Memorial Church of Vicksburg, Miss., has elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate a statement which ought to appeal strongly to the Methodists of the entire State of Mississippi. Read what he has to say, and send him at once a remittance for the worthy cause for which he asks assistance. We have too long neglected to honor the memory of Tobias Gibson and it is high time that we were wiping out this reproach. We will gladly carry for Brother Roberts a list of the contributors to this deserving enterprise, in which we feel much interest.

We were pleased to receive a few days since a letter in the familiar handwriting of Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, Miss., but we regret to know that he is not yet entirely well. Brother Peebles says: "It will be three months next Monday, July 27, since I had to go to bed, and subsequently I was operated on. Infiltrations still trouble me, and, of course, interfere with my perfect recovery." We earnestly hope that this faithful worker will soon be rid of every trace of the malady that has afflicted him and that he will soon be able to resume his work to extend the Master's cause.

A note from Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., written on the 24th inst., stated that his babe, which was recently so ill in New Orleans, was continuing to improve. Referring to his quarterly conference, which had just been held, Brother Saunders, in the same communication, said: "It met at Knoxo, and was quite a success. Rev. Robert Selby, our presiding elder, preached us two good sermons. The one on Sunday morning was especially impressive, and ought to be preached to every congregation in the district." Everywhere that he goes in his diocese Brother Selby seems to be magnifying his responsible office. The brethren all agree that he is accomplishing a great work for the Church in his field.

Rev. Louis Hoffpauir, of Ville Platte, La., writes as follows: "Our work is progressing nicely. We will begin our revival meeting at White's Chapel to-morrow (July 25), with Rev. H. N. Harrison to do the preaching. On August 8, we will begin a series of services at Bethel and will have Brother B. H. Sheppard to assist us; and on August 29 we will start our meeting at Ville Platte, which I will conduct, assisted by Brother M. Hebert. We hope to build up here one of the best charges in the Louisiana Conference, and to see developed in the near future in Ville Platte, which is now the center of the Evangeline Mission and a very important point in our French Mission field, a strong and self-sustaining church."

The Commercial Appeal states that the Commissioners of the Memphis Methodist Hospital purchased last week as a site for that enterprise the W. B. Mallory property of that city at a cost of $115,000. It embraces eight and one-half acres of land and a fine residence with 22 rooms. The Commercial Appeal says: "The Mallory home is one of the finest residence properties in Memphis, and the tract of ground upon which it is situated is not surpassed in beauty in the entire South. The broad, sweeping lawn is well wooded with great, spreading trees of the forest type. The home, which will be used as a hospital until a larger structure is erected, is built of red brick and stone. The property will come into the possession of the Hospital Commissioners on the 1st of next January."

The meeting held last week by Rev. R. V. Fulton, the pastor of the St. Helena charge, at Day's Church, near Liverpool, was a splendid success. Dr. J. T. Sawyer did the preaching at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. each day. Large congregations were present at every service, and the Holy Ghost accompanied his earnest messages in convicting and converting power. The members of the Church were greatly revived, a number of seeking souls were "born again," and many who had lost ground were spiritually quickened and reinstated. Dr. Sawyer says that Brother Fulton is greatly loved by his people, and that his efforts to build up his churches are heartily seconded by them. The indications are that he will carry an excellent report to the next Annual Conference.

AMONG THE BRETHREN.

Through the kindness of the brethren, I have been making of late a few short itineraries, and doing something for the Church and for the Master. In the latter part of April, it was my privilege to spend a day at Longview, where Brother V. C. Curtis was holding a Sunday School Institute, and to make more than one talk during the exercises. Brother Curtis is a most earnest and efficient Sunday school field secretary. He puts his time, body and soul into his work. He left for some other point of labor in the afternoon on the day I was at Longview, and our presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Woollard, preached an entertaining sermon at night. Brother F. H. McGee, a Millsaps graduate, is in his second year as pastor of the Longview charge. On the first Sabbath in May, it was my pleasure to be with Brother J. J. Baird and his clever people at Brooksville. The day was somewhat inclement, but we had services, the writer occupying the pulpit morning and evening. Brother Baird is in high favor with his people. The cordial hospitality of the parsonage home added to the pleasure of my visit to Brooksville. Brooksville is a pleasant town in the midst of the "prairie belt," and is the home of those elect sisters, Mrs. Ruth Koger Price and Miss Sallie Koger, daughters of the late Rev. T. J. Koger.

The third Sunday in May found me with Brother J. M. Guinn at Crawford, where I preached morning and evening. I had the pleasure while in Crawford of being kindly entertained in the hospitable home of Captain Art Ervin, and of meeting other esteemed friends of bygone days. Brother Guinn, now in his fourth year on his charge, serves an appreciative people. He also is a graduate of Millsaps College, and gives promise of a useful ministry.

The first Sunday in June found me again at Longview, to be present and to 'make a talk' at a Children's Day service. The exercises occupied the Sabbath morning hour. When I took my seat after a thirty or thirty-five minute talk, I felt that it was summer weather. A sumptuous dinner spread in the near-by grove followed the interesting exercises. Brother F. H. McGee, the Longview pastor, is an industrious toiler, and his work will tell for the good of his charge.

I spent the second Sunday in June in Mayhew, where, morning and evening, it was my very great privilege to preach to the people. While in Mayhew I enjoyed the kindly association and hospitality of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Burt, and of his excellent family. Brother Burt is a faithful itinerant, a good preacher, and is esteemed by his people.

On the fourth Sunday in June I was with the Artesia brethren. I preached for them at the morning hour, and witnessed an interesting Children's Day service at night, under the leadership of Brother A. T. McIlwain, who besides being a Sunday school superintendent, is also junior preacher of the charge, and cashier of the Artesia bank. Rev. E. J. Mohler is the resourceful pastor of this growing charge.

It was a great privilege during these brief itineraries — all within the bounds of the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference — to do some work for our Lord and Master, while added pleasure was found in the cordial greetings and kindly association of brethren and friends.

I tried many remedies and doctors. I decided to try Tetterine and after 8 weeks am entirely free from the terrible eczema." ### FROM POPLARVILLE, MISS.

I saw the following notice not long ago on the wall of a negro Methodist Church: "Please do not sleep in this church. To do so is a $5 fine. Also do not spit on the floor, for it's the same." I asked a negro if the notice kept the congregation from going to sleep, and the answer was, "No, Sir, dey sleeps on des the same."

In a revival recently held here and conducted by Brother Dan Kelly, on two or three evenings we made room in a section of the church for some of the colored people who wished to hear the sermons. At the close of one of the services, I requested the negroes to sing for us, "Lord, I want to be a Christian, in my heart." They did so with a vim; and when they began singing, "Lord, I feel the Spirit moving in my heart," I tell you, I felt it moving in my heart, and Kelly and I couldn't keep still. It looked for awhile like there was going to be some old-time shouting there among both white and colored.

We had a great revival, June 14-24. Just preceding the revival, we had the pleasure of entertaining the Seashore District Conference, and the presence of these brethren, both preachers and laymen, in our town and homes was a great blessing to us all. The preaching of the conference by Brothers Blackwell, Gunn, H. J. Moore, and Burton, was as strong and evangelical as I ever heard at a district conference, and it helped to pave the way for the revival which followed. During the revival, the good Lord met with us in great power, and brought us great times of refreshing. Many tell me it was the best revival ever held here. Some results: Many conversions and reclamations, family altars erected and re-established, a citizen's prayer meeting started, better attendance on all the services of the church, with many more among both old and young to take active parts in these services, and 32 additions to our Church, besides some applications for membership in other Churches. It has been a month since the close of the meeting, and the revival spirit abides and grows.

We came to this charge last December. Have added 63 new names to the church roll. All the departments of church work have grown and we feel that much progress has been made in the Master's work. Pray for us.

YOUR BOY'S TRAINING.

A man to whom you may trust your boy with absolute confidence is Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee.

During the past twenty-five years, Mr. Morgan has built up this training school for boys, around his own long experience, and his study of boy nature and of the problems of giving the boy the mental preparation, physical well-being, and spiritual strength for an honorable, manly, successful life. He has chosen his faculty, equipped his school, and ordered its conduct, with this one purpose in view.

Mr. Morgan is a graduate of the Webb School, Bellhuckle, Tenn., and of Vanderbilt University. He is a man of strong, wholesome personality and deep Christian character—an inspiration to every boy who come under his care. His close, personal relation with his boy students, their talents, their special needs, have given his school a position of high distinction. The citizens of Fayetteville have recently presented him with a $15,000 building as an addition to his school.

A request to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary of Morgan School, Tenn., will bring a catalogue and full information of this school.

Tidings From the Field

Springfield, La.

Dear Brother Meek: I have just closed a fine meeting at Springfield, La., with Brother J. B. Williams. We had good interest and large crowds. There were a number of conversions and 9 or 10 were received into the Church. Twenty years ago, when pastor there, I received into the membership of the Church 43 in one day. I found some of the work still abiding. Brother J. S. Settoon and his wife still work in the Sunday school, as do many others who took part in the work when I was there. I go to help Brother Coburn next. Pray for us.—W. T. Currie.

Pollock, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: You will please state to the Advocate family that we had a wonderful meeting at Pollock, La. We had the Rev. Q. L. Bennett, of Hico, La., with us. Brother Bennett is a sane gospel preacher, and is a safe man to work with. We had several conversions, and a goodly number were sanctified. We are praising God for this meeting. I will be with Rev. C. B. Powell at Palmetto, La., from July 26 to Aug. 2. I have the two last Sundays in October open, and would like to hear from any one wanting a meeting on that date. May God bless the Christian Advocate and its Editor.—E. G. Wood.

Kosciusko, Miss.

The churches of this little city united in a revival meeting the latter part of June. Rev. Walt Halcomb and the Blacksmith preacher of Knoxville, did the greater part of the preaching. Holcomb is a true prophet of God. The Blacksmith is in a class to himself. Both men were honored and loved for the work God did through them. Great crowds assembled daily for two weeks during the hottest weather to hear them. The Church was quickened. So far 20 have joined our Church and as many more have united with the other Churches. We are all happy and working together to hasten the coming Kingdom.—R. H. B. Gladney.

Oakvale, Miss.

On Friday we closed a twelve days' meeting with 7 additions to the Church—3 by baptism and 4 by letter. The services were conducted by our pastor, Rev. J. L. Greenway, who was assisted by his wife. Brother Greenway, with his pleasing manners, earnestness, zeal and power as a speaker, held the people spellbound under the power of the truth. Sister Greenway is a most consecrated Christian who never wearies in well-doing. We predict a great harvest for the Master at an early date as a result of the work done during this meeting. May the Lord bless Brother and Sister Greenway in their work for him and may he perpetuate the good that has been done here.—A. J. McGahey.

Homer, La.

Dear Mr. Editor: I refrain from taking your valuable space to give an extended account of the great meeting which was conducted here by the evangelist, Rev. Thurston B. Price. We erected a tabernacle with a greater seating capacity than all the churches of the town combined, but it was inadequate to meet the demands. It is said that larger crowds attended this meeting than have ever been seen assembled in Homer on any previous occasion. The whole town received a great moral and spiritual uplift and scores testified to the beginning of a new life, and eternity alone will tell the rest. We want a larger tabernacle and a like meeting every year.—A Member.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Methodist Woman's Missionary Society of Greenwood, Miss., in loving memory of our sister, friend, and co-worker, Mrs. Ella Bew, adopted the following resolutions concerning her death:

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, in the removal of our sister from our midst, and, knowing her sweet Christian life, we feel assured that our loss is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That the sympathy of this Society be extended to the family of the deceased in their sad bereavement, and

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on our minutes and a copy sent to the family, the city papers, and the New Orleans Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. E. Ellington, Mrs. Henry Herlong, Mrs. Walker Bell, Committee.

ANOTHER LOAN FUND.

Rev. W. F. McMurry, D.D.

Title has just been received to a quarter section of Oklahoma land, easily worth $8000, which becomes a part of the Loan Fund Capital of the Board of Church Extension. Accompanying the deed to this property is the following letter:

"Dear Brother McMurry: After some delay, I have executed deed and contract all in proper form and we leave the matter to the good Lord and the good it will do to the Church in the years to come after our days of pilgrimage shall have ended. We praise God to-day for the power he has given us to be able to do this for the Church that he has so wonderfully blessed. We have labored long and hard in the years past, but have great joy this day in the giving. We have tried in all these years to pay all we owed to the Church. God bless the gift and the cause and you in directing it. Our blessings have already been multiplied until it looks unreasonable to expect more, but we will serve and wait his pleasure. As ever, your brother,"

The brother who wrote this letter is a hard-working, business man, and has been a consistent member of the Church for many years. There are others like him here and there throughout the Church who would realize as much joy as he in giving to this good cause if the need for an increase in the Loan Fund Capital of the Board were called to their attention. Pastors and presiding elders are respectfully requested to take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Two More Loan Funds.

The Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has just received from a distinguished Methodist minister a contribution of $1000 to its Loan Fund Capital. This good man has been for many years a leader of our hosts.

The same week there came to the office of the Board a draft for $1500 from a good woman who has spent many years in teaching. She directs that the loan fund, which is to bear her name, is to be used in the interest of church and parsonage building among the American Indians.

FROM BRANDON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Mrs. Annie McLaurin, widow of the late Mr. Sylvester McLaurin, passed away last Tuesday morning, July 21. She had been practically an invalid for many years. Her death though not unexpected, was a source of great grief to her many friends and relatives. She had been a member of the Brandon Methodist Church for nearly 35 years and was one of our most loyal and devoted members. With calm and confident trust in her Savior and in great peace, she passed to her reward. Her funeral was held at the Methodist Church on Wednesday morning, and was conducted by her pastor.

Our third quarterly conference has just been held and the reports are up to what they were this time last year, and this in the face of a distressing financial condition due to an unprecedented drought. Our people are loyal and they expect to pay all assessments in full as has always been the case. Our revival season is now on and a great spiritual uplift is fully expected. Yours in the work,
O. S. LEWIS.

A REMINDER.

Kosciusko, Miss. Treasurer.

COURT'S DECISION CLARIFIES
PURE FOOD LAW.

On June 13, 1914, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting at Cincinnati in the Sixth Federal District, handed down a decision confirming the judgment of the Lower Court in the Coca Cola case. This case was originally brought before Judge Sanford of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee on March 13, 1911, and was tried at great length before a jury at Chattanooga, Tenn. A score of scientists, including the most eminent chemists, pharmacologists, and physicians of America, testified as expert witnesses. At the conclusion of the trial the Government withdrew all of the charges except two and on these two the Court instructed the jury to return a verdict in favor of The Coca Cola Company.

The case was then appealed, and the recent decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati, confirming the judgment of the Lower Court, sustains the claim of The Coca Cola Company that its product is neither adulterated nor misbranded within the meaning of the Pure Food Act.

The following quotation from the official court record will prove interesting alike to the manufacturers and consumers of food products as it gives a clear exposition of one of the most important sections of the Pure Food Law, and also defines the character of Coca Cola, the popular soda fountain beverage. It reads as follows:

"There is a middle view, which is sufficient for the purpose of this case, and which will recognize the composite meaning of 'added deleterious' rather than the separate meaning of each word. This view is that in using the word 'added' with reference to a possibly deleterious food ingredient, Congress had in mind an addition above and beyond the quantity in which ingredient was normally found in usual and customary articles of food, and that no such ingredient should be considered as 'added' if it was present only in the quantity in which it existed in these common articles of food with which every member of Congress was familiar and which had generally been thought wholesome. For example: Creosote and other products of destructive wood distillation are, independently considered, injurious, but they have always been present in smoked hams. Can the addition of the same preservatives to the same extent to the same meat be something that Congress intended to prohibit? The boric acid, found in apples, is a preservative. If certain apples which are to be preserved are not up to the maximum in this element, did Congress intend to forbid supplying the deficiency by the same element from another source? Acetic acid may, of course, be injurious, but if, by its use, an artificial vinegar is made which is chemically and in every way equivalent to the natural vinegar familiar to the members of Congress in many compounds, would they have thought of it as a deleterious addition? No example is so clear as the very one here involved. Every member of Congress had been familiar, from childhood, with tea and coffee; perhaps most of them drank it. The average cup of coffee contains more than two grains of caffeine; the average cup of tea, one and one-half grains. A glass of Coca Cola, as consumed, contains one and one-fifth grains of caffeine. The chemical qualities and the physiological effects of the caffeine which is in the tea or coffee and of the caffeine which is in the Coca Cola are precisely the same. We are quite convinced that the use in an artificial beverage of a certain element which had been one of its characteristic elements for many years, and when such use was in a less proportion than the same element was known to make up in different natural beverages than in universal use and generally thought wholesome—that such an element so employed could not have been within the meaning of Congress when it chose the words 'added deleterious ingredient'."

WHICH ARE YOU?

Now, the two kinds of people,

On earth I mean,
Are the people who lift
And the people who lean.
Wherever you go,

You will find the world's masses
Are always divided Into just these two classes.

A CHINESE HELEN KELLER.

The population of China includes 400,000 deaf mutes. "They are looked upon as most undesirable in a family; the girls in poor families, as soon as they are old enough, are sold into slavery; the boys are often turned out to make their way among a people most unsympathetic toward the deaf." A school for the deaf was established at Chefoo, North China, some years ago, by Mrs. A. T. Mills, formerly a teacher in the Rochester School, New York. In 1907 a branch school for deaf girls was opened, and Miss A. E. Carter took charge of the six girls who entered.

"Wang Fung-Ying, one of these six girls, was blind as well as deaf. Her exact age is not known, but she is about 18. Fung-Ying was sent to the Chefoo School from the Hildersheim Roman Catholic Mission in Kowloon, Hong Kong. The Sisters there had not the time to devote to this poor unfortunate child, and could do little for her. She would often go into violent outbursts of temper, and seemed quite a hopeless case. Her home was in Hoksau, in the hill country of the Hakas. The father brought her to the Hong Kong Mission, stating that in her early childhood, through an attack of smallpox, she had lost both sight and hearing. In consequence of this misfortune she had grown up in absolute ignorance, and there is little wonder that she flew into terrible rages.

"Miss Carter took the girl in hand, with the assistance of Mrs. Seu, a graduate of the Teng Chow Tu Girls' High School. It required three months of the combined efforts of these two women to teach the child that d-o-l-l spelled into her hand with the alphabet for the blind stood for the object they had put into her arms.

"When light began to penetrate this darkened brain, the work went on more easily and the fits of rage were less frequent. By the end of ten months Miss Carter and the child had both learned the Braille system of raised letters.

"As soon as Fung-Ying had learned to use the sign language and to write and read the Braille, she began to express herself in a feeble way, and each step carried her farther along the road. When she had been just two years and a half under the training, the result was marvelous. As Helen Keller had her Miss Sullivan, so Fung-Ying has her Miss Carter.

The blind and deaf girl has been won and taught by love, to which at first she was quite unresponsive. She now finds a joy in life; she has a means of intercourse with the other girls, and she takes an interest in what goes on in the school. Her greatest delight is to be with Miss Carter and her slate; and her constant prayer is 'Teach me.' The result is all the more marvelous when we consider the age of the girl before she received any training whatever and the nature of her antecedents—generations of poor, uneducated people.

"The difficulties which Miss Carter has surmounted can hardly be realized. It was necessary that she learn the Chinese language by the Bell Visible Speech Symbols. Then she had to become familiar with the Chinese way of doing things in order that she might not give offense to the Chinese people, who are inclined, not without grounds, to be very suspicious of the foreigners. All the difficulties have been met and conquered, and she now sees before her, as a result of two years of work, the awakening of a soul whose body was afflicted in many ways."—Silver Cross.

KINDERGARTEN WORK, SOOCHOW.

The kindergarten work in Soochow is large and varied. The director has under her control five kindergartens, 200 children, and about 20 students in training for teachers. She has associated with her 15 foreign and Chinese teachers. The students of the training school are keen, discerning young women, superior to the usual high school graduate at home. The pedagogical difficulties are multiplied by language difficulties. The students come from all parts of China, hence they differ widely in disposition, culture, and experience, and "each speaks her own tongue."

ZWOLLE, LA.

Our Missionary Auxiliary is composed of eighteen members. At our first meeting in January we re-elected our officers and made pledges for the year. We pledged $60 for home, $60 for foreign work, and $72 for the Orphanage.

We raise some money by means of individual pledges from our members, ranging from $1 to $3 per quarter. We served cake and ice cream at one entertainment and coffee, chocolate and sandwiches at another, each time realizing a neat little sum. We are planning to give an entertainment soon for the purpose of raising money for the third quarter.

We have our monthly business meetings at the Church and our social and other meetings in the homes of the different members. While we feel the need of a greater interest in the work, we feel sure that we shall meet our pledges, and that we shall have increased interest and zeal when the summer months are over.

MRS. R. M. MITCHELL.

"A nation's prosperity depends upon the physical condition of its working people; and with this grind for the mere necessities of life of so large a proportion of its population, what future awaits the United States? The very spirit of democracy calls for action, to say nothing of that sense of brotherhood which marks the followers of the Elder Brother. Verily, we are our 'brothers' keepers,' and the voice of their blood calls us to join forces to make life more tolerable and the din and strife less acute."—Mrs. R. W. MacDonell.

A LETTER FROM LAKE JUNALUSKA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been some days on the grounds of the "Southern Assembly," at Lake Junaluska, in attendance upon a conference of pastors and Sunday school superintendents, conducted by Dr. H. M. Hamill of Tennessee and that prince of Sunday School Superintendents, Mr. J. R. Pepper, of Memphis, Tenn. This conference was held under the auspices of our General Sunday School Board, and lasted from Wednesday through Sunday. It will be followed by a conference of Sunday school teachers, conducted by Dr. E. B. Chappell, our Sunday School Editor, and Dr. Bulla, Superintendent of the Adult Bible Class Department.

At our first meeting seventeen Annual Conferences were represented, and daily there have been added unto us those who were interested. From the subjects discussed, the methods of discussion, and the character of the discussions, this seems to be one of the most helpful Sunday school conferences ever held by our General Board. Railroad rates are not excessive, the hotel accommodations are reasonable, and the situation is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness. The social and religious atmosphere is charming. No Sunday school could do a wiser thing than to send its superintendent to these sessions, and no church could do a greater thing for its pastor than to give him a two weeks' outing on these magnificent assembly grounds. At one session of this conference enough valuable suggestions were made, covering some of the most difficult problems of the superintendent and pastor, to pay for the trip. And these suggestions were by veteran Sunday school workers, not by embryonics.

The most delightful feature of Thursday evening's session was an address by Dr. David Sullins of the Holston Conference, who is 88 years of age, and who has been for seventy-five years a member of the Sunday school. His subject was "A Sunday School Retrospect—Is the Modern Sunday School Better than the School of our Fathers?" Some very wholesome hints were dropped by this veteran worker. Lack of time prevents me from mentioning any of them.

The sessions of these conferences are held during the morning hours, while the afternoons are given over to recreation, and the evening hour to popular lectures and Chautauqua features. This is a great place, and these are great meetings.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 61—No. 32.

Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Whole No. 3050.

ROBERT A. MEEK, Editor.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 6, 1914.

CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Publisher.

PREFACE.

For the benefit of the few who, perhaps, do not know the aim and purpose of this special edition, we feel that some words of explanation are due. When the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference held its annual meeting in Laurel, in April, 1914, Mrs. J. L. Neill, who was chairman of the Publicity Committee, suggested that as a Conference we ask Dr. Meek for one issue of the Advocate during the year. When the committee's report was read before the Conference, it met with an enthusiastic reception. The other two patronizing Conferences were asked to co-operate; and how well they have done it we leave you to judge, for the special edition is here before you.

Our aim has been to reach every Methodist woman in the three Conferences, and fill with greater enthusiasm those who are already interested, and to arouse the interest of those who are indifferent. We have endeavored to have an article on every field of labor within our boundaries; and not only the fields of labor have been presented, but we have tried to make clearer the workings of the several departments of our organization. The vision of a greater and more far reaching work is before you, and we pray that you will catch the glimpse which each woman has so earnestly tried to place before you.

We take this occasion to thank both Dr. Meek and Mr. Chalmers. It was not a small thing for which the women asked when they made their request for a whole edition, and we feel that it was a great concession to our women. Only a few other Conferences have done this much. Dr. Meek has stood by our women in their efforts to advance the work of the publicity department, and we feel that much of its success is due to him.

We would not forget our publisher, for much hard work, and extra expense have been attached to the publishing of this edition, and both seem to have been freely and gladly given. All of our women do not realize the enormous amount of work connected with the editing and publishing of an edition like ours. Mr. Chalmers has worked and planned for us in order that we might get as much as possible of our copy upon the pages of his paper. If we were in a conference session we would gladly give him the Chautauqua salute for he deserves it, and much more.

We thank all of our women who have so readily responded to our requests for contributions. We have endeavored to publish all of the articles sent in, but some were quite lengthy and we were compelled to condense them. We are sorry for this. If there seems to be more material from one Conference than from another it is not intentional; we have tried to deal fairly with each one. We ask your indulgence and ask that you overlook any seeming failure on our part to treat you fairly.

Many reports were sent to us, some telling of excellent work accomplished among the auxiliaries, and we regret our inability to use them at this time.

Mrs. R. F. HARRELL,
Editor "Woman's Missionary Work."

"I GIVE MYSELF."

By Mrs. Robert Kemp.

Among the most vivid impressions of my early childhood there stands out the story of a Methodist Conference held in the town of Canton, Miss., when on the occasion of the missionary anniversary, there was found in the basket containing the collection, a slip of paper on which were these words: "I Give Myself," signed by a young woman soon to be the bride of Rev. J. R. Lambuth, who had offered himself as a missionary to China. I think the missionary spirit was born in me then to follow me through life. To my childish mind a missionary seemed almost a mythical being, connected with cannibals and horrible heathen practices that meant personal danger to all who went among them to tell the story of Christ.

In those days railroads and large towns were few, the wealth of the country was mostly on the plantations, so there were more circuits, many neighborhood churches and schools, some of the latter were academies from which the pupils could enter college. There were parsonages only in the most important stations, so as a minister's family grew he would provide a home for them from which he went on his work. As this was customary throughout the Conferences, it was best to give each minister work convenient to his family.

The father of our missionary had a home not far from Canton, near the Pearl River Academy and Church, a regular appointment in the circuit of that name. How well do I remember this small white-haired old man, so often in our home, whose saintly expression was an index of the soul within, with what reverence I regarded him, and felt I had been really blessed when he laid his hand caressingly on my head, and in words suited to my childish understanding told me of the blessedness that comes to those who serve God in their youth! Into this home as a boarder, and to the Academy as a teacher, came a young northern girl fired with the missionary spirit.

Young Lambuth found in her his ideal of Christian womanhood. She was attracted to him. Their love was made complete by spiritual congeniality, the one thing needed to make a perfect marriage. As their love grew she inspired him with her missionary spirit, so it was only natural that he should offer himself for the foreign field, and that they should spend their lives in that work. From the seed in her heart the first blades appeared when he, too, said: "I give myself."

So when the Church said "Go," the two sailed away to that far off land of mystery—China. It was no luxurious journey like that in the palace steamship of to-day. So long was the voyage that when they reached their destination there were three in the family, for Walter, our present Bishop, was born on the ocean.

The next vivid impression that comes to me was a visit home of Mr. and Mrs. Lambuth. They came from the father's country home as guests of my mother. With them were two Chinese boys that they had brought back to be reared in the Lambuth home and educated at Pearl River Academy, to go back as missionaries to their own people. What curiosities and how interesting were these little almond-eyed yellow boys in their quaint dress, little shaven heads and hanging queues as with stammering tongues they tried to form sentences in English! The two came and they entered the Confederate Army; one died in a hospital and the other, at the close of the war, went to work on the plantation of Rev. D. C. Kelley in Tennessee. His consuming desire was to go back to tell his people the story of Christ, but our Missionary treasury was empty; so he saved every dollar possible, and as soon as there was enough for passage money he went back. Not till he was on the ocean did he realize that he had forgotten his native tongue, and wondered what he could do till he could get to Mr. Lambuth. To his surprise and delight the first figure he saw in the lighter that came out to the ship was Mr. Lambuth. Now, who can doubt that if we follow the call of God he will take care of circumstances? Some years afterwards he came back to study medicine in connection with his mission work. He was an honored guest in our home.

To go back in point of time, Bishop Marvin made the first episcopal visitation after the reorganization of our work, and used these words in his report: "Mrs. Lambuth is the China Mission." Cut off from home, her husband unwilling to give up his work, she taught school, and with her spirit strengthening his, somehow they managed to live. Had she been a weak woman the work would have suffered. Now her daughter was old enough to help her, so together they built up the flourishing school which became the nucleus of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. All this time she was writing letters home spreading the knowledge of conditions and urging the women to organize. One message was: "Tell all good Southern Methodists to organize at once to help these poor degraded women who are hungering for the Word of God."

I have a vision of another visit home by Mr. and Mrs. Lambuth. They had left their grown children behind to keep the work alive. He was almost blind, leaning upon her who was vigorous still. They were not ready to rest yet and the visit was largely to produce interest in the work. This was their last visit together. I never saw either of them again, for soon after their return they were sent to Japan to open work there. I think the work was hardly out of the experimental stage when she was left alone; he was laid to rest in Japanese soil.

One more impression was hearing that the brave widowed woman had come back trying to spend her last days at home, but the call of the Orient was so insistent that she went back to Japan to carry on an industrial school for girls. My memory is not clear upon the events happening after I saw them on their last visit together. She may have established this school while her husband lived, the possibilities being great enough to lure her back, though the Society was not behind the work. I only know it was wonderful faith that took her back at her age, though particulars are vague. Then she died, not long did she wait after being left by her husband. It is fitting that they should sleep in the East to which their eyes looked with longing as a trophy for their Master in their youth, from the gaining of which no discouragement nor trials could ever turn them aside.

Gulfport, Miss.

WHAT LOUISIANA IS DOING FOR IMMIGRANTS.

By Mrs. A. C. McKinney.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana, under the management of the department of Co-operation with Missionary Societies, is asking each union in the State to present in each town a missionary spectacular called, "The Immigrant Gateway." A small admittance fee to be charged or a free will offering taken, as a nucleus, for a fund to be used to employ a woman at the Port of Entry in New Orleans, whose duty it will be to look after unprotected women and girls.

The New York W. C. T. U., for years, has had constantly employed a woman who speaks seven different languages, and is thereby enabled to help the helpless in a peculiar way.

When the Panama Canal is opened to the world, our own Port of Entry will become much more important, and all the women of Louisiana should be deeply interested in this movement. Any missionary society wishing to take the matter up in places where there are no W. C. T. U. organizations can get fuller information on application to me.

CONFERENCE

During the past year the Children's work in the Conference has made great progress. For what we are entitled to our Heavenly Father and thank the Father. We have learned more and we are doing more right and proper all night and our love shines over the frame of our world. The love and teaching of the child is under the world's greatest responsibility placed in human nature and the Church. The truth is burning expressed by John Rie that "the child of today is the Church of tomorrow" imposed is with the great responsibility of wise planning and patient effort in working for that the great work.

The figures that I read give a true picture of the gross volume of our justice and claim that has been poured out to the little Italy. First, the President of the Mississippi Conference in service to the children. The year has been very full of work and yet when I review the many hopes and ambitions that failed of fruition it really seems that more remains undone than was accomplished. My conception of the wonderful possibilities of the child and the gross possibility of the children's department are so large that realize now small.

The membership campaign which was held from September through December was quite a success in many places. The increase in organizational work in the State and Junior divisions is now gratifying to the Executive Committee. We were particularly happy over the new membership, and a large percentage from which children now members of our beloved membership family. It is of course being in the State Division, but of which we know and 1918 Junior being in the Executive Conference.

A circular letter has been made in Junior Mission Society Chambers, and the Mississippi Conference would thank in Mrs. Allright's report to the Council. Many of our Junior Missionary Societies and Junior Leagues are interested and we hope to correlate them all before another Annual Meeting. The joy was in the message. Father, Mother, and Brother have come together in the house of the children and Mrs. Allright informed us that the Mississippi Conference would live in the number of your vote and the children of the Mississippi Conference are waiting them. We show greater interest in every department more rapidly than in the financial but there has been improvement in both Baby and Junior enrollment, membership, Vis. and Miss Soc. valuations. Contributions and money have been sent in the Winter House.

I shall not attempt to explain the failure to report more money. Success is abundantly crowned our efforts in other lines. I feel sure we shall come to a larger giving in due time. However, we do not feel discouraged, but see in the labors of the past year great financial possibilities for 1914.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, began organized missionary work in 1864, through a Board of Missions with a Home and a Foreign Department. The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was authorized by the General Conference in 1878. In June, 1878, the first auxiliary within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference was organ-and an attorney in the name of Barry Faine, who was the last member of the organization leaving the Women's Missionary Society of Southern Louisiana in August when Mr. Faine was elected president. During the year from June 1961 to April 1962 the activities were organized through five women auxiliaries—also seen in Monroe, Baton Rougeville and Termini on 21 November in April 1962 and organized the Women's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference.

It takes women courage and the vim and vigor of the people for massing women in the North Atlantic Conference and hence women are said to possess "unlimited responsibility" but not their "right" the responsibility of the divine command to watch all mankind. Being slaves they must think that they are and only submit what is to wit and suffer and not for their "benefit" but the deeper and wider knowledge that it is a successful wife and mother who must watch the deeper meanings of the term in embracing it her thought and joyous life for suffering humanity. To Mrs. Mary Eliza Stone who served as chairman and well up the first fourteen years of the existence of International Society and the women who shared with her the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Atlantic Conference give a name they can never forget. These young women have long since entered into their final reward and eternal rest but the people they served have been and are finding a better and truer reward through the service of the twelve young women who have gone on as missionaries from the North Atlantic Conference. These young women are: Mrs. Mrs. Lora Lyndholm and Mrs. Annie Graham, 1890; Mrs. Alice Walker, 1891; Mrs. Alice Marshall, 1892; Mrs. Nellie Graham, 1893; Mrs. Lilla Whinnell, 1894; Mrs. Elizabeth Lee, 1895; Mrs. Lucille Garrison, 1896; Mrs. Alice Watson, 1897; Mrs. Mary Massey, and Mrs. Elsie Smithwood, and 1898; Mrs. Thimmae Foster. Some of these young women have gone home to marry others are married and others are still young of their heart is the cause to which they have been dedicated.

From the earliest mention of the Seaman Bible and Training School, North Mississippi women's hearts responded feeling that it met a much needed requirement. In the early history of North Mississippi mission work among the women a distinguished young woman of Greenville, Miss Helen Fuller entered behind the foreign work but was called "Home" before leaving her native land. She left as a legacy to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of North Mississippi. Her work was used as part of the endowment of the Helen Fuller Scholarship in the Seaman Training School. Miss Viola Clark born of Holly Springs was the first to take training under this scholarship. In the early history of the Training School the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi furnished a room there in honor of one of her most faithful women, Mary Roger Sykes.

For the first ten years of the history of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society our women labored their hands were full with its workings, and the local work of the Church. The glamour of the work on the foreign fields had blinded them to the need of the every day commonplace things at home. The General Conference had authorized the women of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to do the specific work of parsonage building in needy mission territory. The organization was then known as "The Woman's Department of the Board of Church Extension." During this regime the women of North Mississippi were still sleeping. The tales of preachers and their families who were living in sod houses and hovels were too ragged and unreal because our pioneer circuit-riders bore their trials too bravely and silently for the women to understand. But when the General Conference in 1880 changed the name to "The Parsonage and Home Mission Society," our women, under the spur and leadership of Mrs. T. B. Hargrove, then President of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, aroused themselves to a deeper and broader realization of their opportunities and responsibilities and gave the work an impetus which it has never lost. Mrs. Hargrove, as Corresponding Secretary, appointed district secretaries and organized twelve auxiliaries, all of which, save one, were organized within the three months preceding the organization meeting which was held at Winona, March 19, 1891. Mrs. Robert Somerville was elected President, Mrs. E. W. Foote, First Vice-President, Mrs. A. B. Finlay, Second Vice-President, Mrs. T. B. Hargrove, Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. J. R. Bingham, Treasurer, Miss Sue Murray, Superintendent of Juvenile Work, and Mrs. S. M. Thames, Recording Secretary. At this organization meeting, the treasurer reported $180 collected during her tenure of office, with a balance on hand of $62.90 subject to the order of the Conference. The first Annual Meeting was held at Carrollton in April, 1892. Twenty-one adult and eight juvenile auxiliaries were re-

At the second Annual Meeting held in March Mrs. Fannie Farnsworth was elected Corresponding Secretary. Within a few months after this meeting Mrs. Somerville resigned the responsibility of the Journal and Mrs. E. V. Farnsworth took it in her stead. In the report of the fourth Annual Meeting which was held in Greenwood the men were found "A communication was read from the Greenville Auxiliary regarding the Woman's Forestry and Game Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference and the North Smith Seminary in the State of Idaho and Training School." This had already been part of a meeting held in the fall. The Society accepted the communication enthusiastically and pledged to take it over. Also during the next year this opportunity had been offered to the Woman's Forestry Mission Society of North Mississippi but was declined because they already had the North Smith Seminary and did not want to have a further burden. It was felt a better thing for all parties & Society to assume such an obligation but the next year when it was offered it was accepted. Sometimes we have had something suggested after the meeting and it results from the opportunity. Sometimes our opponents have had it give us in an account of physical weakness. Sometimes it has been found in other Conferences or in the Woman's Forestry Mission Society except the Game Mission Society had no opponents of its own and sometimes the opponents have been rejected by the Board for various causes. But we now have one of our girls serving as second vice-president of the Conference and one Miss Fells Richardson is working in the Cooperative Game & Foresting Teams. Among has been meeting at our headquarters for a number of years. These we feel are sufficient compensation for our efforts.

Below the main floor, housing the Supply Department was put in a firm base by the appointment of Mrs. E. J. Wall of Sardinia as Superintendent of Supplies. When the hotel was made complete she was charged with all the furniture, linen, bedding, etc. and the general management of the hotel, with the exception of the kitchen, when the present incumbent, Mrs. Susan Thomas, was elected. This work under the supervision of these two capable and true women has brought comfort to the body and cheer to the heart of many people, perhaps that any other one could do the work.

This image is given to reveal history, and what we are in for. North Mississippi is fast becoming a mill center and thousands more missions to be built. Remember that Mrs. Stiles, president of the Home Mission Conference in the years 1911 and 1912, began investigations as to the best place to locate work and the best kind of work to undertake. Corinth was thought to be the most ready place in the Conference as a headquarters. Miss Edgema Hays, was secured and the foundation laid for the present Co-operative Home & Craft.

During the twenty-one years that the Woman's Home Mission Society of North Mississippi labored as a separate institution the total amount sent to the General Treasurer for ages and specialties was $31,794.25. Donated to personalities $101,500, a grand total of $133,294.25. This does not include the local work nor supplies sent to the Orphans' Home nor given to the needy. Suffice it that in 1912 the Home Mission Society of North Mississippi raised $17,141.15 for all purposes. It must be remembered that practically the same women labored in both the Foreign Missionary Society and the Home Mission Society. When the General Conference of 1906 merged the three Boards into one, and the Council of 1912 left it to the Conference as to whether they would unite as one body, the two societies of North Mississippi took steps to unite. The Home Mission Conference which met at Juka early in May, 1911, thought it wiser to take the year for educating the auxiliary women. The Foreign Missionary Conference, which met in June at Cleveland, believed it wiser to unite at once and passed a resolution to that effect, and appointed a committee to confer with the Home Mission Conference; but the Home Mission Society had no committee for this purpose at that time. At the Home Mission Conference, which met at Macon in May, 1912, a like committee was appointed to meet with the committee of the Foreign Missionary Conference. These committees met at West Point in June, 1912, and effected this union, as they had been so instructed by their respective bodies, with the following officers: President, Mrs. W. W. Scales. First Vice-President, Mrs. S. M. Thames. Second Vice-President, Mrs. J. E. Thomas. Third Vice-President, Mrs. S. B. White. Fourth Vice-President, Mrs. Walter Trotter. Corresponding Secretary Foreign Department, Mrs. T. M. Clark. Corresponding Secretary Home Department, Miss Louise Dunstan. Treasurer Foreign Department, Mrs. G. C. Jones. Treasurer Home Department, Mrs. W. W. Wilburn. Auditor, Mrs. C. E. Vance. Superintendent of Supplies, Mrs. Susie Thomas. Superintendent of Press, Mrs. A. C. Yeager; Superintendent of Literature, Mrs. J. F. Evans; Manager Membership Campaign, Mrs. Liddell Small; Recording Secretary, Miss Mamie Buckley.

The first two years of the united work has been largely adjusted. At the second Annual Meeting of the united work, held at Aberdeen in June, 1914, organic union was effected and the North Mississippi women have, at last, come into their own, and into the realization that there are no foreign missions, that the inventive genius of man has united ocean with ocean and belted the globe, making us one large family and enabling us to realize the Master's command: "Go ye into all the world."

WHAT SOCIAL SERVICE IS DOING IN LOUISIANA.

By Mrs. Elizabeth R. Kennedy.

One of the main things that Social Service is accomplishing in Louisiana is a more definite sense of obligation among our women to do their part toward the betterment of existing conditions. They are realizing that the fundamental law of the kingdom of Christ is service. They are reading and thinking more, and to a more definite purpose. They are not satisfied with simply helping by spasmodic alms-giving and cheap sympathy the man or woman who is "down and out," but with a whole-hearted effort they are trying to remove the cause of their down-fall.

Rauchenbach, in that great book: "Christianity and the Social Crisis," reaches the heart of the matter and the true meaning of Social Service when he says, "Blessed be the love that holds the cup of water to thirsty lips. We can never do without the plain affection of man to man. But what we need to-day is not the love that will break its back drawing water for a growing factory town from a well that was meant to supply a village, but a love so large and intelligent that it will persuade an ignorant people to build a system of water-works up in the hills, that will get after the thoughtless farmers who contaminate the brooks with typhoid bacilli, and after the lumber concern that is denuding the watershed of its forests. We want a new avatar of love." This new love is giving to men and women a new vision of the world purpose of Christ; a new realization that each one has a place to fill in some one of the varied departments touching human life and welfare.

Social Service is teaching our women to look after the school life of their children; to note the kind of citizens our schools are turning out. They are coming to realize more and more that prevention is better than cure.

Mr. Munsterberg says: "The United States spends annually five hundred million dollars more on fighting existing crime than on all its works of charity, education, and religion," and "the feeling is growing that a fraction of the money and energy expended would be ample to prevent much of this habitual crime from coming into existence at all." Social Service is bringing us to know something of the awful consequences of homeless, neglected and over-burdened childhood. It is estimated that there are eleven million children in our country without any religious training at all; and the great mother-heart of our State and nation is aroused to action.

Another practical result of this broad field of service is the great awakening on the subject of intemperance. Our women are rallying to the protection of their homes and children. They are realizing that drink brings in its wake a long trail of poverty, ruin and death; that it is a public nuisance, and makes paupers, lunatics, drunkards, and criminals; that the saloon is closely connected with the brothel, because when the brain is clouded by liquor, saloon environments, with definite purpose, appeal to the lower nature by the immoral pictures, songs and the presence of degraded women.

That it undermines the home and family life goes without saying. We can see it in the number of dependent children and deserted wives; in the number of suicides and social outcasts; in the mental and physical human wrecks; in the jails and hospitals. No other agency can claim so vast an array of victims.

As our women go deeper into the study of social conditions, they are confronted with an alarming array of facts relating to the social vice. They are just awakening to the idea that their own pure, innocent daughters may be in danger, and putting aside reticence and bashfulness, they are coming forward with all the mother-love that is in them, into the clear light of day to fight an evil that affects all homes, all social activities, and all individual life.

Prof. Trawick, referring to this subject in his book, "The City Church and its Social Mission," says: "It is not possible to estimate in figures the value of human character, or the destruction which the loss of a human soul involves. The simple statement that there are 500,000 women in public vice in the United States, that the entire number must be recruited at least every seven years, and that there are untold numbers of other women in clandestine vice, is sufficient to arouse the emotions of every sincere man."

The women of Louisiana, through their Clubs, Civic Leagues, and other philanthropic agencies, have been neither idle nor silent along this line. By voice and pen, in the face of ridicule and criticism, they are coming out in the open, for the protection of home and children and the support of their weaker sisters. For with this vision of need and suffering, there has come to them also the vision of an Almighty God whose ear is ever open to the cry of His children. The Spirit of the living Lord, working through sincere and unselfish men and women will bring to pass a glorious victory over the powers of darkness, and His servants shall realize the triumph of their Lord's parting words, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

THE SAILOR'S REST, GULFPORT, MISS.

By Rev. W. T. Griffin.

The Sailor's Rest, Gulfport, Miss., was opened jointly by the Woman's Council and the Board of Missions of Nashville, and the Mississippi Conference Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, on January 1, 1909. It was a most opportune time, as on that day the saloons closed in Mississippi, leaving Gulfport a dry town. From then until now it has not been closed from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., and a hearty welcome has been extended to more than 5000 sailors and officers annually.

During this period there have been eight assistants, two of them married men: Rev. R. A. Pearce, now in charge of the Seamen's Bethel at Mobile, Ala., and Rev. C. H. Strait, member of the Mississippi Conference. Most of these were faithful men, doing good service.

Our first musical instrument was a little mission portable organ, still in service at the Wesley House. Then came a good piano that still cheers the boys and helps to guide in the songs of Zion.

We have two reading rooms that are seldom entirely without sailors, reading or writing home.

Three bedrooms—two contain pay beds, and one free beds for those not "signed on" in ships, but waiting for "a berth"; a kitchen and bathroom are a part of our equipment for the sailors' health and comfort. Many a hungry man has been thus helped on the way.

The chapel holds one hundred chairs, is well lighted, and is often crowded at concerts on Thursdays and at services on Tuesday and Sunday evenings. Often our people are surprised at the many hymns the men are familiar with, and at how they sing God's praises.

We have heard them singing in German, Scandinavian, and English, the same songs and tunes. This opens the way for our Gospel and the distribution of Bibles, Testaments, tracts in their various languages, hundreds of them annually, sending them sometimes to the remotest parts of the earth.

Thousands of magazines and Christian papers are placed on the ships to cheer and instruct on long voyages.

Letters of appreciation come from many countries that show how far-reaching is the Bethel's influence.

"AN INTRODUCTION."

By Mrs. J. L. Neill.

I'm not so very much trouble, am I? I can easily be put in an ordinary sized envelope, except once a quarter, then I do puff out my sides and have a very malignant form of the big head. Who wouldn't though, with all the good news from the Council treasurers a part of my dress? The railroad fare of several of us can be paid with a 1 cent stamp, and we are so modest and retiring that even our dress never has to be licked. Although we are brim full of burning news, we never start a conflagration unless some one helps us, and sometimes even then it takes an army of us to be victorious, especially is this true if the heart we are trying to reach is incased in selfishness. Then, too, some of us are thrown in waste paper baskets under beautiful desks that are in rooms in which there is handsome floor covering, but we submit ourselves to "my lady's" wishes and allow the light that is within us to burn out instead of lighting up the pathway of some darkened soul.

But the thing that hurts us so badly is for some business man to take us from the post office to his office and there leave us with the papers for the boy who cleans up the office to destroy, when we feel sure that if his good wife had us she would so tell our mission that all who hear her would give more time, money, and prayer to our cause, and perhaps some strong young man, or some consecrated young woman, would answer, "Here am I, send me."

AN APPEAL TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

By Miss Cora Godat.

Never before in the history of the world or of the Church, has the Macedonian call sounded as clearly or as insistently as at the present time. In our own land, the burdened children of the mill, denied the privileges and joys of childhood, call pleadingly, "Come over and help us by relieving us of this heavy toil and giving us our rightful advantages." The helpless foreigner on our shores needs our assistance, our love, and the faith of our fathers. Ignorance, sin, and vice challenge us to arouse ourselves from our long apathy, and to let the love and power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ permeate all phases of life. Again, China turns longing eyes to Christian America for aid in solving the many political, economic, and religious problems which are the outcome of the recent upheaval of the sleeping dragon. Does not oppressed and burdened Korea appeal to us for "the abundant life" promised by the Master? Not less great is the need in Latin America, a land of the closed Bible, where people are turning away from their old religion and losing themselves in skepticism and atheism. These all cry, "Come over and help us."

Although a knowledge of the needs of the world to-day is necessary in order for us to properly meet them, this alone is not sufficient. We must realize the wonderful privileges and blessings which have come to us through the diffusion of the Gospel in our land, and in our own lives. We owe everything to Him—this great country with its government, its institutions, its homes, and the gift of salvation. We, as women, have tasted of the riches and blessings of Christianity, as will be readily seen when we look at the benighted womanhood of lands where Christ is not known. Because of the sacrifice and the lives given generations ago for the propagating of the Gospel in England and America we to-day live, as it were, in a beautiful garden and are eating of the fruits which others planted and nurtured long ago.

It is estimated that 25,000 missionaries, half of whom are to be unmarried women, must be recruited from America in order to evangelize the 625,000,000 people in non-Christian lands, untouched by the Gospel. This means that our Southern Church is to bear part of the responsibility, our share being 40,000,000. As it has also been estimated that one missionary touches 25,000 persons in a lifetime, we must send out about 1600 workers. This is a stupendous task, but through the power of Christ and the hearty co-operation of our people, it can be done. To meet this need and to accomplish this task, the Woman's Missionary Council of our Church is working nobly with a force of about 250 workers, both home and foreign. But there must be more, and so the call goes forth for young women of virile Christian character, of splendid education and ability, and strong in body, to offer themselves for service. Many calls for workers were put aside this year because there were only 20 new workers to recruit the ranks under appointment of the Woman's Missionary Council.

What will Louisiana do to co-operate in this great work? Surely, there are many young women in our Conference who are ready to go forth to the battle front. Yet, our State has fewer workers and volunteers for service than almost any other. Are not our young women willing to pay the price for the rich reward of joy and eternal life which comes as the result of a surrendered life? The Master is come and calleth for you; will you not respond, "Here am I; send me?"

THE BLOOM WESLEY HOUSE

By Miss Myrtle Long

In the early part of the year 1891, the property known as Bloom's in the Bailey estate, corner Cedar and East Beach, was leased by the Missionary Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the purpose of opening up social and religious work among the people of East Beach. For lack of equipment which the nature of the work demanded, the house was not occupied for almost a year after the lease was made. During this time, however, the further in charge was busy doing house-to-house visitation, caring for the sick, leading in cottage prayer meetings, and in many ways with the children.

In October, 1911, under the supervision of Rev. W. T. Griffin, the doors of the old home were thrown open. A cordial invitation was extended to all the people of the neighborhood, regardless of nationality or creed, to come and take advantage of the opportunities offered. A hearty response indeed resulted. Young and old crowded into the neighborhood home until it became necessary to enlarge the building and install better equipment.

As a result of the hearty response of the people, night school classes were organized for children who were employed by the cotton and shrimp factories, which deprived them of a public school education. Not only children took advantage of the night school, but men and women who had unfortunately been deprived of an early education were enrolled. One man desiring particular mention went from the night school into a business college, and is now a successful business man of Biloxi.

Sewing school classes were organized for girls between the ages of 6 and 16. With cheerful hearts and untiring effort these little women learned from week to week the different stitches in the course of scientific sewing, later applying these stitches in the making of doll clothes and other garments.

Another feature of the work is the kitchen garden where the little girls learn to prepare food properly, to water the flowers, to dust, to make the beds, where they learn in fact to be real home makers. The young people of the neighborhood have been attracted to Wesley House and many have been the pleasant evenings spent together in social games, music and singing.

The mothers were not neglected, but organized into a mothers' club. These Christian mothers have the best interest of their children and their neighbors' children at heart, are interested in the municipal welfare of their city and State, and have been faithful in their efforts to make Wesley House a pure social and religious center. Later the kindergarten developed, and as the rose unfolds its petals to the breath of the morning, to the warmth of the noon day's sunlight, to the dews of the evening, just so the unfolding of these young and tender lives entrusted to the kindergarten teacher is accomplished daily by the religious atmosphere pervading all of the work done in the home.

The features of the work mentioned are educational and only a means to the end for which the work was established, viz: the salvation of souls. The Sunday school, embracing beginners, primary, junior, and senior departments, is a potent factor in the neighborhood, inculcating right principles in the hearts and lives of those who attend.

The gospel services held every Sunday night are well attended and one has only to hear the testimony of those who have been blessed in these services to be convinced of the saving power of Him who said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Last October through the most earnest efforts of Mrs. R. E. Johnson, of Gulfport, who is president of the Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, the Wesley House property was purchased by the Conference. Repairs have recently been made and to-day a two story building enhances the beauty of the grounds.

We feel that the opening of the different features of work in September will mark the beginning of a brighter page in the history of our Wesley House work.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CO-OPERATIVE HOME

By Miss Mary E. Daniel

When the women of the North Mississippi Missionary Conference two years ago, asked the Council for a headquarters, the location and kind of work to be done were undecided. However, there was a strong conviction that in some of North Mississippi's larger towns a work that could and should be done was just awaiting the touch of a trained worker.

To several of these towns the headquarters was offered, and through the sympathetic interest of the pastor of First Church, Corinth, a man of vision who glimpsed wonderful possibilities in this town, Corinth was selected as her field.

September almost two years ago, Miss Editha Kapp arrived and began at once to study the field. She found the town to be made up largely of independent, self-respecting working people; a good school and home overcrowding. Also a large paper factory, employing nearly three hundred women, the majority of whom were boarding.

Realizing the need of arousing interest and knowing that the quickest way to the hearts of the people was through their children, she opened a sewing school and story hour, besides doing a great deal of friendly visiting. In a year's time, Miss Kapp's entering another field of work resulted in the appointment of the writer to succeed her. The sewing school and story hour were reorganized and a library and games added. A census of the town showed four hundred young women at work, two hundred and fifty of whom, from the rural districts and smaller towns were boarding. Board at two dollars and a quarter per week secured little beside a bed in a crowded room and the plainest fare. Few boarding houses could boast of a parlor. So the second worker, as the first, saw plainly the need of Corinth—a Co-operative Boarding Home for young women, with Home spelled large.

To get in touch with these young women employees must be the next step; and for this purpose a Sunday school class, made up largely of young women employed at the factory was begun; Friendship House, where the children's work was carried on, was opened for social evenings.

Then, since the Methodists of Corinth could not do the work alone, the women's organizations of other denominations were visited, as well as the clubs, the W. C. T. U., the Woodmen's Circle, the D. A. R., the U. D. C., and the need for such a Home presented.

Through the daily paper, an educative campaign was carried on. Some of the leading business men were visited and asked to endorse the movement. As a result of this activity, in April an interdenominational Co-operative Home Board was organized with two representatives from each of sixteen women's organizations. The following month a house was secured, and the people of Corinth showed their real interest in the movement by the way they united in furnishing the home. Lawn and porch swings on the outside invite to restful evenings after a long day's work, as does the cool interior, the parlor with its green wicker furniture and rugs, the gifts of a study club, and a piano, the gift of a large hearted woman, the dainty bedrooms, pretty dining-room, everything representing the strength of the appeal of the working girl to the mother hearts of the people. A miscellaneous shower resulted in many gifts of canned fruit and vegetables, linen and other household necessities.

The Woman's Missionary Auxiliaries of New Orleans, Miss. Birmingham, and Columbia have already sent in splendid donations of men, fruit and goods. Ladies' aids and neighborhood have yielded gifts for the Home. Many promises at the Conference in Aberdeen to send gifts of pressed preserves and vegetables.

The capacity of the Home is only one thing. The girls who have become a part of the "family" are enthusiastic in their appreciation of it. We must plan to build in the near future, for some of the strongest business men here are awaiting the development of the Home before placing their whole support to a proposed I. M. C. A. building. A business man, a lover of music, has pledged fifty dollars towards the purchase of a good upright on condition that the amount be covered. Pianos, papers, books, games, music, a machine and electric iron all contribute to the happiness and comfort of the girls. Even a little pure-blooded fox terrier has been donated, and some one was heard calling it the "co-operative dog."

It is good to have been here during the early stages of an institution that is going to mean so much to the future wives and mothers of North Mississippi. My prayer is for wisdom and power that I may thank for the Master these young girls, that each may indeed become "King's daughters, all beautiful women."

MARY WERLEIN MISSION.

By Mrs. Lily Watkins

The work at Mary Werlein Mission, 1908 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans, Louisiana, was started some years ago at 1914 Tchoupitoulas Street by Mr. Hilday N. Harrison, then a member of Calumet Street Methodist Church of New Orleans, but now a minister in the Louisiana Annual Conference, and stationed at Lafayette, Louisiana. The location was then, as now, a crowded and congested place, and vice of every kind prevailed in the neighborhood. There were then organized gangs of lawless men, habituated to the community, and it required much courage and deep consecration for one to carry the Gospel into that dark locality. Few were the helpers who cared to go and assist where it meant, perhaps, the jeopardizing of life, where there were frequent murders, highway robberies, and such. It is well remembered that Mr. Harrison barely escaped a bullet, fired by one of the desperate characters of the neighborhood, which killed a policeman. This occurred just at the close of one of the night services.

A Sunday school was soon organized by Mr. Harrison and his frequent visits into the homes with the Gospel messages and prayer strengthened the work. In course of time a Church membership was formed of the converts by Dr. J. T. Sawyer. The Woman's Home Mission Society took charge of the work and carried all financial and other needs. The Annual Conference supplied a man as first pastor, Rev. Thos. L. Lallance. In 1909 the Woman's Home Missionary Society purchased the present building, 1608 Tchoupitoulas Street, a more comfortable and convenient place of residence and worship. This had formerly been used as a large millinery store in the prosperous days, long before, of this locality; and much effort and expense by the women in changing and furnishing gave promise of a larger development of the work. They employed as a missionary the sainted Susie Burbank, whose influence in stimulating the work cannot be estimated. Rev. P. H. Fontaine was in charge of the work when the present building was purchased. Two years ago, an adjoining building was rented and annexed for a broadening of the work. In this building there is a reading room, a room equipped with shower baths for men and boys, also a boys' club room. A Saturday night meeting for men and free lunch is another feature of the work carried on in the annex. The sewing school and other services are conducted in the main hall.

The work this year is in charge of Rev. H. W. Jamieson.

FAITHFUL STEWARDSHIP.

By Mrs. J. W. Conger.

"Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." (1 Cor. IV. 2).

Paul in his discussions of faithful stewardship asks a most pertinent question: "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" Serious consideration of the subject can result in no other answer than "Nothing." Our very life itself was given us and in a limited space of time it is taken away. Thus it becomes our first and greatest trust. For the proper use of it we are responsible to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. To really live it we must most earnestly take advantage of our present opportunities. There are two conditions existing in this trusteeship which we hold: We must use what we have; and in the way which will be satisfactory to the owner. Each life is peculiar to itself, peculiarly fitted to fill its appointed place. That which differentiates each from every other is our personality; "The combined unity of all the powers of mind and body." These powers with which we are endowed are entrusted to our keeping; and we are required as stewards of God to be faithful in their development. In what follows several essentials of faithful stewardship will be taken up.

"Faithfulness means being true to our absent Lord." Then the first requirement to be met in becoming this acceptable servant of God is to study to inculcate in our lives the principles which actuated the life and death of his Son, Jesus Christ. We can render the truest service by the kind of lives we live. The spirit of our deeds will be manifested whether done for self or for others. We can help others to have faith by molding our lives according to his standard.

In order to maintain such a Christian character there must exist the closest relationship between us and God; for only those who live in touch with Him bear the marks of his discipleship. We should have foresight of what He would have us do; we must trust to his guidance or we are liable to trust to our own plans. Prayer is the medium through which this knowledge can be gained. "There is that motive power about real prayer which kindles the zeal within which drives us forth." How few of the members of our Churches can be depended upon to go forth whenever they are called upon! What a small per cent of our women are enrolled in the missionary societies! It is a fact that the main portion of the work in every congregation falls upon the shoulders of a few. Many, when asked, plead, "No time." In other words, other things, however trivial, are allowed to crowd out the time which should be given to God's work; His tenth is pushed so far down on the list of duties that only the odds and ends are left. Are we deceiving ourselves with this flimsy excuse, are we dealing honestly with God? Time is truly an opportunity which can never come again. The twenty-four hours of each day are given us. What use are we making of them?

Our material wealth is less a part of us than any other possession for which we are held responsible. Yet there is a demand made upon us; it is an honest debt. Each of us is given the command to "go-tell;" and we must go or send. God's plan for fidelity in regard to wealth is systematic, proportionate giving. There is no limit of the tenth; but how few of us ever reach even this Old Testament standard. If we were only faithful in this respect no appeals for workers would have to be refused; no work would have to be discontinued. God loves givers like Himself. He so loved the world that he gave his only Son, His most precious possession, as a ransom for us. No matter what gifts are made, the debt is never met; yet carelessness and indifference are holding in check the work which might be done.

The world needs to-day men and women who will perform duty at all hazards. "God wants men and women who are great enough to be small enough to be used." It takes courage to be a faithful steward. Often we find a person who on the impulse of the moment will start a work, but either from discouragement or loss of interest will leave it unfinished. This person is not to be commended; but there is another individual worse than a quitter and that is he who is afraid to begin. Dr. Cowan says that the grave is already dug for our talents and opportunities and all that we have to do is to remain idle—just do nothing. There are many ways in which we may be guilty of throwing them into this grave. Excuses are easy to give, even when they are not convincing; perhaps a claim of timidity is urged; it may be indolence; or it may be fear of criticism. There should be present in our Churches, in our missionary societies, the will to conquer fear in strength of duty, or else we will never win the plaudit of "well done."

Even when we have done our utmost in this world with our lives and all other possessions, we are still "unprofitable servants;" for a profitable servant is one whose master receives the equivalent of his wages in faithful service, and we can never hope to repay Him for what He has done for us. But we are undergoing the test of our characters, and our use of the gifts intrusted to us will determine whether or not we can be depended upon for efficient service. God has placed so many different powers in the hands of each. To-day He is asking us as He did Moses, "What is that in thine hand?" Pause for a moment; think seriously of what you have: money, talents, time, sympathy, intellect, influence, etc. Whatever it may be, however small, take it and use it with faith in God.

DEACONESS WORK AT KENTWOOD, LA.

By Miss Mamie Reames.

Since April, 1910, when I entered upon the duties of a deaconess, many have been my changes. My first appointment was Clifton, S. C., and in that place, which God has made so beautiful with hills, cliffs, and the Pacolet River, I thoroughly enjoyed two years of service, being busy all the time, visiting every one, especially attending to the wants and needs of the poor and sick, which is my greatest joy, sitting up with them, being with them in their hours of sadness, trying to comfort them; and my other work, such as my Junior boys on Sundays—such noble, bright, promising boys, 35 in number; my night school, Young Girls' Club, etc. I was supremely happy, but when I went to Washington, D. C., for the Council meeting in April, 1912, I was sent to Augusta, Ga., to work among the negroes. At first I felt that I could not do that work; in fact, after the appointments had been read and that night when I was alone with God, I was trying to get my consent to go, but I said, "I cannot work with the negroes." Then I said, "The idea; I told God that I would do anything or go anywhere for Him, and now, when the seemingly hard thing has come to me, I object." I then made a reconsecration and said, "I will go and do my best." Since that time the thought has never troubled me. I am thankful the deaconess committee sent me there. I know and understand the negro better; he is our brother in hick. It is not the negro on trial before the world, but we, the white people of the South. The world is looking on to see if we have sufficient wisdom, sufficient courage, sufficient Christian spirit, to lend a helping hand to the race that is down. May the spirit of Christ give us strength to stand the test.

God knows no home or foreign land. He simply knows that a black man in America may be as needy as a black man in Africa, and his gospel will help both alike. It was a joy to work for them and they appreciate all you do for them; it is so easy, I wonder why any one should object. When we would go to our clubs they would run to meet us, their little faces beaming with gladness and hearts beating with joy. Especially did I find pleasure in visiting "Aunt Harriet" when she was ill, and reading for and praying with her; then to see tears of joy coursing down her old, honest black face and hear her "God bless you, honey; that done me good." Don't you know, I enjoyed that work?

I was returned to Augusta for another year, but during the summer Mrs. R. W. MacDonell wrote asking me to come to Biloxi to fill the place made vacant by the illness of Miss Long. Of course, God had to help me again, for it was as hard to give up my work among the negroes as it was to take it up, but I want to do anything I can for the cause of God and go where he can best use me. So with regrets at having to leave my colored friends and joy in the thought of meeting new friends, I found myself in Biloxi on Oct. 8, 1913. And that is another dear spot to me. After a very short time I felt I had a number added to my list of friends. There was such happiness in our little home, the Wesley House, where Miss Roberta Stuhbs, now Mrs. P. F. Daniel, as kindergarten teacher, Miss Ott, our housekeeper, and I, were. Soon after I reached Biloxi we had such a wonderful shower; the clouds began to rise on Oct. 16, and before it was over we had a regular cloud burst in the way of sheets, 52, towels, 250, etc., of which I have told you before in the Advocate. So we were having joy upon joy, for the property was bought, plans drawn up, lumber on the ground. Our Wesley House was to be made new. Then our new plans for the work began. A day nursery was to be added, also a reading room was to be opened two nights in a week. So I wrote to the Publishing House in Nashville and they sent me quite a number of good books for our use.

But illness in my family called me home, and thus my connections with the Wesley House at Biloxi were severed. But how often do my thoughts and prayers go back to them! Then at the Council meeting in April at Fort Worth, Texas, it was made possible for me to work in my own home town, Kentwood, La., through the request of my pastor, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, my salary being paid by a lumber company, our good physicians, the missionary society of the Methodist Church, and a few other friends, which is appreciated so much by me. So I have been at work here since May 1. As in all other places, there is plenty to do. So I expect to put my very best self into the work. I have organized a Campfire Girls' Club, which is undenominational, the 18 young girls seem so interested. I am helping in all the Church work. Our Senior Epworth League is growing in interest lately. We have pledged to help support Mr. and Mrs. Stockwell, our Louisiana missionaries in Africa, this year. The work that I love so much here, as in other places I have been, is friendly visiting and looking after the sick for all denominations. It is my greatest joy to enter a room of sickness and make myself useful in giving them comfort and relief in all the little ways I can.

We have quite a number of Italians in our town. I want in some way to reach them. We have only one Chinaman. I have been giving religious tracts to him in his own language; he sometimes comes to church. If we can only win him for Christ he might be a power among his own people.

So, often at the close of the day, I ask myself this question, "Have I done all my hands found to do?" We should make ourselves helpful in the service of the uplift of humanity. We are worth to the world what we do for the world. Kentwood, La.

THE LOUISIANA ROOM AT SCARRITT.

By Miss Cora Godat.

The Scarritt Bible and Training School located in Kansas City, Mo., for the preparation of foreign missionaries, deaconesses, and other Christian workers, belongs to the Woman's Missionary Council, and is a credit to the women of our Church. The school is truly a city set on a hill which cannot be hid, for each year our young women go forth from it to carry its light to all parts of the world, having been guided during the two years' course by a faculty of superior women. That the expected results are being realized on the field is shown by the statement made by Miss Lochie Rankin, our first missionary who has served 35 years in China; that the Chinese mission has been a new mission since the Scarritt Bible and Training School was founded 22 years ago. Moreover, Dr. John R. Mott, considered one of the foremost, if not the foremost authority in the world and whose opportunities for observation have been unsurpassed, recently said that in all his travels wherever he saw a mission conducted by Scarritt graduates, he found an institution of the highest type, pervaded by the most wholesome Christian atmosphere. As members of the missionary societies composing the Woman's Missionary Council, we of Louisiana have a part in this splendid institution and are interested in every phase of its life.

One of the finest features of the Training School is its home-like atmosphere, offering to the student body the opportunity of learning to live—that highest of arts. The home is presided over by a matron who takes a motherly interest in each young woman there. The rooms are comfortably and tastily furnished, the women throughout the Church having always taken great pride in making them attractive.

Last year the two Louisiana girls at Scarritt decided that their State must have a room for her daughters, and, with permission of the principal, selected a large, sunny room with eastern and southern exposure, which will accommodate three students. Our friends rallied to our help, and a fund was soon started for this purpose. It is estimated that about $150 will be required to furnish our Louisiana room, $61 of which have already been contributed. Part of this money has been expended for three single iron beds, but the remaining furniture is badly needed. We would like to complete the furnishing as soon as possible, and suggest this as a splendid work for some of the adult or young people's auxiliaries in the State. Any amount will be acceptable. Send either to our Conference Treasurer, Mrs. J. J. Holmes, Minden, La., or to Miss Cora F. Godat, 2123 Cambron Street, New Orleans, La.

PEWS FOR SALE.

The officers of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, are anxious to sell the pews which are in the old church building to make room for chairs. The building is now being used for a Sunday school and pews are unsuited for the purpose. The pews are made of oak, and are in good condition. Any one interested will please communicate with Rev. J. G. Snelling, the pastor, or Mr. A. H. Ahten, Station B, New Orleans, La.

OUR ADVOCATE

By Mrs. A. C. McKinney

I feel quite sure, dear reader,
You will sympathize
Our Editor and Editors
On this OUR ADVOCATE

Of course you know that every week
We have a half-page,
But here are whole big issues
Our hearts and minds engage.

The women of three Conferences
Through it will speak to you
Of wonderful harvests, ripening grain—
What we must dare and do.

Down in prison-cloven Mexico
Our light should send a gleam
To China, just awakening
From an unpleasant dream.

To India and Africa
The Master said, "Go ye"—
The message spoken years ago
Was meant for you and me.

But we have waited, O so long,
The Crown of Christ is plain
On Sordani's shores. To us they come
By words—the immigrant.

And as they come, they "cry for bread."
We must not "give a stone."
One power can make the poorest clean—
The Christ's, and His alone.

O Master, can we stay still,
While His dear millions wait?
They're looking to us for the light,
And standing at our gate.

We may be sure "our brother's blood"
"Is crying from the ground."
This cry arises day by day
The whole wide world around.

No time remains "to dream, to drift."
Our privilege may be
Some brother's heavy load to share;
Then do it willingly.

Now while we "lift our eyes and look,"
May we re-consecrate
Our all anew to His great cause;
The time is growing late.

Not half the women of our Church
Have joined this mission band.
Extend the invitation oft,
And offer the right hand!

And if you want new members
To line up good and straight,
Just tell them they should take and read
Our dear old ADVOCATE.

ST. MARK'S HALL, NEW ORLEANS.

St. Mark's Hall is the property of Methodism in a great neglected field, in the heart of a great, wicked city, which is often rightly termed "The Paris of America" because of the reign of King Pleasure; the desecration of the Sabbath; the chase after entertainment; the infatuation of a multitude—including many who pass as good people—with dances, both public and private; the general looseness of morals; and the great masses who live regardless of God's will, and who ignore the Almighty, even though many of them say "Our Father" in the Church. Yet in the midst of all this, there are 20,000 Sicilians and a host of other foreigners who are here and who know not the "good news," for Gospel means good news. New Orleans is a Roman Catholic city.

Ours is a religious mission, though there must of necessity be many means of approach. Knowledge comes through contact. Contact produces faith in the worker from their point of view, and, likewise, gives us faith in them, which is a foundation basis for operation. So we are endeavoring to meet the problems of the congested foreign district below Canal Street by various means of contact, viz:

First—The free clinic, where we average about 350 patients a month. Dr. King is the physician, and he gives his services gratis to the poor. Miss Kathryn Wilson, a trained nurse, is in charge, and follows these cases to their homes, and many times the life is brought to know One who is able to heal not only the body, but also the soul.

Second—The Milk Station, in charge of the Child Welfare Nurse, Mrs. Margaret Siebrecht. In this department there are more than 200 babies under observation and care; the mothers are ignorant and 90 per cent of them are Italian.

Third—The Home-to-house visitation work is our biggest opportunity. Here we may estimate the first of hope that in poor, miserable surroundings, where law and many times have all turned out—here we may sow the seed of the Gospel where they have never before heard it. Here we find poor, uneducated, miserable little lives who know only dirt and the street, and sometimes the opportunity comes to take that child out and give it a chance. This year we have placed 24 of these little lives in a new environment where they may have a chance. Every child has the right to be well born and to have a wholesome environment, but not every child has it. Mrs. Griffin has been "our visitor," and this month our new department, Miss Emma Abbott, comes.

The Italian pastor, Rev. G. T. Romano, is a very able man, and he is reaching out wherever he can to work for the Mission. We look to especially for his assistance. It is ours to say God gives the increase. We are dealing with a moving population in a pleasure-loving city.

All the world is God's mission field, and now-a-days all sorts of talents are needed. Some people are willing to turn out in some far-away mission field, but are unwilling to enter into the slums of a great city. Yet there is as truly a mission field as the other. Seventy-four per cent of the Sicilians who come to this country remain and become citizens; twenty-four per cent return to their own home land. To evangelize the twenty-four per cent would be to send back to Italy a stronger force for Jesus Christ than to send missions to Europe.

Our problems are many. Our needs are many. You may help by giving us a permanent building, a library, a playground, which is so much needed; by replenishing our supply store; by assisting in the Sunday school, sewing school, and visitation; by assisting in the Story Hour. The water closet is a great need of our work, and coupled with this intelligent interest and sympathy.

MARTHA NUTT.

SOCIAL SERVICE HINTS.

By Mrs. Walter Trotter.

As a body of Christian women we should welcome the introduction of the Social Service Department into our Conference society, as a means of larger service. We cannot all be Jane Addams or Judge Lindbergh, nor are we confronted with the problems of the large cities, yet there are many vital problems which we as a missionary society must help to solve, for it is true that Social Service is and always has been, the foundation stone of mission work. We see its importance emphasized on every hand, not only in the United States but in every civilized country, by organizations whose object is the betterment of the human race. And if the women of the North Mississippi Missionary Society would be workmen who need not to be ashamed we must get a more intelligent understanding and a broader meaning of that Messianic message: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these." The many sociological meetings that have been held over the country for the past few months and the many men and women of national prominence who are giving years of thought and investigation to this medium of service, show that we are undergoing a splendid change, and instead of accumulation of wealth being the chief interest, as in years past, we are realizing that the only work worth while, and the only work that endures, is the unselfish work of helping our fellow man; and the woman who would have her horizon broadened for loving service no longer need ask what she can do to relieve human life of its sins and sorrows; but let her find her answer in the slums of our cities where, amid poverty, disease, ignorance and dirt, hundreds of people dwell untouched by the Savior's love; or go into the rural districts, into the one room unsanitary cabins of white and black and see the unkempt illiterate parents whose children are growing up "like unto them." Go into the towns of the mills and mines and count the dwarfed lives of children, deprived of school and play. Go where thousands of immigrants rush into our ports, fleeing from evil conditions in their native land; and while viewing these things remember that these are only a few of the phases of Social Service by which an opportunity is given to relieve others from being miserable both in mind and body.

I would that the gift of genius were mine that, with words forceful in their depths of meaning, I might impress the Social Service Committee in each auxiliary with its responsibility and opportunity. It is your privilege to create in the entire Church and community a larger view of life and service by bringing your social service work to the notice of the right thinking people in your towns and country districts. As one means for accomplishing this end, I would emphasize the use of the secular press and religious papers, and which to arouse a sentiment among some of the following lines of work. The enlightenment of the child labor laws and providing better educational advantages for solving the problem of poor housing and improved sanitation in our communities to influence your town merchants to provide seats behind counters for the convenience of their saleswomen when not engaged, and also to provide rest rooms with sanitary conveniences for women shopping in town.

Another subject that I would suggest for your consideration and study is how best to arouse the women of the auxiliaries to a sense of their personal duty as Christians in helping the Negro to a higher plane of living, for it is true that they have the least chance for pure, good living and the greatest power to spread evil contagion.

Fourth being the most impracticable one, we would urge that the children in Junior Divisions be trained in personal service by encouraging them to carry flowers to the sick and making home scrapbooks for sick and stricken children. Local conditions will, of course, suggest other forms of service in which they can have part. Children are the seed sown of humanity. Like seed like harvest. And if we would have them noble and useful men and women they must have training along these lines. I would stress the importance of our women awakening to the fact that Social Service must be recognized as a great factor among the Christian forces, and of their aligning themselves with other philanthropic agencies, also that they federate their work with other organizations of their towns, for in no other way can Christian womanhood be so developed as by personal contact with suffering and needy humanity. "Social Service as a substitute for religious activity, is a failure; Social Service as a supplement to religious activity is a married success," says Dr. Timothy Stock, and in no other way can we better reveal the practical teaching of the parable of the good Samaritan with which our Lord enriched humanity.

Winona, Miss.

TO OUR PREACHERS.

The management of this Advocate has decided to let our preachers and agents offer six months trial subscriptions at 50 cents during August, September and October. This offer will be withdrawn on the 15th of November, 1914. Subscriptions must be sent in in clubs and money orders used in making remittances so as to save expense.

In soliciting new subscribers, please explain to them that the six months' subscriptions are taken with the understanding that after their expiration, the regular rate of $1.50 will be charged for annual subscriptions unless they are ordered canceled.

We are making this offer for a three-fold purpose:

First—To build up our subscription list before the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee.

Second—To get funds to help tide us over the summer and fall months.

Third—To induce our Methodist people to take the Conference Organ and read it.

THE MERIDIAN WESLEY HOUSE.

By Mrs. J. C. Templeton.

Realizing the great need of mission work being carried on in our city, and also realizing the opportunity for Christian work being done by a religious body, Mrs. C. W. Cochran called the women of the Methodist Churches together with the presiding elder and pastors to consider the organization of a Mission Board. On Feb. 13, 1906, this organization was effected and Mrs. Cochran made president of the City Board of Missions of Meridian. The field of their work lay principally in the mill district in the eastern part of the city; and Mrs. Cochran, assisted by Mrs. J. R. Whitaker, held cottage prayer meetings and visited the sick and needy, taking to them physical as well as spiritual comfort. Later in the year, Mrs. Clara Cope was appointed City Missionary and served four years. A room was rented in the mill district and a reading room opened for the benefit of the people in that part of the town. This reading room was furnished by the ladies of the Methodist Church and other friends of the work. Books and periodicals were contributed also and the reading room was named for the projector of the work, "The Elizabeth Cochran Reading Room." From this point the missionary, Mrs. Cope, carried on different phases of mission work. She taught a night school, a sewing class, and conducted cottage prayer meetings once a week. On account of ill health Mrs. Cochran was forced to give up active work, and Mrs. J. R. Whitaker was elected president of the City Board of Missions. Although giving up active work, Mrs. Cochran has always been an inspiration in the work to the members of the Mission Board from the time of its organization to the present. With tireless energy Mrs. Whitaker took up the work, and under her able management and the help and encouragement of the Board, has finally seen a Wesley house firmly established in Meridian.

In January, 1910, Dr. Sara Castle opened a free clinic in the room and treated patients there and did any surgical work necessary. At this time the work had grown to such proportions that we felt the need of more room, and also of a trained worker. So when the Home Mission Board met in Nashville in April, 1910, the City Board of Missions of Meridian sent a petition to that body for a trained worker. Miss Alice Sheider was appointed deaconess to the work here. Miss Sheider came to Meridian, September 7, 1910, and took charge of the work being carried on in the mill district. It was about this time that a house of five rooms was rented. One of the large front rooms was known as the Elizabeth Cochran reading room. This room was provided with books, periodicals, and the daily papers. Later a piano was purchased and placed in the room. The other rooms of the home, consisting of the bedrooms, a dining room and kitchen, were completely furnished by the different Methodist Churches of Meridian. Miss Sheider taught a night school and sewing class in the reading room. And here at various times social affairs were given for the young people of the community.

On October 31, 1911, Miss Womack, who had been appointed assistant deaconess to the Wesley House in Meridian, arrived, and, with Miss Sheider, carried on the work. The following spring Miss Sheider was appointed pastor's assistant at Clifford, S. C., and Miss Lois Tinsley was sent to this point to assist Miss Womack who now became head resident deaconess. Since taking charge of the work Miss Womack and Miss Tinsley have devoted themselves untriflingly to the work. Miss Tinsley organized a boys' club. They also organized a mothers' club.

In April, 1911, the City Mission Board had a called meeting at old Central Church to consider a very generous proposition that had been made to it. The pastors and stewards of the Methodist Churches were asked to meet with the Board. Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Cochran proposed to give to the City Board of Missions two lots located in Georgetown, provided the Board would raise in addition the value of the lots in cash, this cash to be used to build a Wesley House on these lots. This splendid offer of these devoted Christians was gratefully accepted; and at this meeting the different Methodist Churches of the city pledged themselves to raise the amount necessary to build the home, and the building was commenced in October, 1911.

On February 6, 1912, the deaconesses moved into the "Elizabeth Cochran Wesley House." In May of 1912 the Methodist ladies of Meridian gave to Wesley House all sorts of bed linen, table linen, kitchen furnishings and other articles that help to make a home comfortable.

Last fall at the suggestion of Mrs. Johnson, the president of the Mississippi Conference Society, a shower was tendered the two Wesley Houses in the Mississippi Conference and splendid boxes came to the home containing all sorts of good and useful articles.

As to the work being carried on at the home by our efficient deaconesses, Misses Womack and Tinsley: They conduct a night school during the winter months, and a sewing class which is so large that volunteer helpers come out from the Methodist Churches. Two cooking classes were conducted last winter, one for beginners and one for the more advanced pupils. A mothers' club and a boys' club have also been conducted; and last winter piano lessons were taught to eight girls by a volunteer teacher. During the month of August the deaconesses will take a vacation and during their absence the home will be renovated. Matting will be placed on the floors, new shades to the windows, a partition will be placed across the wide hall, and a room prepared for a day nursery, which will be opened in September.

There is no sewerage connection in the home, but that will be remedied in a few months. There is an indebtedness of about $200 on the Wesley House at this time which will be paid off as soon as possible. The Home cost about $1700 and is valued to-day at $2700.

Meridian, Miss.

EMPHASIS UPON THE WORK OF DISTRICT SECRETARY.

By Mrs. Crow Girard.

What the presiding elder is to the Church in the district over which he presides, the District Secretary is to the Woman's Missionary Society in this district. As the Woman's Missionary Society is directly under the supervision of the Church, it follows that the presiding elder is the real head of this work in his district. The first duty of the District Secretary should be to consult him before planning her work for the year. With intelligent zeal on her part and his earnest co-operation, the woman's work can be built upon a better and more solid basis. In every quarterly conference the question is asked: "Have you a Woman's Missionary Society in your Charge?"

The following table compiled by the Shreveport District Secretary, Mrs. R. E. Bobbitt, proves rather conclusively the statement that the missionary spirit is strongest in that Church where the women are organized into a Missionary Society:

These tables do not show any money collected by the Woman's Missionary Society. If that were included the per capita per cent would be much higher. This condition prevails in every district in the State. We can easily see that to espouse the cause of the Woman's Missionary Society is to strengthen the spirit of missions throughout the Conference.

In the scheme of organization, as effected by the Woman's Missionary Society, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the importance of the office of District Secretary. This office is the pivotal point around which the work revolves.

Each district has a Secretary whose duty it is to strengthen and encourage the auxiliaries in her district, to organize new ones, to furnish literature, helps, and other information, to receive reports and compile them for the Conference Secretaries, to see that the dues and pledges are paid in full, to strive earnestly to increase the number of subscribers to the Missionary Voice and to the Young-Christian Worker, to visit each auxiliary in her district at least once a year, to hold an annual district meeting of the auxiliaries, to have, if possible, each auxiliary represented at the Annual Conference, to present the work of the Society at the annual preachers' conference, and gain the co-operation of the pastors in furthering the work. In fact, the duties of a thoroughly conscientious District Secretary are many, and too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the importance of getting the right women for these places. Upon them depends the success or failure of the work.

Our aim should be an auxiliary in every charge. In the Louisiana Conference we have about 100 auxiliaries; we should have 50 more. With the aid of the presiding elder and the pastor we believe it is possible to have them. When organic union has been perfected we will have a much simpler financial plan. In the Conferences we will no longer deal with the departments, Home and Foreign. The auxiliary members will pay stated dues into the "Missionary Society," and only at the general office will they be apportioned to the Home or Foreign fields, thus making our Home Department work as truly missionary as our Foreign. We trust the auxiliaries will enter heartily into the new plans, and assist in every possible way to perfect this change, so that no halt may be made in the progress of the work.

THIS WEEK'S ADVOCATE.

Our readers, we feel sure, will be delighted with this week's issue of the Advocate. It has been given wholly to the woman's work of the three patronizing Conferences. Mrs. R. F. Harrell, the efficient editor of the Woman's Missionary Column which appears weekly in the Advocate, has taken charge of this edition, having come to New Orleans to give her personal attention to the details. We only reserve space for the obituaries, the personals, and a few other matters that were necessary. We did think that there would be space enough for some editorials that were prepared, but since Mrs. Harrell had even more matter to publish than the paper would hold, we devote all that space to the woman's work.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, La., is at Palmetto, La., assisting Rev. C. B. Powell in a revival meeting. These brethren have our best wishes for a good meeting.

The Advocate takes pleasure in acknowledging receipt of subscriptions from the following: Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Ackerman, Miss., 5; Rev. T. L. Porter, Courtland, Miss., 3.

We are made sad at the news of the death of the wife of Rev. C. H. Ellis, of the Moscow (Miss.) charge. Brother Ellis will not be lacking in sympathy from his brethren in his bereavement.

We acknowledge receipt of the announcement card of the birth of Evelyn Elizabeth Todd on July 24; weight 8 pounds; at Cleveland, Miss. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Todd, the parents, have our congratulations.

Rev. Robert Randle reports things to be moving on well in his charge at Eros, La. This is not surprising, since it has been Brother Randle's unvarying rule to carry forward the Master's cause in whatever field he labors.

The Advocate acknowledges with thanks new and renewal subscriptions recently sent in as follows: Mrs. Lou A. Aiken, Canton, Miss., 7; Rev. S. H. Frazier, Summerfield, La., 5; Rev. J. A. Wells, McComb, Miss., 2; Rev. Wm. L. Duren, Columbus, Miss., 5.

Both Houses of the Georgia Legislature have passed by a large majority a bill to create a new county, to be known as Candler County. The Candler, like the Campbells, seem to be coming. And they well deserve all the honors that are being accorded them.

The Rev. J. A. Wells, of McComb City, Miss., in a business letter to the Advocate, states that he is now holding his fourth revival meeting since July 1, and that he has been privileged to witness great spiritual visitations. Brother Wells is now with Rev. T. B. Cottrell at one of the churches on the Tylertown charge.

Rev. H. W. May, the presiding elder of the Alexandria District, believes in assisting his preachers in their work. He is now with Rev. L. E. Crooks on the Glenmora charge holding a meeting. Brother May will preach at camp meeting the latter part of the month. We believe Brother May is wise, and his efforts will bring forth results.

Miss Bettie Brown, a highly esteemed lady of East Mississippi, died at the home of her niece, Mrs. Mary Tate, at Mayhew, on July 17, at the advanced age of 88. She was an aunt of Rev. R. O. Brown of Macon, Miss., and of Rev. S. A. Brown, of Booneville, Miss. The funeral took place on Saturday, July 18, being conducted by Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. W. Woollard. We extend sympathy to the bereaved.

We are informed that Rev. Hays Howell has asked to be released from his work at Arcadia, La., and that Bishop Candler has granted his request. We regret to hear that Brother Howell felt it proper to take this step, since only recently he had a great meeting in his charge and seemed to be achieving substantial results for the Master. At this writing we have not learned who will be appointed to fill out the year at Arcadia.

The Mary Werlein Mission will open a social hall for young people at 1028 Tchoupitoulas

Street in the near future. This hall will be kept open every day from early morning until an appropriate hour in the evening. This will make the third building in which this mission is carrying on its work. For the furnishing of the hall mentioned above, gifts of tables, rocking-chairs, pictures, or cash will be gratefully received. No shabby or cast-off material is desired.

We are glad to make the following announcement: The Rapides Camp Meeting is to be revived this year. Arrangements are being perfected to hold the meeting from Aug. 22 to 30. This will be the first meeting since 1907. There will be ample hotel accommodations at reasonable rates. Preachers will be entertained free. Services under the direction of the presiding elder and preacher in charge. The grounds are 5 miles south of Boyce, La. For information address W. F. Texada, Boyce, La.

We are pleased to learn that our congregation at West Point, Miss., has a new church enterprise under way, toward which about $20,000 has been subscribed. This growing and busy flock has needed a new house of worship for some years, having outgrown the present structure which was erected during the pastorate of the lamented Rev. Amos Kendall some two or three decades ago. Rev. W. W. Mitchell, the present pastor, is reported to be in high favor both with his own people and the people of the town generally.

We received, a few days since, a brief but very interesting letter from Prof. A. H. Shannon, of the Mississippi A. and M. College, written from Washington, D. C., from which we take the following extract: "I am spending the vacation months in making further investigation with a view to rewriting my book dealing with the Mulla problem. I have made a careful first-hand study of conditions in this city, and in Philadelphia and New York, and a more hurried study of the situation in Boston. I hope to complete this work by the first of next January."

Rev. J. B. Williams, of the Ponchatoula (La.) charge, called at the Advocate office Saturday on his way home from Franklinton where he had been assisting Rev. J. A. McCormick in a protracted meeting at the Fisher Church. Brother Williams spoke very highly of the work that he had just visited and its pastor. He says that Brother McCormick is just moving into a fine, new parsonage with all modern conveniences. This is certainly interesting news, and Brother McCormick is to be congratulated. Brother Williams reports his own charge, Ponchatoula, to be in good condition.

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr., Poplarville, Miss., writes the Editor the following: "Brother P. H. Grice, our pastor of the Derby Mission, on the 27th, while holding a meeting at Byrd's Chapel, was thrown from his buggy by a run-away horse and had his right leg broken about four inches above the ankle. He suffered a great deal before medical attention could be had; but is now in the Bogalusa hospital. I was assisting Brother Grice at the time in the meeting. His people are showing their love and loyalty by every attention and help they are able to give, but with this added expense and misfortune he needs more assistance."

We are in receipt from Rev. J. W. Price, of the Mississippi Conference, an attractive card upon which is written the following: "On July 21, at 7 o'clock p. m., there arrived in our parsonage home at Benton, Miss., a fine baby boy. Mrs. Price and I are very proud of him. We lost our only child, which was 18 months old, about four weeks ago; so you will know that we are grateful to the Heavenly Father for giving us another little one to brighten and bless our home. And we have named him Robert Meek, after the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Both the mother and babe are doing well." The Editor highly appreciates the honor done him by Brother and Sister Price, and prays God's richest blessings upon his little namesake and also upon the happy father and mother.

Rev. W. W. Drake, of Baton Rouge, La., desires the Advocate to print the following:

"Will you please give space in the Advocate for one or two corrections that should be made to the articles for which I am responsible in the special edition of July 16. First, by an inexcusable slip in my calculations, the Boyce and La-compte charge is rated in class E in the article on 'How we are Meeting Our Obligations,' when the minutes show that the charge paid in full and should have been rated A. My attention has been called to this error, and I hope there are no others like it. Another minor error is in the amount pledged on the French Mission Special which should have been $533 instead of $543, the mistake occurring in the amount from the Lafayette District, which should have been $307 instead of $317. I regret that several articles on different phases of work did not come in in time to be used, and the survey of the conditions was correspondingly incomplete. Allow me also to express my hearty thanks to those who assisted by their contributions, as well as to the Editor who made the edition possible and contributed so effectively to its make up."

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT OF COUNCIL MEETING AT FORT WORTH, TEXAS, 1914, RENDERED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle.

Easter Sunday dawned clear and beautiful in Fort Worth, Texas, April 12, 1914, and as I looked out upon the day I recalled what Hawthorne says in his Tangle Wood Tales in regard to the Sabbath sunshine, namely: "That a holier brightness seems to mark the Sabbath sunshine, when there is no buzz of voices, nor business, nor crowd anywhere but at Church." And whether I see it beaming broad across the field or scattered down among tangled woods, or hemmed in between brick buildings, or upon my chamber floor, still I recognize the Sabbath sunshine, and ever let me recognize it, for some illusions, and this among them, are the shadows of great truths. Our Texas Bishop, Edward D. Mouzon, preached us a great sermon upon that holy Easter day, carrying us back to the Source of all our strength and power, calling upon us not to get too busy to go to the fountain head for help and strength to carry on our enterprises.

Conspicuous among the group of returned missionaries at the Council was to be seen Miss Lockie Rankin, the first missionary sent out by our Woman's Board to China 35 years ago. She is now a stranger in her own land, it having been 17 years since she was here on her last furlough. She is a timid, shrinking woman whose silver white hair seemed to be symbolical of the crown of glory that will encircle her brow in that land where the inhabitants never grow old. After she had made an appearance on the platform at one time she was detained by Miss Bennett who asked her to tell the audience if she had her life to live over, would she change it. She replied: "O, no! no! no! My only regret is that I am no speaker, just a teacher, and that I can't talk more to you, dear people, when I come home." Another conspicuous person among the returned missionaries was Miss Alice Waters, who went to China 22 years ago and who expressed herself as being gladder every day that she had put her life in China. Then, too, there was our strong, self-reliant North Mississippi girl, Miss Julia Wasson, who is at home on her first furlough after rendering efficient service as teacher of Latin and mathematics in McTyeire School, Shanghai, China. On the opposite side, among the active deaconesses, was another one of our very own girls, Miss Fella Richardson, buoyant, happy, and joyous over one year of active service in the Co-Operative Home at Houston, Tex.

On Saturday afternoon we attended the dedication of a Wesley House in North Ft. Worth, way out on the outskirts of the city where are located Swift's and Armour's two great packing houses. Around these buildings lived the families of foreigners of many nationalities and I was made heart-sick over their poverty, filth, and degradation, with a saloon on every corner. In and out among these people like a ray of sunshine, a little deaconess, Miss Eugenia Smith, had gone in loving ministry for over a year, teaching Sunday school classes in an old tumbled-down saloon, visiting the sick, burying the dead, and performing a thousand and one loving ministries for those in distress. We saw her rejoicing in the dedication of a Wesley House which was in future to be the center of her work. We heard her talk about her work and her love for those foreign children and people, frail, delicate woman that she was, and we thought only that the love of Christ could constrain a young woman to give her life to such work. Then, as we heard Miss Bennett tell several days afterward in the Council meeting how this young woman had come to her room late one evening, weary and worn, and told her what a dreadful day she had had, how she had conducted three funerals during the day, how she had taken a poor outraged girl from a crowd of rough men, and had almost to fight them back to prevent them from getting into the bus with her in which she took the poor girl to the hospital. Miss Bennett said to her: "My dear, you can't stand such as that; you must save your strength." Her reply was: "I can't save myself and save others too." This young woman is one of the two deaconesses whom the Council Daily mentioned as having attained unto the most perfect type of union, as she supports a missionary in China, and when her day's work closes in America, her substitute worker takes it up in China; so she gives 24 hours of work daily to the mission cause, and is both a home and foreign missionary. Ah! my sisters, is not this a rebuke to those of us who have not yet attained unto so broad a view of missions? Let us endeavor with Miss Eugenia Smith to leave the valley and ascend the mountain tops for that broad view of missions which embraces the whole world.

CHILD LABOR IN MISSISSIPPI.

By Mrs. Robert Somerville.

The very words—Child Labor—seem to typify all the evils of modern commercialism. It is a strange instance of perversion that the blessing of inventive genius should have brought about this condition by making wonderful machines which can be run by little children.

Dr. George Adam Smith says that one of the moral questions upon which the fate of a civilization is decided is this: "Is childhood sheltered and its innocence protected?" Child labor is an industrial crime which is bound to react upon our civilization.

Mississippi, being a rural and agricultural State, child labor has not assumed in it the proportions which it has in some States, but the same problems are presented, the same arguments advanced, and the same dangers are to be met. The first child labor law in Mississippi was passed in 1908. It permitted children of twelve years to be worked ten hours a day and fifty-eight hours a week. Previous to the Legislature of 1912, with a view to securing a better law, an investigation was made by Mr. Hine, agent of the National Child Labor Committee. At the time of this investigation the larger mills were closed and Mr. Hine visited only the smaller and medium sized mills. The following account of his work is taken from the report of Dr. A. J. McKelway, secretary for the Southern States of the National Child Labor Committee: "At Laurel, Mr. Hine counted nineteen children under twelve, nine of whom were between eight and eleven. The age of one of these children was exactly ascertained; he was born on January 17, 1900. The Delta Cotton Mills at McComb, Mississippi, were working 66 hours a week, children putting in the same time as adults, and the Magnolia Mills were working 63 hours, the children apparently putting in full time. The photographs of the Yazoo Yarn Mills tell a pathetic story. Many children under twelve were found at the Winona Mills, which run 64 hours a week, giving the children an hour off each day as prescribed by law. There is no public school here; but a private school, charging a dollar a month for pupils, had ten children attending, ranging from six to ten years of age. Where were the others? At West Point all the children said they were over twelve years of age. At the Stone Cotton Mills, at Starkville, only one boy was found apparently under twelve. The mill has only 80 hands, but seems to be trying to observe the law. And the Tombigbee Mills at Columbus were employing only two children evidently under twelve years of age. At the Tupelo Mills, Mr. Hine found among the children under twelve years of age, one child of seven and two of nine, whose ages were ascertained."

The Legislature of 1912 made a distinction between boys and girls, permitting the employment of boys of twelve but forbidding the employment of girls under fourteen. This Legislature also took an advance step in fixing the eight-hour day up to the age of sixteen for boys and eighteen for girls. The Legislature of 1914 retrograded in both ages of children and hours of work, but provided for a factory inspector. The law as it now stands allows boys of twelve and girls of fourteen to be worked in cotton and knitting mills for eight hours a day. Boys of fourteen and girls of sixteen may be worked ten hours a day. It is understood that the present law is the result of a compromise between the manufacturing interests and the Mississippi

Child Labor Committee. The committee thought it best to make concessions in order to secure the factory inspector. This compromise came near sharing the fate which such things usually meet, the manufacturers got their part of it passed first and the factory inspector bill appeared to be in doubt. Members of the Legislature and women's organizations took the matter to Governor Brewer, urging him not to sign one bill until the other was passed. The governor responded to this appeal, thereby helping to secure the inspector law. Mrs. C. H. Alexander, of Jackson, as the representative of the State Central Committee of women's organizations, expressed her dissent from this compromise agreement. Her view is that the violations of the former law were not such as to warrant lowering the standard in order to secure inspection. Her view is supported by many women. Mr. David McDowell, of Jackson, was appointed factory inspector and began his work on the first of May.

The business of shucking and canning oysters and picking shrimp on the Gulf Coast has developed another child employing industry and new features of the child labor evil. As the result of investigations in February and March, 1911, Mr. Hine made the following report: "By actual count of children at work, I found 125 boys and girls whom I judged to be from three to eleven years of age; and at least half of the canneries were working either a small crew or none at all on the days I visited them." The shrimp packing is especially harmful; the Bureau of Chemistry makes the following statement: "It is recognized by packers that shrimp contain some corrosive substance which greatly interferes with their handling and preservation. It attacks the workmen's hands, causing the skin to peel, and also eats through the leather of their shoes. Tins in which the shrimp are preserved are quickly perforated."

The Legislature of 1912 extended the law to include canneries, not including fruit canneries. Representatives of the National Committee who visited the Gulf Coast in the fall of 1913 reported violations of the law: children under the age limit were worked over hours. It is to be hoped that the State factory inspector will give special attention to this phase of the subject.

Give your support or influence to the Palmer Child Labor Bill; the object of this bill is to secure a national child labor law.

Allied to the child labor problem is the question of compulsory education. If the children are to be properly developed they must be kept out of factories and off the streets and compelled to go to school. The Christian women of Mississippi should begin to think of compulsory education as a part of the child labor problem, and as a question which will surely be before our people for serious consideration in the near future.

Greenville, Miss.

RELIGIOUS CONSERVATION OF YOUNG LIFE.

By Mrs. T. W. Woodward.

An Englishman once remarked: "You can make something of a Scotchman if you can catch him young enough." And true is this of Christians. In this age of advanced civilization and learning the conservation of all forces and ideals is all important.

And yet the Church of God is permitting, seemingly approving, the most profligate waste of youthful energy, buoyant thought, and simple childlike faith, in the sad fact that she is not wisely conserving her youth for active and effective service to Christ. While it is true that 85 per cent of the Church membership comes from the Sunday school alone, it is also sadly true that 40 per cent of our Sunday school boys and girls go into ways of sin and evil. This sad procession of young life, departing from the "straight and narrow way" into the broad way that leads unto eternal death should cause every man and woman of God to pause, to pray, and to labor that this waste should no longer be permitted.

There is a cause for this great loss of young life to the Church, and there is a remedy. We hear much of the education and training of the young for professions, lines of business, and social life where great fame may be won, much wealth accumulated, and social distinction attained. These subjects are discussed in the home, on the streets, in the daily press and magazines, as if life consists wholly and solely for such ends. And can we expect the young people to feel that there is a more supremely important aim in life? We are training physicians, lawyers, teachers, bankers, but we are not training missionaries, preachers, or Sunday school workers. Daily we hear parents say: "I am going to make a banker of my son, a fine musician of my daughter;" but how sadly true is it that not many times in a whole lifetime do we hear one say: "I have consecrated my son (or daughter) to the Lord and am directing his education and training to that end."

MONTROSE, MISS.

If God should call one of these children of ours into his service the possibility is that the ear would be dulled by the clink of gold or the music of the dance hall. Another cause is that we do not make the life of a Christian attractive enough to them. Too often the cares and burdens of routine Church work and Church service are many times magnified, while the joy of service is never taken into account. Many pretended Christians represent the Church as a mendicant upon our bounty, with ever outstretched hands pleading for alms while the blessedness of giving is not mentioned.

Another cause of this loss of the young to the Church is that we are not careful enough of those who do enter the fold but leave them to browse around with the old sheep, hence crowding them out from the sweet and tender blades of gospel truth. Special efforts put forth for the protection of the young in our Churches, leaving them not to untrained growth, but carefully cultivating habits of prayer, Bible study, attendance upon the Church services, systematic and proportionate giving, testimony, conversation, our Christian experience and personal work, would richly reward the outlay. It is not enough to become a Christian, but one should "be about his Father's business."

Training is the great requirement of the present age. Every calling in life demands it. Natural ability and unguided development are not enough; therefore as soon as a child is in the way that he should go he should be trained in that way. To this end we have organizations for the young, such as the Sunday School, Epworth League, and missionary societies. But these are not enough. Every man and woman of every Church should heed the command of the Master when he said, "Feed my lambs," and should awake to the full responsibility embodied in this divine command.

The downward march of thousands upon thousands of these young people who are dearer than life, should arouse us to more vital action, more persistent faith, and more faithful treatment of the evil. What physicians call "prophylactic," or preventive treatment is very important in this crisis. Put them into the inner fold in the home and Church, surround them with ever watchful, prayerful, Christian examples, and then shall they "rise up and call us blessed."

When the Son of Man was upon earth this notable conversation took place: "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" And Peter, aggrieved at the implied doubt, answered, "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." Then came the test command, "Feed my lambs." To-day it seems that the same voice may be heard asking, "Church of God, lovest thou me?" and with loud professions we hear the answer, "Lord, thou knowest that we love thee." Again the test: "Feed my lambs."

WHEN THE BOY GROWS UP.

Will he look back from the vantage point of thirty and feel that you were a wise parent in the selection of a school for him, or will he think that if you had given his case more careful attention, you would have placed him in a school where he would have received better training?

The thoughtful, considerate parent feels that the school to which he sends his son must be equipped and its faculty chosen with the primary end of training the boy to become a man—to teach true Christian faith, to develop manly independence and self-confidence, to inspire high ideals of life and service, to strengthen and develop mind and body alike.

Such an institution is the Morgan School, of Fayetteville, Tennessee, which has been built up around the Christian character and wholesome, inspiring personality of Mr. Robert K. Morgan, who has been principal for 25 years. Graduating from the Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tenn., and Vanderbilt University, Mr. Morgan has devoted his life to the training of boys. He is the man to train your boy. The close, personal instruction and association with clean, high-minded men will help him wonderfully. You can get a catalogue of this school upon request addressed to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee.—Adv.

Mrs. FLORENCE BLANTON PASON was born in Choctaw County, Miss., on Oct. 28, 1892. She was converted in early life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she lived a true, faithful member until death came to her on May 12, 1914. She was of a good family, and was an affectionate daughter, a kind friend, and a devoted wife. We miss the beautiful character and the ready church worker, whose cheerful, happy and world-bettering life slowly faded away under the fearful disease of tuberculosis. God bless the true, bereft husband, sisters, brothers, and many warm friends who miss her; but while they deeply mourn because of her going hence, may they have a realizing hope that by earnestly following the Christ whom she loved and served, Heaven will also, finally, be their eternal home.

J. M. WYATT.

Prof. JOHN MILTON McNEILL, son of Rev. Wiley and Jane McNeill, was born on Jan. 19, 1848, in Clark County, Miss., and died on July 8, 1914, at Eucutta, Miss. He was educated at Cooper Institute and taught there for a while. His father died while he was young and all his older brothers having given their lives for the Confederacy, the care of the family fell on him. He sacrificed his own ambitions to raise the family. He educated his brothers, Dr. Geo. McNeill of Newton, and Dr. W. O. McNeill of Eucutta. He helped to educate some of his nephews and nieces. He taught school for several years and at Eucutta he built up a school that for years was the best educational institution in this part of the State. He sent out from his schools many boys and girls that are making a success in life. He was a true member of the Methodist Church and an active Sunday school worker. He was never married, but made his home with Dr. W. O. McNeill. He leaves three brothers to mourn his death. He will be greatly missed from this community, for he was an honored and useful man, much beloved.

W. W. MURRY, P. C.

WESLEY TAYLOR was born near old Harrisville Church, at Harrisville, Miss., on Oct. 27, 1887. The fond parents having high hopes for his future, gave him the name of Wesley in honor of our own great Wesley. He joined the Methodist Church early in life and continued a consistent member till his death on July 2, 1914. After Masonic honors, we laid his body to rest until the resurrection morn. Undisturbed by care or trouble, he lies unmolested awaiting the call of the trumpet angel when all shall be gathered before the great white throne. He died from the effects of typhoid fever, and at this writing a brother in the home of his parents is suffering with the same disease. The parents, Brother and Sister Taylor, are and have been for years the staunch friends of the preacher and the Church, and may all who read this give them their prayers. Though he sleeps cold in mother earth, he has a warm abiding place in the hearts of his friends and the sorrowing ones of those dear to him.

W. B. WALDROP.

JENNIE IRENE LAMBUTH NORMAN was born on September 6, 1838, in Greene County, Ala. She was the daughter of Rev. J. R. Lambuth, and the sister of Rev. Robert Lambuth and Rev. J. W. Lambuth, who were both Methodist preachers, and the latter was for many years a missionary to China and Japan. Her father was twice married, and there were 16 children. They moved to Madison County, Miss., in 1847. Here the family was reared. No family in the State has brought greater blessings to man or service to God than the Lambuth family. Bishop R. W. Lambuth is a nephew of the deceased. When a girl, she gave her heart to God and united with the Methodist Church. She married Mr. J. F. Norman of Fannin, Rankin County, Miss., who preceded her to the better world 3 years ago. She died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Cullley, in Durant, Miss., on June 10, 1914. She was buried at Mizpah Cemetery in Durant. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. W. M. Williams, assisted by the local pastor and Rev. J. P. Hickman. She leaves one daughter and three sons to mourn her departure. She was a modest, reserved, consecrated Christian, and was faithful to all her house. She has gone to meet her loved ones.

W. M. WILLIAMS.

IN LOVING MEMORY OF MRS. NANNIE E. DAILY.

Mrs. Nannie E. Daily, widow of J. P. Daily, died in her home in Oak Ridge, La., June 19, 1914. She was in the eighties, I think. She loved her Church, and as long as her husband lived they went to church and carried the beautiful flowers that grew so luxuriantly for her. In her last years she was too feeble to go much, but was always glad to send her pretty flowers, and I think her flowers were carried or sent to every funeral for years. She will be missed.

Friends, don't forget to put flowers over her. We are glad to hear she had many on her grave. We never lived by kinder neighbors, and she was ours for 4 years. I was sick and they sent us our dinner for six long months so our 4 children could go to school. They came down to our parsonage and offered to do it. Judge said he would furnish the grub and Sister Daily and Aunt Ann said they would serve it, and they did faithfully. They have gone to their reward. They gave much; may they receive much. She was our friend for over 30 years and she wanted us there at her death. She wrote Sister Randle: "I have a favor to ask you and Brother Randle. Come when I send for you," and I told her that I would, but we did not know it, and it is best; she would not have known it. She is at rest. The dear old hands had loved to wait on others. She was kind to her pastor. We never can forget the dear people of Oak Ridge and pray that God will raise up others to take the place of those he is calling, and he will. God bless every one who reads these lines, her loved ones and friends, and ours, and may we all meet some day where there will be no more sad good-byes.

BROTHER and SISTER RANDLE.

A GREAT SORROW.

Dear Dr. Meek: This will inform you of my great sorrow in the death of my devoted and saintly wife who departed this life on the 5th instant in the full triumph of a living faith. She repeatedly told me that all was well. She had been a great sufferer for a long time at stated periods. She was expecting death at any time when one of those attacks came on. She had not lived in vain, but had wrought well for the Master. She had walked by our side a very dear companion for 28 years, and left a Christian influence that lingers and will be relived. Our hearts are sad at the parting; but we shall see her again. We ask the sympathy and prayers of all Christian people. Very respectfully,

T. L. OAKES, P. C.

Don't Hide Them With a Veil; Remove Them With The Othine Prescription

This prescription for the removal of freckles was written by a prominent physician and is usually so successful in removing freckles and giving a clear, beautiful complexion that it is sold by druggists under guarantee to refund the money if it fails.

Don't hide your freckles under a veil; get an ounce of othine and remove them. Even the first few applications should show a wonderful improvement, some of the lighter freckles vanishing entirely.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine; it is this that is sold on the money-back guarantee.

A ROUND TABLE.

By Mrs. Abel Bliss,
President Louisiana Conference.

Did I hear someone say, "It is too warm for our Missionary Meeting?" Oh, no, it isn't! It is really very pleasant to meet together; one forgets to fret when in company; and, then, it is such a satisfaction to feel that one little effort was made for the Master's sake, with its attendant blessing. There is so very much to be looked after just now, that we must take time by the fore-lock, else the year will have rolled around before we are ready.

The Council Meeting in April laid plans that were sanctioned by the General Conference in May, giving us some new working plans and a great forward impetus. We must be watchful from now on until the beginning of the New Year, so that we shall be able to keep step and fall into line with the vanguard, for the Louisiana Conference has no intention of occupying any other position in the ranks of the Woman's Missionary Society. At the district meetings all the new plans will be unfolded and marching orders given. Let us be there, everyone!

Sisters of the Round Table, let us hear from you concerning our work. What lies next to your heart that is of prime importance?

The Children Organized.

It is a regrettable fact that the children of our Church are not organized as they should be in any branch. The cause and real meaning of missions are not always interestingly and intelligently taught.

This is, most probably, due to the fact that we are sadly wanting in well informed, enthusiastic, and consecrated leaders. Nowhere in all our church do we so much need earnest workers as with the children. If our women could only realize the poor business methods employed by our members in financing the work of the Lord, we would bestir ourselves and put our children in charge of our very best women, who will teach the coming generation their whole duty to God. This cry of "Lack of Interest" is radically wrong somewhere. Children are never wanting in interest if there is anything to interest them. Let us impress upon you, leaders of little children, that the future strength of the Church is depending largely upon you. If we are slipshod in our methods of teaching, they will be likewise in doing.

Mrs. J. M. MUNHOLLAND.

Are the Young People Organized?

When the Master planned that his people should be his messengers, he surely meant that the young should have some part. But is it not often true that the busy life of school and college has little time for active Christian work? Surely, in the buoyancy and brightness of youth, the companionship of the Master and the joy of service should not be denied our boys and girls who seek things worth while?

Are the young people of your church doing some definite work? Do they need a leader to organize them into a Young Peoples' Missionary Society with its devotional and social departments, its reading and study circles? Think hard, why are not your young people organized?

Mrs. R. E. BOBBITT.

Every Woman in the Church a Member.

Within the bounds of the Louisiana Conference about 5000 women have banded themselves together under the banner of the Woman's Missionary Society. We believe every woman in the Church should be enlisted, and because they are not we are asking ourselves the question: "Have I failed to give the message?" Without doubt someone has failed; for with a knowledge of the crying need and the helpless and almost hopeless condition of so many of the outcast and poor all about us, the womanhood of our Church could not be hardened and indifferent. Surely someone has failed to carry the message.

The knowledge of these conditions would be discouraging should we try, with our limited means and influence, to cope with them as individuals. We should feel that we were wrestling with problems too great for our strength. But by means of the united strength of our great organization we can go forward in Christ's name to victory. There is a call to every woman in the Church to unite with us. May each one be impressed with this opportunity for service, and heed the call of the Master to engage in this great missionary movement.

Mrs. CROW GIRARD.

The Missionary Meeting.

Since the consolidation under one head of all our woman's auxiliaries in the Church, there can be but one regret—that the average attendance has not materially increased. The missionary auxiliary of every church should not only enroll, but have in attendance at all its meetings, every woman of the church.

To accomplish this, an adoption of club methods, to some extent, would be the first step. Every club president has devoted hours toward learning parliamentary practices so that the smooth procedure of her business meeting wins not only admiration, but reflects credit and honor to the club. Every auxiliary president needs the same training if the women of the Church are to respect her administration.

No club president wastes the time of the women who lay aside other duties to attend meetings. Neither should the time of the woman who attends the missionary meeting be wasted listening to unprofitable and useless discussions that could be settled in committee meetings.

Then the program. No club member would present a program hastily gathered together at the last moment; nor one, the greater part of which each member has had an opportunity to read at leisure in her own home. A program that merely consumes time is worse than no program. Nothing kills interest so surely. Not only should the program instruct, but it must stimulate interest; keeping each member filled with that zeal and enthusiasm which means success to the work.

Mrs. C. F. NIEBERGALL.

The Mission Study Class.

Members of the Ruston Mission Study Class testify to the value of Mission Study as follows:

"It has been a real source of information from a historical as well as a social and religious standpoint."

"It creates a greater interest in general reading."

"It intensifies the interest of those already interested in mission work."

"The missionary spirit becomes contagious."

"The interchange of ideas is good for us."

"The knowledge of various lines of missionary work is an inspiration to greater activity along these lines."

"The study of the immigration question has created in me a greater love and sympathy for the aliens of our country and brought me to a fuller sense of my duty toward them."

Organic or Complete Union.

A larger life and more abundant fruitage will come to all our missionary effort as a united body, because

(1.) Union is scriptural, Psalm 133. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." We cannot labor by ourselves, try as we may. Our work must be for and with others. Man is by nature social and religious.

(2.) It is fraternal and Christlike. It binds us closer to each other and to Christ, as the knowledge of the needs of that other man's brother shines into our hearts—shines in toleration, in understanding; until through all that brother's rags and shame, and fetters, we shall see our indifference grow warm and our prejudices burn away. Knowledge, coupled with God's love, makes us truly co-workers with Christ, sharing in his life purpose. Dr. Chapman says that it is no small thing that the moral sentiment of men has raised these problems of our brother up from the level of indifference into bold relief, discussed and solved. The sensitive conscience is the live conscience, and evil once scanned and weighed is doomed. God's voice speaks through the still small voice of the many, working together for the uplift of the races.

(3.) It tends to perfection in the individual life, the auxiliary and the council, just in proportion as we enter heartily into the plan of complete union, dropping forever all the narrow lines that have held us to either home or foreign interests. We are to look forward to the time when not only our missionary societies, but all Churches and all creeds unite to extend the Kingdom of our Christ. Then we come into the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." With an ideal before us recognized, we must believe in it, build for it, and establish it.

(4.) It is in keeping with modern activities in every sphere. The trades, professions, the Churches, all unite for protection, for strength and efficiency. Why shall not the women who face difficulties on every side do this to preserve our organization and strengthen our stakes? It is the voice of God speaking to the people that they go forward, as commanded centuries ago.

(5.) It comes in answer to prayer. The Master prayed that we might all be one. For years the women have prayed for this. For the past four years it has been the prayer and labor of hundreds of women all over Southern Methodism, as they read the signs of the times, and know that our whole line must advance if the world is to be evangelized in this or any other generation.

(6.) It will be far-reaching in its influence. We may not be able to see results to-day. It will take time to adjust ourselves and our thoughts. But, when the full year of plowing, sowing, and harvesting shall have come around, we shall see the nations of the earth rejoicing together in the harvest of souls, the governments purified, the cities made whole, and the forefathers on our shores shouting "Alleluiahs" with the saved at the ends of the earth.

(7.) Union is mandatory. By action of the Council in session at Ft. Worth ratified by the Board of Missions and finally made law by the General Conference, we now have a Missionary Society. A woman may be a member by entering into the full scope of the work. There is no alternative. But why all these words, then, when union is enforced? Because we want hearty, loving support and co-operation, and not just that that comes from a legal enforcement. There may be some who will withdraw. We pray that there may be not one, who, having put her hand to the plow, will turn back.

Mrs. A. P. HOLT.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

(Resolutions of respect adopted by the Sunday School of the North Wesson Methodist Church.)

Whereas, The merciful Heavenly Father in his infinite wisdom has removed from our midst our beloved superintendent, Mr. J. T. Bridewell; therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That we, the members of the North Wesson Sunday School, have sustained the irreparable loss of our faithful superintendent, whose example is worthy of emulation.

Resolved, 2. That although our hearts are filled with grief, yet we offer a prayer for his noble life—the seed that he has sown among us, for though dead he still lives in the power and beauty of his influence.

Resolved, 3. That we extend our sympathy to the ones who mourn their loss, and pray that the Father may comfort them in their bereavement.

Resolved, 4. That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Sunday school, that a copy be sent to the family, and that copies be furnished for publication to the Hazlehurst Courier and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

As a friend, citizen, and Christian man, no one had a better record. In all circles, he will be sadly missed, but more so in his home and Sunday school. His monument is his sterling character, his resting place the hearts of those who knew and loved him.

YOUR GRANDFATHER WAS A BOY.

When Gray's Ointment already had a long established reputation. Way back in 1847, Dr. Jas. A. Brown of Davidson Co., Tenn., wrote:—"I have often recommended Gray's Ointment for old and indolent ulcers—in one case of 20 years standing, occupying nearly the whole space between the knee and ankle, in which case it effected a permanent cure." Ever since 1820 Gray's Ointment has been heaping victory upon victory in its fight against blood and skin diseases such as ulcers, tumors, boils, burns, etc.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

At the Third Quarterly Conference of the M. E. Church, South, Baton Rouge District, held at Wilson, La., Rev. H. W. Bowman presiding elder, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, In the nature of human events it has become necessary on account of ill-health for Brother F. N. Sweeney to sever his connection as pastor of the Wilson Circuit, Baton Rouge District, Louisiana Conference, therefore be it resolved:

1. That it is with deep affection and love that we part with him, because for nearly four years he has been among us to preach, pray, visit, cheer, and comfort every one with whom he has come in contact regardless of sect or creed. A godly man he was among us to help, and yet a Providence to whom we humbly and reverently bow, seems to have decreed that these lovely relations which existed between pastor and people must be severed. We desire to assure Brother Sweeney that wherever he goes our love will follow him and his loved ones—his helpmate

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

HOUMA MISSION.

By Rev. C. V. Brelthaupt.

Instead of thinking of the words: "Houma Mission," as you read this article, think of one hundred thousand white people, living on some of the richest soil of the State of Louisiana, which has in it some of the richest soil of the United States. Think of having one hundred thousand white people pass by you as you stand on the wayside, only looking into the faces of one thousand Protestants of all denominations within the ranks that passed by. Think of that line having within its numbers, dozens and dozens of Priests and Sisters of the Roman Catholic Church, and not containing more than a half dozen Protestant ministers of all denominations within its ranks who live within the bounds of the territory mentioned.

If the whites alone were placed in a morgue, lying side by side, and only allowing twelve inches for each human being, the row would be approximately nineteen miles long. No, they are not dead in body, but multitudes of thousands of them judging from the life they live, are in the spiritual morgue, which is more awful than if the spirit were alive and the body dead, unless the soul does find its Christ before going into the beyond.

Now think of a hundred thousand people with a hundred thousand hungers, each one of them a life, each life with its responsibilities, its trials, its superstitions, its fears, its hopes and its triumphs; its hungers in soul and, in some cases, in body.

Instead of picturing Roman Catholicism as you have it where Protestantism predominates, think of it being to a great extent on the order of what it is in Cuba, New and Old Mexico. Have you done as I asked you to do? If so, you might have some idea of the enormity of the Houma Mission.

Schools.

Now bear in mind that whereas only $17,925 was spent in this parish for public education in the year 1905, which is an example of what was spent proportionately in other parishes in this section for public education in this territory. In the year 1913 there was $70,543 spent for the same purpose showing you the incalculable advantage and immediate need for a spiritual awakening, and deeper interest working hand in hand with this clamor for a better trained mind along literary lines than has existed here in years gone by.

Immigration.

Forget the marsh lands now, as mosquito hatcheries, and think of them as being a vast virgin soil, as rich as the valley of the Nile, being reclaimed by the thousands of acres every day. From a map of reclamation projects now in operation as taken from the government engineers' office, which is on the same floor that we use for a Church here in Houma, there are 147,937 acres of this land now under process of drainage, houses being built on it as it is drained, and a splendid element of people moving in and making their homes here. Allowing one person on this, the richest of land down here, for every four that now inhabit the high lands, we will have 30,000 additional inhabitants of new blood on the lands now under process of reclamation. Of course thousands of acres more will be reclaimed within the next twenty years.

Getting Closer to New Orleans.

We only lack 10 miles of road of having a public highway from here direct to New Orleans, which will put us in 50 miles of the city by public highway, whereas we are now 140 miles away. You can readily see that this will be of great benefit to this section.

Intercoastal Canal.

As we already have a waterway from here to New Orleans, then from here to Morgan City, there is no doubt that the intercoastal canal will pass through here in taking over the canals that are already in operation largely by private capital at this time.

Our boards have done a great thing in investing in this field, the biggest rural missionary problem in the immediate South, and God has wonderfully blessed the efforts put forth heretofore. Especially has the Woman's Board done a great work in providing a parsonage for the pastor, sending Miss Iles, the deaconess, to this field who is a native of this State, and has the situation well in hand. And to our great joy another deaconess, Miss Kate Walker, of Texas, was assigned to us in this field.

In some future issue of the Advocate I will go into detail as to our mode and method of work, telling you about the five exhorters, the local preacher we have, all of whom are kept at work with $100 that we are raising here on the field, the work of the deaconess, our regular paid assistant, etc.

Houma, La.

TRY THIS FOR YOUR HEALTH.

For diseases which do not readily yield to drug treatment, such as chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, Bright's disease, gall stones, uric acid poisoning, and diseases of the kidney and liver, the best physicians send their wealthy patients to the famous mineral springs. Some even spend months at the Spas of Europe and are almost invariably cured and greatly benefited.

I believe that the Shivar Spring is the greatest mineral spring ever discovered and I believe it so firmly that I offer to send you enough water for a three week's treatment (two five-gallon demijohns) on my guarantee that if you do not say that you are benefited I will refund the price. You would hardly believe me if I told you that only about two out of a thousand, on the average, say that they have received no benefit. The water is curing thousands. It cured me when my friends and physicians thought that my case was incurable and I am willing and anxious for you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If I win you become a life-friend of the Spring. If I lose I will be sorry for you, but I will appreciate your courtesy in giving the water a trial and will gladly refund your money on request. Read and sign the following letter:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17C, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

By Mrs. D. C. Worrall

We have spoken of the importance of the knowledge to be gained through Mission Study Classes. But knowledge that does not result in action is fruitless. Learning without resultant action is hearing the word and doing it not. In the work of the Mission Study Class we learn the needs of the world; in the Christian Stewardship Department we are brought face to face with our responsibility for them. All that we are and have is God's. Comparatively few are they who can answer the world's needs in person; the many must respond by their substance. But, again, we must know if we would feel; we must feel if we would pray, and we must pray if we would give aright. That we may know, many leaflets, tracts, and books have been written and are recommended to our classes for study. Some of the best of these are: "How to Get Rich," "Delight in Giving," "Sacrificial Giving," "How Native Christians Give," "God's Stewards," "Our Stewardship of Personality," "A Tithing," "Seven Reasons for Tithing," "God's Tenth," "Money the Measure of a Man," "Her Tithes," "Internal Revenue—A Girl's Application of It."

So important has this matter been found to be that our recent General Conference put the work of Christian Stewardship in the hands of the Corresponding Secretaries of the auxiliaries and after the first of January, 1915, the work of promoting systematic giving and the teaching of the duties of Christian stewardship will be among those of the Corresponding Secretary. At headquarters at Nashville the work has been combined with that of the Superintendent of Publicity and put in the department of the Educational Secretary. Mrs. H. R. Steele, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. All requests for literature of this department should be made to her.

To bring this important work before the Church better than ever before the month of January, 1915, has been set apart as a time in which a special effort shall be made to stress the subject of Christian stewardship. A leaflet will be issued each quarter and a place will be provided in the 1915 Year Book for the presentation of Christian stewardship the first month of each quarter.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION.

(Adopted by the Missionary Society of the Wesson M. E. Church, South.)

Whereas, God in his wisdom and love has taken out of this world the soul of our beloved sister, Mrs. Virginia R. Ellis, and

Whereas, She was a charter member of our Society, although at the time of her death she belonged to the society in Hattiesburg, Miss., we feel that we have lost a devoted friend, loyal and true to the teachings of Methodism, and one who evinced the lofty principles of a true Christian, ever watchful, ever mindful of the sacred duties that were confided to her care—a devoted woman in all things; therefore be it

Resolved, 1. That we, the members of this Society, extend to her sorrowing family an unbounded sympathy in this hour of their affliction, and trust that the knowledge of her long, useful, and devoted life will, in a measure, assuage the grief with which their hearts are filled.

Resolved, 2. That a copy of the above expression of respect be forwarded to the family of the deceased and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

OUR POSTERS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown

One of the most interesting features of the Woman's Missionary Society of Peliccy Methodist Church, New Orleans, is the monthly posters that are made by a committee of two appointed each month by the president. These posters are often works of art and are very attractive indeed. They always bear on the topic for the monthly meeting and are placed several Sabbaths in advance in a conspicuous place in the vestibule of the Church, so that all going in may be attracted by them. Bright colored pictures are cut from magazines, postal cards, or whatever available source, and are arranged on a large white cardboard with text, lettering, and invitations to the meeting.

When China was the subject, some of the handwork of the Chinese women was borrowed from the Chinese mission and arranged on the cardboard with pictures of the Chinese women and children. One poster illustrated the conquest of Christianity over all the nations of the world. A large cross was in the center of the cardboard, and grouped around it were Chinese, Japanese, Cubans, Mexicans, Koreans, and negroes stretching out eager hands while the Christians pointed them to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world. When Temperance was the subject there were pictures of wine-bibbers, dancers, revelers; also appropriate texts of Scripture telling of the evils of such things and the remedy for all sin.

At the meetings the poster is brought in and one of the committee gives a talk on the topic of the day. Pictures impress a subject forcibly on the mind and mean much more than mere printed matter; therefore we feel that our posters are a great help in our work of interesting the people.

BUSINESS ETHICS.

Why should we apply a lower standard of ethics in our business affairs than in our social relations? Is it not, in reality, just as immoral to slander your competitor's merchandise as to slander the competitor himself, or his wife, son or daughter? Is a falsehood any less a falsehood, or any less immoral because it relates to a trade-marked commodity such as Coca Cola, for example?

You would feel very badly indeed if you suddenly discover that some little morsel of scandal, relating to some personal acquaintance, and which you had repeated to your friends, was absolutely false and never had any foundation in truth. You would be thoroughly ashamed of yourself and, if you possessed the true instincts of nobility, you would apologize for your error. In fact you would consider it your duty and pleasure to protect the good name even of your enemy against such slanders as you knew to be without foundation.

Have you ever paused to consider the obligation which you, as an educated person, sustain toward those who do not know the truth about people and things? You have read in these pages the testimony of the leading scientists of the world, including the chemists of the Department of Agriculture of your own Government, to the effect that Coca Cola does not contain even the most minute particle of cocaine; that it is as free from alcohol as the very bread you eat. Time and again you have read in this paper letters from the world's most renowned chemists and physicians proving that Coca Cola is, in effect, merely an improved coffee or tea of more delicious flavor and rendered more wholesome by the refining process. You have read how the refreshing caffeine is retained and how the tannic acid and other acrid matter of coffee and tea are rejected, thus giving to Coca Cola all the good and refreshing qualities of tea and coffee with none of their unpleasant effects.

Let us suggest that if you believe in fair play, you begin by applying the same standard of ethics in material things that you apply in social life. All good things are slandered and it may not be long before you will have opportunity to use your knowledge in refusing a false statement about Coca Cola. If, in order to prove your position, you need additional facts and authorities, write for free booklet entitled "The Truth About Coca Cola," a copy of which will be mailed, postpaid, to any interested party by the Advertising Managers of this paper, Messrs. Jacobs & Co., Clinton, S. C.

REPORT OF HOME DEPARTMENT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Month ending June 30, 1914.

Adult auxiliaries, 87; Adult members, 2216; Young People auxiliaries, 12; Young People members, 327; Junior divisions, 22; Junior division members, 544; number members in Baby division, 121; Total members, 3452; total Life members, 26; subscribers to Missionary Voice, 849; subscribers to Young Christian Worker, 161; members taking home study course, 554; number using leaflet bulletins, etc., 27; number pledged to Christian Stewardship, 61; boxes of supplies sent off and reported to Bureau 3; auxiliaries visiting sick and strangers, 58; auxiliaries holding cottage prayer meetings, 4; auxiliaries represented in city Mission Board, 16.

Mrs. Holmes' report to me for second quarter is as follows:

Adult dues, $36.94; Young People dues, $5.69; Junior dues, $11.39; Baby dues, 25; Adult pledge, $283.71; Young People's pledge, $2.25; Junior mite boxes and pledge, $5.23; Baby mite boxes and pledge, $2.03; Relief fund, $4.70; Scarritt fund, $4.80; Conference expense fund, $30.44; Special new Deaconess at Houma by Mansfield auxiliary, $95; cash receipts, $827.26; by voucher, $3142.77.

In comparing the second quarterly report with that of the first, we find only 87; adult auxiliaries, 3 less than last month. Eunice (Lafayette District) has dropped from our ranks, and is known as a Ladies' Aid Society. We have been holding on to Tallulah and Mangham in Monroe District, but they have not reported this year, and I am sorry to hear that they have disbanded.

One auxiliary writes: "It seems that we cannot get on a working basis; everything and everybody moves slowly. The weather being so warm has caused a decrease in our attendance and interest. We are weak financially and spiritually, but lack of information and consecration is the cause of our inactivity. We hope things will brighten up this fall and we will have a better report next quarter."

This good sister is holding her society together, and if it were not for the faithful few throughout our State our missionary work would suffer.

I feel encouraged over the general outlook, and the financial report in the Home Department is an increase over last year at this time. At the end of the second quarter last year, 1913, $440.60 had been paid on the Home Department pledge. At the close of this second quarter, 1914, $619.66 has been paid. This leaves a balance of $1380.34 to be paid before the close of 1914. Sisters, help me and help your District Secretary to meet every obligation. Don't let your auxiliary keep back the pledge that was made to the Home Department. Pay your pledge as soon as possible and don't wait until the end of the year when we are all hard up and overwhelmed with other obligations. The King's business should be settled first.

By the way, have you sent in what you pledged at Rayville to the Houma mission? If not, do it right now. We know the needs at Houma and let us not make them wait for these several small amounts.

These are days of wonderful opportunities, and if we listen we will hear the still small voice calling us to a larger service. Plan to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed handling aright the Word of truth."

Mrs. W. T. CUNNINGHAM,
Cor. Secty. Home Dept.

Save One-Third the Cost on High-Grade Pianos and Player-Pianos by Placing Your Order Through The New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club

The Club is the greatest money-saving plan ever devised for the distribution of pianos. But the big saving in price is only one of the many attractive features which have made the Club so popular and successful.

Read the following brief description of some of the main features of the Club, then write for your copy of the catalogue which gives a full and clear explanation of the plan and which pictures and describes the many beautiful styles of Pianos and Player-Pianos from which Club members make their selection.

MAIN FEATURES OF THE CLUB

1. By uniting our orders in a big Club of one hundred buyers, we secure the lowest possible Factory price for each Club member, thereby saving fully one-third the cost on high-grade Pianos and Player-pianos. As the Management secures the other ninety-nine members, all you have to do is to place your own order. Ludden & Bates finance the Club and your Piano is shipped at once.

2. To secure for each Club member the most convenient terms of easy monthly, quarterly or annual payments, based on the lowest cash price and without the customary overcharge for time payments.

3. To remove every possible objection to the easy payment plan by providing that in the event of your death after one-fifth of the purchase price has been paid in cash, and provided that payments have been promptly met when due, all further payments are canceled and your family is given a receipt in full.

4. To insure the highest quality of Pianos and Player-pianos, fully guaranteed by one of the oldest, largest and most reliable Piano houses, thus avoiding the disappointment which so often results from dealing with unknown firms. Each Club member has the privilege of returning the Piano and getting back every dollar he has paid on it, if a 10 days' trial in his own home does not prove it to be exactly as represented. In addition, he is protected by the lifetime guarantee and by the exchange privileges as described in the Club booklet.

5. To enable Club members to dispose of their old Pianos to best advantage in exchange for a new Player-piano.

6. To provide a Free Music Roll Service for Player-pianos by which Club members may exchange their old music rolls for new selections at any time and at a nominal charge to cover clerical expense.

7. Every Piano and Player-piano furnished by the Club is fully guaranteed and is backed by the reputation of Ludden & Bates, who for nearly half a century have enjoyed the distinction of being the leading piano house in the South.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING

LUDDEN & BATES

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE PIANO CLUB DEPT.

ATLANTA, GA.

The reports of the pastors showed that they are all busy and that considerable progress has been made this year. About 350 accessions from all sources were reported. There are eight pastoral charges from which the figures were not given as the pastors were not at the Conference.

There are four new charges in the district where we have not had preachers previous to this year. McNary, a sawmill town, to which Rev. W. B. Perritt was appointed at the last Conference, is a comfortable station; and the De Ridder, Oakdale, Mexican and Indian missions have been established since the adjournment of the Annual Conference. At McNary a church has been built costing about $3500, and a parsonage is to be built before the meeting of the next Annual Conference. Churches have been built also at Oakdale at a cost of $3500, on the Columbia charge, and one for the Indians on the Mexican and Indian Mission. The church at Provencal, which was destroyed by a cyclone last year, has been rebuilt. There are to be churches built this year at De Ridder and on the Marksville charge. A parsonage has been built at De Ridder and they are to build one soon at Oakdale.

A matter worthy of note is that there have been 40 conversions and accessions among the Indians, and the presiding elder stated that all of them pray in public and give public testimony.

Rev. F. M. Freeman, of Natchitoches, in making his report stated that there is a large debt on the Church which is hampering the work there and made an appeal for assistance in paying off the debt. A motion was introduced by Rev. W. B. Perritt and adopted by the Conference setting apart the second Sunday of August and as many Sundays following as necessary, as the time when a collection shall be taken by the pastor in each church for this cause.

The report of the Committee on Missions, which was adopted, set the third Sunday of September as a day for a collection for the "French Mission Special." Connectional interests of the Conference were represented, as follows: Centenary College, by Rev. R. H. Wynn, D.D.; Mansfield Female College, by Pres. R. E. Bobbitt; The Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, by Rev. R. W. Vaughan; and the Board of Church Extension, by Rev. J. D. Harper.

T. W. Holloman, H. H. White, Dr. Paul Foster, and Rev. W. R. Whatley were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and J. W. Tooke and Rev. P. A. Swan were elected alternates. Rev. E. J. Vallery was received as a local preacher from the Methodist Protestant Church, and Rev. Dan Hays and Rev. E. J. Wood as local preachers from the M. E. Church. A resolution of thanks to the pastor and people of Opelousas for courtesies and hospitality, and to the presiding elder, in appreciation of his efficient services, was unanimously adopted. The preaching by Rev. C. B. Powell, F. M. Freeman, R. H. Wynn, H. B. Perritt and J. W. Booth "was good to the use of edification."

PREACHING SUPREME.

The supreme work of the minister is to preach the Gospel of Christ as "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." To carry such a message into the pulpit and have it burn in the soul until it is delivered, is the one thing, above everything else, to which the minister is divinely called. To put pastoral work, important as it is, or any department of Church work in the place of making the best possible effort to preach impressively and convincingly, is a mistaken notion, and followed only by a depreciating and harmful influence upon pastor and people.

Recently it was said of a minister, "He recognizes that he is not a preacher, but he tries to make up his deficiencies in the pulpit by splendid work in the pastorate, and by ministering to the special needs of his people." In reply to such a statement, we say that, worthy as is the effort of that minister to be generally and helpfully serviceable to his people, he has surely abandoned the supreme work to which he is called in making his pulpit secondary. And, while he may be entirely honest in his convictions, he is no less misled in lowering the standard of his pulpit effort.

Let it be distinctly understood that we are not demanding that every minister preach a scholarly and eloquent sermon. While, perhaps, only a minority may be able to do that in the pulpit, no minister, if he is at his best, and does his best in preparation, need fail in bringing to his people a message that shall be not only acceptable, but convincing and inspiring.

Preparation to preach interestingly and effectively is more a matter of soul status and aspiration than of intellectual fitness. It has not been, nor will it be, the minister of the most thorough scholarly attainments who will preach the most fruitfully in impressions made and results achieved, but the man who is able truthfully to say with Paul, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." And the great apostle also says to the Corinthians, "Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" The Pulpit Commentary paraphrases this declaration. Paul felt "the sense of an overwhelming moral compulsion—an irresistible behest." No other obligation could be suggested as a substitute for this "one thing" he was summoned to do—to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The qualification most needed, therefore, to preach effectively, every minister can possess, and that is attained only by the soul which absorbs the mind of Christ, and, like our Lord Jesus, is willing to die that the people may be brought into a saving knowledge of him.

It is not fine phrasing, not an admirable literary style, not the ability in itself to be logical, philosophical, or eloquent in speech, but what Daniel Webster demanded—that the minister know by experience the Gospel of Salvation, and be constrained by the love and passion of Christ to proclaim this message from the pulpit. And just this, in its best sense, every minister can and will do if he lives here with Jesus Christ. To this end, let him give his days and nights to a new and fresh study of the New Testament. Let him be much in prayer and meditation. Let him heed distinctly the admonition of his Divine Lord: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

When Jesus becomes a personal Savior and life is wholly yielded up to him, then the privilege of publicly proclaiming him will seem the sublimest work committed to any soul. The minister thus personally equipped will have a gospel to preach, and will utter it always with effectiveness and power. The supreme work of the minister, therefore, is to preach.—Zion's Herald.

MR. ASA G. CANDLER,

Of Atlanta, Ga., who recently gave $1,000,000 to the University located at Atlanta, Ga.—the largest single gift ever made by a Southern man to the cause of education. He is a brother of Bishop W. A. Candler and a loyal member of the M. E. Church, South.

A PHILANTHROPIST'S MAGNIFICENT GIFT.

The donation by Asa G. Candler, of Atlanta, of more than a million dollars to found a great educational institution for Atlanta and the South, is profoundly impressive and suggestive from several viewpoints. A million dollars is a mighty sum of money.

Nothing could be more significant of the growth and prosperity of this so lately wasted South than the fact that there is a business man within that territory who is able to give one million dollars to a great munificent institution. It has not been many years since there was not a single man in all the South who was worth one million dollars. To-day there are hundreds of men who have built fortunes out of the new conditions that surround the Southern States. Mr. Candler's great gift attests the pleasing and inspiring material progress of this great people.

It is a much more impressive and inspiring thing that a man who out of poverty and hardship worked for and accumulated a great fortune in his own lifetime should be great enough in mind and heart to part with it for the benefit of other people. Generally speaking, it is the men who have inherited money who let it go easily. But the men who, out of nothing, have steadily accumulated all they have, acquire also the habit and passion of accumulating, and the instinct of holding on to what they have.

It is a notable evidence of the inherited and stimulated devotion of Asa G. Candler to his Church, to his country, to his religion and to his fellow men, that his nobler ideals should have so gloriously survived the rapid acquisition of money and dominated his character and his action in this great and beneficent act. Asa Candler made this possible only by keeping alive during all his financial progress the full force of his inherited and acquired ideals, by such active, helpful, altruistic work for his Church, his city and his State, that the influences of money have not been able to corrupt and spoil his perfect citizenship and his perfect Christian manhood. And this is the wholesome and inspiring reflection that grows out of his superb donation.

The best of all reflections, however, is that the effect of this grand example can not possibly be lost upon the contemporaries of Asa G. Candler in Georgia and the South. Few, if any, of them are able to give a million dollars to the Christian education of the Southern youth.

But there are thousands of Southern men who are able to give much in their lifetime and to leave more when they die. It is not so much in the sum total of what a good man gives as in the proportion to his real capacity to give. The widow's mite is as old as sacred history in the sweet and sustained approval of Christianity's common Lord and those who follow Him, and this great rich man of Atlanta who in his lifetime has so nobly let go so large a sum of his material possessions for the common good, must surely inspire and point the way to hundreds of his prosperous fellow Southerners in which by liberal gifts to the great cause of education, they must build the Southland that they love into real greatness and enduring glory, and "departing leave behind them footprints on the sands of time."

Some one has said: "The sight of one free man will make a thousand free." May it be in that generous South that—

The sight of one great giver shall make a thousand give!

This is the lesson of Asa G. Candler's gift.

GIVE THE BEST YOU HAVE

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
They give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to you life will flow,
A strength in your time of need;
Have faith and a surge of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
The just what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

THE CUCKOO SCHOOL

(The following is a part of a remarkably interesting article which appeared in the June number of The Bible Champion, of which Dr. Jay Benson Hamilton, of New York, is editor.)

"The cuckoo is a perfect type of a creature endowed by nature with audacity and ingratitude as its prominent characteristics. Instead of building a nest for itself, the cuckoo always audaciously deposits her eggs in the nest of some of the smaller insectivorous birds, generally placing only one egg in each nest. The egg of the cuckoo is comparatively of small size, so that the small birds into whose nest the intruder is thus foisted, are not alarmed at its presence, but hatch it together with their own offspring, and when hatched pay as much attention to the young parasite as if his presence in the nest was perfectly legitimate.

"The young cuckoo, however, repays all this care with a behavior which is gross ingratitude; for as soon as he has acquired sufficient strength, he proceeds in the most business-like manner to get rid of his foster-brothers, in order to appropriate to the gratification of his own inordinate appetite the whole of the supplies brought by the parent birds. For this purpose he gently insinuates himself under the body of one of the young birds, and by the assistance of his wings, contrives to hoist the unfortunate little animal upon his back, which is furnished with a peculiar depression to enable the latter to rest comfortably in that dangerous position. Having succeeded thus far, the young cuckoo proceeds backwards to the edge of the nest, and then, with a sudden jerk, throws off his burden. In this manner, in the course of a few days, the usurper remains in undisturbed possession of the nest, and secures for himself the entire attention of the birds which he has thus deprived of their legitimate offspring. This care is continued long after the young cuckoo has left the nest."

"Tain't so!"

Too fast, my friend of the Modern Mind. This is not a Bible fable. It is only a page from Natural History. However, a hint or two in Shakespeare, whose inspiration you accept, even if you deny it to the Scriptures, authenticates its truth.

The Fool said to King Lear when he was ordered out of his house by his unfilial daughter:

"The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young."

The old, half-demented King then uttered the stinging denunciation of filial ingratitude, which the Church may learn is true, even if not inspired:

"How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is To have a thankless child."

Worcester said to King Henry:

"Being fed by us you used us so
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow; did oppress our nest;
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk
That even our love durst not come near your sight
For fear of swallowing, but with nimble wing
We were enforced for safety's sake to fly."

Most Evangelical Christian Schools began in a very humble way. They were born of an ardent desire upon the part of the various denominations for a Christian education for their children. As might be expected, each denomination preferred a school where the tenets of its faith would be taught the students. Funds were the gift of the many poor, and required great self-denial for many years to pay the sums pledged. In the course of time buildings were erected, the institution grew and began to be recognized as successfully serving the community, and became the pride of the Christian people whose unselfish bounty had created, developed and established it. So far, this may be regarded as the common history of all denominational schools.

Several ingenious ways were found to change the character of the school. In some cases it began with a member of the faculty, who laid great stress upon the science which was his domain. It mattered little what science or department it was, there began to be whispers that denominationalism hampered free thought and the Modern Mind must have a little more leeway. Then the benefactions of the rich, which were absent during the long struggle of the early years, endowed chairs or erected buildings. Trustees were chosen not so much for their piety or their denominational loyalty as for other more worldly reasons. The board of trustees, by the natural selection of those in control, ceased to be narrowly bigoted and laid great stress upon broad Christian scholarship, and one by one the special denominational features disappeared. After a time the trustees no longer regarded the institution as sectarian, but as an undenominational school. The finishing touch came from the offering of funds by men of large means to build great buildings, endow great departments, or admit the members of the faculty to a pension list. The very small consideration demanded was that the institution should abandon the few remaining sectarian marks. The students learn from the occupant of each chair truth as accepted by him with the most utter indifference to the standards of the denomination under whose nominal auspices he yet remains. In not a few cases, the trustees assume to own and control the institution and disregard, and in some cases defy, the church authority. In not a few instances the details of the transition have been so cleverly arranged that no law has been violated, and the courts when appealed to have affixed their seal to the transfer of all authority to the trustees, and the institution is lost to the denomination forever.

It is unnecessary to name any of the institutions whose career has illustrated the methods herein suggested. It is only necessary to note, that the honored and beloved school of the fathers no longer has any but the most nominal relations to the denomination that founded and nourished it for so many years. In not a few instances the religious tenets taught are in the most direct antagonism possible to the original faith, and the students are trained to lightly regard, if not totally deny, the doctrines the school was established to teach. The striking fact remains, that in spite of all this, the name is unchanged, the evangelical connection is unhesitatingly claimed, although the creed and the authority of the Church are scoffingly repudiated. The teachers, many of them ministers, hold their denominational membership as evangelical, but disregard their ordination vows. They advocate, by addresses, magazine articles and published books, doctrines antagonistic to the religious faith of the denomination whose name they bear.

"BURIED WITH HIM IN BAPTISM."

"Buried with him in Baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Colossians, 11, 12.

"Buried," separated "In baptism." Buried into what? not into water but into death. "Buried with him by baptism into death," says Romans VI, 4. "Dead to sin," says Romans VI, 2; "putting off the body of the sins of the flesh," says Col. II,

11. If this means death to sin it also means death to the law, for "the strength of sin is the law." So we are not buried into water, nor is the allusion to immersion, if you will pardon me for flying in the face of commentators, but to actual death and burial. But we are buried into death to sin and the law. Atonement, if you please, means death to the letter and life to the spirit. This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days," saith the Lord. "I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them."

"With him." This means an appropriation of the atonement, accepting Christ's sacrifice as made for us, and him as our personal Savior. Then we are buried with the indwelling Christ.

"In baptism." "In baptism" does not mean in water, but in a state of baptism. Says Romans VI, 4. "By baptism." And this baptism is not a baptism of water, but a baptism of the Holy Ghost, of which the baptism of water is only a sign. Says Col. II, 11. "Circumcision made without hands," Romans II, 29. "Circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter." We might legitimately add Baptism without hands, of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter.

What is this baptism? The text says, "The operation of God," which I presume to add, is the Spirit.

"Wherein." This evidently means that in the same baptism wherein ye are buried ye are also risen. If "in baptism" means thrusting the candidate under water, does it also mean lifting him out again? "In baptism" is the state of being at the time of burial and also at the time of resurrection. It is a baptism of death to sin and the law and unto life and righteousness, and therefore of the Spirit.

"Also." With the same efficacy of burial are ye risen. The same Spirit which effected burial into death to sin and the law effected also resurrection unto life with Christ.

"Ye." Since the atonement is dependent upon faith, this must mean the faithful.

"Are risen." This is the rising of the spiritual man, and a regeneration or circumcision of the heart. With Christ we are buried into death to sin and the law in Holy Ghost baptism, wherein we are also made alive with him in regeneration. Says Romans VI, 4, "That like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

"Through the faith." This is our part in the atonement. We must believe that Jesus is the son of God and trust him for our salvation, and not him only but also the Holy Spirit by whom God operates upon the heart.

"The faith of the operation." Faith is a part of the great plan of God's operations. So death to sin and resurrection into life must come to us through our faith in the "operation of God."

"Operation of God." God had power to kill and He hath power to make alive again. Operating by his Spirit, he brings about death to sin and also resurrection to "newness of life."

"Who hath raised him from the dead." Our text carries out the figure of our death to sin and resurrection to life—"by the glory of the Father," says Romans VI, 4; "operation of God," says our text, "by the power of that same God who hath raised up Christ from the dead."

Therefore, we are buried into death to sin and the law with the indwelling Christ in a state of Holy Ghost baptism, in which baptism with efficacy like unto that which it exercised in the burial are ye who are faithful also risen in newness of life with Christ through the faith, which is a part of the great plan of the operation of God, who hath raised Him from the dead.

UNIVERSITAS.

By Rev. Wm. H. Coleman.

This Latin word, from which our word UNIVERSITY is derived, signified the whole, the world, the universe. In this most progressive age certain men seem to be imbued with the idea that for an educational institution to be worthy of so dignified a title it must be broad and liberal enough to admit the universe of error as well as the universe of truth and righteousness. Therefore the very modern movement to rid the universities of the awful incubus of the Church, and to divest education of religion.

Thus, at the meeting of our recent General Conference, we were confronted with this situation: Not only had the highest judicial tribunal of a great State declared the only university of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to be the property of others, but also so much of the broad liberal spirit had permeated the university atmosphere as to largely eclipse the Christian ideals and neutralize the Christian spirit of the university life.

Not only the great Methodist Church, but all Christendom was aggrieved by such an outrage.

The General Conference, backed by a great Church solidly lined up for the high and holy principles which God has eternally fixed, launched a movement for the establishment of two great CHRISTIAN universities, and we were not disappointed in believing that our God had already placed in the hands of faithful laymen ample means that they would gladly place at the disposal of the Church to meet the needs involved in such a crisis. For in less than two months from the adjournment of the Conference He had so inspired the liberality of godly laymen and given such wisdom to the Educational Commission in its work as to give us at this early date the assurance of the two universities—one in Dallas and one in Atlanta.

We are in the midst of world upheavals, national transitions, and personal unrest; surrounded by wealth-crazed, pleasure-mad throngs, that are being deluded and destroyed by error and vice as they drift, like debris, with the tide that leads to eternal ruin.

The world's greatest battle is upon us: a battle for righteousness, and the character of our education is no small element involved in the issue. Surely the Church of God that has provided and fostered the world's best education during all the past; that has founded all the great institutions of learning from which we have received our greatest inventors, authors, statesmen, educators, reformers, and religious leaders, still has a divinely appointed and sublime mission to meet the world's need in the educational realm.

We need not only the millions that our great men are giving, but the prayers and zealous co-operation of all our people. And it is imperative that every man on each board of trust and in each faculty be a true man of God, sound in faith, loyal to the Church, and of too great personality to either become the satellite of some small meteor flashing athwart the skies of some new philosophical delusion or theological heresy, or to fall down and worship at the shrine of gold. We must have this high type of Christian manhood in EACH chair of EVERY department: there is no more excuse for a godless law, or medical, or mechanical department than for a godless theological department. Some one has truly said, "It matters not where one studies, but with whom." The teacher is indeed one of the most potent factors in the whole life structure of the pupil; for to him is committed the delicate task of moulding the character and shaping the eternal destiny of immortal souls.

HISTORIC PORT GIBSON.

Dear Mr. Editor: In the good old times when writing was one of the essentials of the schoolmaster, and before the Spencerian system of copy-books was known, one of the favorite copies for the pupil, written in full round letters, was "Procrastination is the thief of time," and this writer has written it enough times to have been forever fortified against that crafty old sneak—let him who can, cast the first stone.

Soon after my arrival in this little city, nearly four years ago, I discovered that I was treading upon ground rich in history both civil and ecclesiastical; but as yet because of this disposition to postpone I have written practically nothing concerning it. As early as 1802 we read of Claiborne County, of which Port Gibson was the county seat, taking its name from its earliest settler whose tomb is in our city cemetery, bearing the date of 1816. Through the thought of careful officers, there is a file of papers in the Chancery Clerk's office coeval with the formation of the county. The town is located at what were the headwaters for flat-boats up the Bayou Pierre. Through the town runs the old Natchez Trace, the famous highway from Nashville, on the Cumberland, to Natchez on the Mississippi. On the outskirts of the town is a marble stone marking the trace of this earliest highway through the wilderness. Within eight miles is the hiding place of Blennerhasset—the LaCache. Only a few miles away is yet pointed out the site of the grist mill owned by Lorenzo Dow and his wife, Peggy. Four miles to the west of the town is the battlefield where, on the first day of May, 1863, General Bowen fought a hopeless battle in his efforts with 5000 men to defeat General Grant with an army of 30,000, and here was the home, and it is also the last resting place of General B. G. Humphries, famous both as warrior and statesman.

The first official record, ecclesiastical, we have, is that in 1825 John C. Burrus was appointed to the presidency of Elizabeth Academy, at Washington, and was required to devote as much of his time as possible to the village of Port Gibson, but twenty years previous to this time churches had been organized in the adjacent country—one at St. Albans, at the head of navigation for flat-boats on the Big Black, by Tobias Gibson as early as 1801.

Three times in its history the town has entertained the session of the Annual Conference; the first in 1844, and the last in 1896. When the first Methodist Church was built in the community I have not been able to ascertain, but I am informed that the one now occupied, a spacious brick, is the third in its place and was erected about 1860. Numerically it has never been a strong church, but for faith in the Master and zeal for his cause, it has conceded to none the first position. Two godly women have represented this church in the foreign mission field—Miss Addie Gordon and Miss Nell Drake. Miss Gordon became the wife of Rev. W. B. Burke and has since joined the heavenly band. Miss Drake is principal of the Susan B. Wilson school at Sunkiank.

Higher education has been a conspicuous feature in the community life here from its earliest history, and its refining influences are to be seen and felt on every hand and in every circle. When the fortunes of war made it no longer possible to maintain the Oakland College near Rodney, it was moved to Port Gibson, and given the name of the Chamberlain-Hunt Academy and is maintained by the Presbyterians of the State as a first-class training school for boys, being always filled to its capacity. As early as 1840 our Church began the work of higher education for young women by establishing the Port Gibson Female College, which will soon begin its 75th session, under the presidency of Rev. T. J. O'Neil, who is assisted by a faculty of carefully selected and experienced teachers. Those within the patronizing territory would do well to correspond with President O'Neil before deciding where to send their daughters for the next session. As a canvasser, O'Neil is very active, and his reports as to the prospects for the coming session are inspiring to the friends of the institution. Physical conditions in and around the grounds and buildings suggest an eye for neatness and thought for healthfulness. More might be written but I am admonished that brevity is the life of a newspaper communication.

A VISIT TO THE MT. VERNON PLACE CHURCH.

During a short stay in the city of Washington, D. C., on our way to Europe, it was the good fortune of my wife and myself to attend services on Sunday morning at the Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The Church is situated about one-half mile northwest of the Capitol. Never were we made to feel more at home among strangers. A person who once attends services at Mt. Vernon, if at all religiously inclined, will want to return again. Strangers are heartily welcomed and are made to feel that they are among friends. As we entered the church, we were cheerfully greeted by more than one member of the Church. We were asked our names and place of residence, and soon felt that we were at home and among friends. The pews were supplied with printed programs of all the services for the week, the name of the presiding elder, the pastor, all the church officials and standing committees, and their places of residence. The printed programs dispensed with the necessity of making any announcement of the various meetings of the Church and of the officials and committees during the week, as all necessary information was furnished by the printed sheet.

The sermon by the pastor, Rev. Edward H. Hardin, was simple, strong, and effective. The sentiments uttered found their way into the deepest recesses of the soul, and we went away with renewed determination to live purer and better lives. The words of the pastor seemed to come from his heart and were listened to by an attentive audience. The congregation was above the average and the singing was good. All strangers were invited on the printed program to go up at the conclusion of the service and get acquainted with the pastor, and it was our pleasure to accept the invitation. He had heard of our presiding elder in the Mississippi Conference bearing the same name as himself, but informed us that he was not related to him.

While the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church is not a costly one, nor especially attractive, it is well located and has a live and active membership. Near it is situated the Carnegie Public Library. The Southern Methodist Church has acted wisely in taking steps to erect a new and more imposing building at the national Capitol. We were informed that the lot upon which the new building is to be erected has been purchased, and is situated near the Mt. Vernon Place Church.

Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, regularly attends preaching and Sunday school at the Mt. Vernon Church. I wish that more of our public men would follow his example. I would advise all our Southern Methodists visiting Washington, D. C., who remain in the city on the Sabbath, to attend services at the Mount Vernon Church. There they will meet many Southerners, and will receive a hearty welcome.

IN MEMORY OF REV. ROBERT J. HARP.

A Tribute of Respect and Honor.

Possibly when a good man dies we are prone to exaggerate his virtues or unduly praise the elements of his character. But when one is called to his eternal reward who, through eighty and five years of a full, varied and useful life, has faithfully served as a minister, friend and father, not counting boyhood and youth, our best words spoken and our sincerest language written seem poor and insignificant. So we offer this brief tribute to the life and memory of Robert J. Harp, who enriched the world in the things that are noblest and best, and left as a heritage to his children and his Church a lasting example of enduring patience and sublime faith. For with his passing into the everlasting rest of the saints of God, the Louisiana Conference has lost one of its choicest spirits and is bereft of one of its most faithful ministers. Long and arduous was his pilgrim journey, yet we feel confident that with his scrip more than filled with the rich experiences and sometimes stern discipline of the way, and leaning upon a staff that knows no weakening, his feet crossed the threshold of the eternal city, with no stumbling in his footfall.

His was a genial, kindly nature. The outer man, worn and rugged by toil and honest endeavor, castled a knightly soul. There was a majesty and simplicity about him that went with him through all the walks of life, an unflinching charity that found expression in word and conduct, a self-forgetfulness that silently gloried in service and in sacrifice—the spirit of Him who came not to be ministered unto but to minister. We may rest assured that in death, as in life, he made a good confession. Quietly, serenely, calmly, even as some mighty vessel designed and built for wind and waves pursues its purposeful course, despite the stress of conflicting elements, and reaches its destined haven, so did this servant of God fulfill his appointed task through the years until his release came.

In pestilence and war, in times that tried men's souls and broke the hearts of women, in the betrayal of trust on the part of some in whom he had reliance, in the loss of material goods he had acquired by honest toil and endeavor, still he kept the faith and served his Church and his God to the end. Surely, his was the vision of the man of Horan and the patience of him of Ur. God was good to him in the closing years of an eventful life, for he fell on sleep in the home of a loved daughter with another nearby, no doubt in deepest sorrow, and both in tender ministry.

With his passing disappears the last member of the heroic band of stalwart men who, in the year of 1855, in Opelousas town, founded and incorporated the Louisiana Annual Conference. There was not a man of them that did not make himself known and felt in the pulpit and councils of his Church. In the providence of God, this one lingered longest among us to teach us patience in well-doing and mark the way our fathers trod.

He began his ministry at an early age, for at 18 he came to Louisiana from Tennessee, and was a pioneer preacher for the immigrants who were attracted by the fertile soil and resources of this State. He, assisted by the White Brothers, the two Alexanders, James Ivy and Stephen Davis, Sr., practically planted Methodism in the Tensas and Bayou Macon districts, and the Carroll parishes. For a series of years he was connected with the publishing interests of the Church and served efficiently as agent and editor. A man of indefatigable industry, he was ever busy in some good work. He scorned idleness and evidently counted it a sin. He was ever interested in civic and social affairs, taking part by wise counsel and example. The welfare of the people was a fascinating subject for his active brain and hand, thereby evincing a charity that knew no bounds.

God mercifully ordained that he and his faithful wife should grow aged together. She, a woman of rare culture and artistic training, was his assiduous companion and helper. No doubt her intense interest in the welfare of her family and the Church supplemented his efforts and encouraged his labors. One painting, a creation of her skilled hand, "The Storm," remains indelibly stamped on the tablets of my memory, among the many thousands I have seen and the forms of which I have forgotten. Of such is not the kingdom of modern woman. Some of these may be fairer than our mothers, but not worthier.

In this brief tribute I shall not further attempt to portray the characteristics of this veteran of the Cross. His works and worth do follow him, as radiant glories the setting sun, and the world is better and richer in all that makes for a noble, higher life, because he has toiled and lived. Men can move onward with a surer footing and live on a loftier plane because of such men as Robert J. Harp.

The ranks are thinning below and thickening above. The Christian warrior lives with his shield before him, and when the call comes, dies upon it. No weapon formed against it shall prosper. It is more than Lacedaemonian courage that wins the victory in the life-time struggle. The invisible enemy is often the mightiest to overcome. It is by a faith born of God and nurtured throughout the weary years. The great congregation of the redeemed has another accession and the angels weave anew an amaranthine crown.

So they pass from stage to stage, along the shining course

Of that fair river broadening like the sea.

Old sorrows are forgotten now,
Or but remembered to make sweet the hour
That overpays them.
Fisher, La. S. J. DAVIES.

WHAT HAVE I DONE TO-DAY?

I shall do much in the years to come,
But what have I done to-day?
I will give my gold in a princely sum,
But what did I give to-day?
I shall lift some one's heart, dry some one's tears,
And plant a hope in the place of fear;
I will speak sweet words of loving cheer,
But what did I speak to-day?

I shall be kind to some one in the afterwhile,
But what have I been to-day?
I shall bring some lonely life a smile,
But what have I brought to-day?
I am going to give truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth;
I shall feed some hungering souls of earth,
But whom have I fed to-day?

I shall reap such joys in the bye-and bye,
But what have I sown to-day?
I shall build a mansion in the sky,
But what have I built to-day?
Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now we must do our task:
Yes, this is the thing my soul I ask:
What have I done to-day?

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT TO COUNCIL MEETING AT FORT WORTH, TEXAS, 1914, RENDERED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle.

My visit to the Virginia K. Johnson Rescue Home in Dallas during the Council meeting will never be effaced from my memory. The Domestic Science Teacher there, Mrs. Pearl Kellar, was formerly a member of my Sunday school class in Tupelo, in which she claims to have received the call to definite service. She has been in that Rescue Home for one year, while the housekeeper, Miss Lilly Williams, is another Tupelo woman and a member of my church. Miss Williams has been there for four years. My visit was a surprise to these friends, and quite pleasant in that respect; but what I saw there nearly broke my heart. I only wish I had time to give the history of that home. Suffice it to say that God commissioned "Mother Johnson" to that work and He has most surely commissioned each of those workers there; for only the love of Christ can constrain women to such work, I had always felt that it was much easier to do home work than foreign; but after my visit to that Wesley House, in Ft. Worth, and to the Virginia K. Johnson Home, in Dallas, I am sure that no work requires more of the love of God. Many trials and difficulties beset the paths of our missionaries in both the homeland and upon the foreign field, and I repeat only God can call to and the love of Christ sustain one in such work. The girls in the Virginia K. Johnson Home were in the chapel at service when we arrived, so we were taken right on to the nursery, and what I saw there would have melted a heart of a stone. Twenty-seven innocent babies brought into this world to live under the shadow of a great sin, each in little snow white beds, and as it was time for them to be fed, nearly every one of them was wailing loudly as we entered. I sat down at the door of the nursery completely overcome. Then as we passed on through the building, and I met the 70 girls coming out of the chapel, ranging in ages from 13 to 22 years, I was more overcome. Think of it, thirteen-year-old girls forced to know the pangs and love of motherhood, yes, motherhood mocked into shame! I feel that our gracious Heavenly Father, in his infinite love and mercy for sinful erring humanity, put it into the heart of Mrs. Virginia K. Johnson to provide this refuge for the erring girls of our Southland where they may find a Christian home and training, which the majority, who go there, never before have known. This is the only institution of the kind under the direction of our Woman's Missionary Council, and it shelters girls from all over Southern Methodism. I'm told, too, that eighty-five per cent of the girls, who go out from this institution, afterward lead useful Christian lives. Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, a physician in that home, in her report to the Council meeting, recommended that a Field Secretary be employed to do follow up work with those girls and babies after they leave the home, and an appropriation was promptly made for that purpose. The babies when old enough to leave their mothers are adopted into Christian homes, and after two years of religious training, these poor girls, more often sinned against than sinning, are sent back into the world to fight their own battles.

But now I come to the crowning event of that occasion, which occurred on Tuesday evening at the close of the College Day, namely: The consecration of the missionary and deaconess candidates. No more beautiful or impressive ceremony has it been my privilege to witness. Great crowds had gathered and many had to be turned away. Long before the time for the service this crowd had assembled and for hours a great audience sat in a hush of expectancy. Finally the organ began the solemn processional and the missionary and deaconess candidates, accompanied by the active missionaries and deaconesses as a guard of honor, entered on opposite sides of the Church. Hymn book in hand, they came softly singing: "Lead on, O King Eternal." The deaconesses, for the first time had put on the deaconess bonnet and dress, while the missionaries were dressed in spotless white and carried white carnations. After they were seated upon the platform Miss Gibson impressively led the devotions and then one representative from the missionary candidates told simply and briefly why they offered themselves for the foreign field. Then one of the deaconesses told why they wanted to be deaconesses. Following this came the presentation of the candidates by Miss Bennett, which was followed by the solemn charge given by Bishop Edward D. Mouzon, of Houston, Texas. Following came the questions propounded by the Bishop and the answers of the candidates in clear and distinct tones. Then all the candidates knelt around the chancel in a brief season of silent communion with God, while a holy calm, a quiet impress of the Holy Spirit, brooded over all. Then, tremulously and sweetly, those kneeling young women sang together the consecration hymn, and while they still knelt came the invocation for the Spirit's presence and power upon them. After which they rose and the Bishop taking the right hand of the missionary candidates, one at a time, said: "I commission you to take the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen." Solemnly and distinctly this commission rang out through the stillness that brooded over all. Then taking the deaconess candidates by the right hand, one at a time, he said in solemn tones: "I admit thee to the office of deaconess in the Church of God, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Then in subdued tones the candidates took up the song: "O Jesus, I have promised." Then came the presentation of certificates, and the benediction softly fell; and twenty young women, buoyant with hope, unquestioning faith, boundless enthusiasm, and dauntless courage, stood ready to carry out the gospel call to service, stood with the whole stretch of life before them.

When I consider the operations of God's Holy Spirit in the world to-day, and note how he is calling into line all the forces of the Church for the evangelization of this world, I am filled and thrilled. Through the Holy Spirit he is invading the colleges of the land and placing his hands upon the most gifted and cultured there, and calling them out to do specific work for Him, both in the home land and upon the foreign field; and the result is shown in the great uprising among the student body of the land, known as the Student Volunteer Movement. He is invading the business world and placing his hand upon the most capable and efficient there and calling them out to the consecration of their business-like methods and capabilities to his service and the result is shown in the great Laymen's Movement, the influence of which is being felt to the remotest bounds of the earth to-day. He is invading the young people's organizations of the various Churches and placing his hand upon the brightest and best there and calling them out to do specific work for him. When I learned that Miss Godat, one of the missionaries commissioned at Fort Worth to the foreign field, received the call to service at an Epworth League assembly on our own picturesque Mississippi Gulf coast, it made my heart glow when I recalled the fact that many years ago when a young woman, I helped to inaugurate that assembly on the Gulf coast. I recalled also what the lamented Bishop Galloway said, when the Missionary department was first incorporated in the Epworth League many years ago, namely: "It was never intended that the rich, bounding young life of the church be expended in mere local enterprise, or exhausted in the fruitless effort to find innocent social diversions; broad and definite aims must command its splendid energies; great connectional causes challenge its ardent support." The call for workers is imperative; but equally great is the call for better qualified and better equipped workers, and I desire to impress the young people with this fact that a call to service should mean always a call to preparation for service.

Tupelo, Miss.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S PEACE PROJECT ATTACKED.

In the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church the retiring moderator, Dr. Russell, makes the following stringent criticism of the methods of Andrew Carnegie in his peace program: "The second futile movement of our age is the effort for universal peace among the nations without regard to the prophetic program of Him who is the Prince of Peace. Fittingly enough it has its endowment support from one who, though wide in his vision and broad in his philanthropies, has never bowed head or heart to the sovereignty of Jesus. Strangely enough the propaganda includes ministers and leaders from every denomination and sect—Roman Catholic, Protestant, Jew and Unitarian—and under the name which would assume that these together constitute a universal Church. Surely 'he that sitteth in the heavens will laugh.' 'The Lord will have them in derision.' God has his program, and in it he has said: 'I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will tell of the decree: Jehovah said unto me thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. The nations shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.' But the central halls of administration will not be in the marble palace of The Hague, but in God's temple at Jerusalem."—Methodist Recorder.

BEER DRINKING HARMFUL.

Col. L. M. Maus, of the Medical Corps of the United States Army, in discussing the drinking of beer, says:

"Many who denounce ardent spirits consider beer a wholesome and sustaining food, but as a matter of fact beer-drinkers are especially liable to fatty and enlarged heart, diseases of the liver and kidneys, complicated with dropsy, arteriosclerosis, gout, and rheumatism. As sequelae of beer drinking, we find an infected and loaded circulation, embarrassed respiration, functional perversion, hepatic and renal congestion and a diminished vitality which invites disease and death. The mortality of brewers between the ages of fifty and sixty is about three times as great as that of individuals who follow the ordinary occupations of life.

"Post-mortems disclose, as a result of the continued use of beer, a dilated stomach, fatty heart, diseased arteries, liver and kidneys, a yellow adipose deposit under the skin, and general injury to the tissues throughout the system. The immunity or resisting powers of the white corpuscles and plasma of the blood is greatly destroyed in beer drinkers, which leaves the individual unprotected against infectious diseases and the poisonous toxins they generate.

"Graphically speaking, the constitution of the chronic beer drinker is 'shot to pieces' at forty or fifty years of age, and his system may be aptly compared to the condition of a wooden structure in the Philippines which has been honey-combed by white ants."

*A QUESTION*

Under the above caption an article appeared in the Advocate of July 12, from Rev. J. A. Alford of Union, La., and judging from the tone of his statement he has thought himself into the same attitude which for sometime I have held toward the interdenominational Sunday school work. True, what he has to say is put in the form of a question, but one can easily read between the lines.

I wrote an article for the Advocate last year on this very question but since it was not published, I presume it was in the opinion of the Editor, too radical.

Brother Alford says: "Not long since the report was made that more than 15 per cent of subscriptions to the interdenominational Sunday school work of Louisiana is made by the representatives of our Church." I think that is about the status of the matter in South Mississippi, if not over the entire State. For quite awhile the Baptists assisted largely in the support of this interdenominational work; but they are now withdrawing from it as rapidly as possible and establishing County Sunday School Conventions of their own, leaving the "bag" for the Methodists to hold. Shall it be said by any one that they are not right in cultivating their own field? I, for one, have nothing for them but words of commendation in the steps they are taking in this direction, and wish from my heart that the Methodist people could be counted on to line up as loyally for the institutions of our great Church.

Again, Brother Alford says: "Our Conference Sunday School Secretary was discontinued on account of the lack of funds to support him." This is precisely the thing that came very nearly happening with the Sunday school field agent of the Mississippi Conference—the Sunday School Board had decided to call him off because of a lack of money to support him. Fortunately, however, a generous layman came to the rescue of the board, and we still have in the field one of the most active and competent men in our Church.

So much for the present, but what of the future? As I see it, the recall of our field agent is inevitable—it is only a question of a short time—if we do not withdraw from this interdenominational work, and appeal earnestly to our people to give of their money to the Sunday school work of their own Church; and I feel sure that such an appeal would find a ready response among our people if presented in the right way. One man to whom the needs of the Sunday School Board was presented replied: "I have given all I can give this year (to interdenominational work)." As much as to say, "Had the Sunday school field agency of my own Church been presented to me in time, I would have willingly put into the hands of the board the money I have given in another direction."

But who is to present this matter and make this appeal? Certainly not the field agent. Where is the pastor who would want to collect his own salary? Who, then? I answer the president of the Sunday School Board is the logical man to do it. But if he will not, or can not, then let the board appoint one of its members whose duty it shall be to bring this matter to the consideration of our leading laymen—especially those who have been contributing liberally to the interdenominational work. As to the matter of little five-cent assessments, we have played at this great work too long—let's get down to business. The Church is sick of these assessments, and these puny five-cent assessments do not appeal to business men. Men who are men want to "tackle" a big proposition, and when our intelligent laymen grasp the bigness of our Sunday school work, there is going to be a response that will make our Sunday School Boards "sit up and take notice."

In answer to Brother Alford's question, I would say that we must withdraw from the interdenominational work and turn to the work of our own Church, and I rejoice that already signs in this direction are appearing in the sky. A resolution to this effect was recently passed at a District Conference in North Mississippi, and a similar resolution was introduced at the Jackson District Conference by this writer and others. One pastor, in speaking of that particular resolution, said: "We must continue our support of the interdenominational work because it is a great world movement." The questions of suffrage for women and Socialism are also great world movements, but is this fact a legitimate reason why our Church should support either or both? The truth is the Methodist Church has already been made the "kiss-tail" of too many so-called world movements. Too many of us have preached liberality to our people till our liberality has come to seed—it has become indiscriminate. We have too long dissipated our energies, and must now inaugurate a systematic plan of concentration in the cultivation of our own fields which are already white unto the harvest. Nay, more, going to waste because we allow ourselves to be dragged in different directions at the heels of so many so-called world movements.

The time is now at hand when we must withdraw our support from the interdenominational work and devote our time and energies and give our money to the maintenance of our own Sunday school work or else go out of business and ask the men connected with the interdenominational conventions to take over our Sunday schools. The only solution of this whole question is found in the words of Brother Alford: "It occurs to me that the real and only logical thing for us to do is to turn our efforts into the channels of our own Church where the efforts and means can be better conserved, and directed to greater ends."

There is no necessity for us to tie on to "world movements," but with Brother Alford, I "believe there is room for any amount of service, and the exercise of the best gifts in the old Southern Methodist Church." JOHN W. RAMSEY.

Mendenhall, Miss.

RIGHTING A WRONG.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson.

The poet sang, "Whatever is, is right." I don't believe it.

It is not right that three-fifths of the income of the Board of Missions should be paid by about one-tenth of the Church membership.

It is not right that only two-fifths of this income should be subject to the Board's unrestricted and unconditional use for its necessities.

It is not right that the base-line of missionary support should be weak and uncertain.

It is not right for the rank and file of Southern Methodists to pay less than their grandfathers did for the evangelization of the world.

It is not right that the responsibility rest on a few missionaries who give their lives and on a few men and women who give their money in some adequate fashion, while nine-tenths of our people complacently give on an average a postage stamp a month.

It is not right that the splendid increase in income be limited to one-tenth of the people, while the rest stand still or go backward.

Who questions this verdict? Let him who doubts examine the sad evidence.

There is one way to begin to set this wrong right. Pay in full the assessment for 1914. This is our greatest financial need. It strikes at our greatest financial embarrassment. Failure here is fatal.

We are well into the last half of the calendar year, and nearing the end of the year in some Conferences. The outlook is none too encouraging. We must bestir ourselves. Let us sound out the watchword, "Full Collections."

If you are interested in putting your Conference, district, circuit or church in the full collections column write the Board of Missions for plans and appliances.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: The importance of prompt remittances of missionary money can hardly be overestimated. It is not enough that collections be taken. The only money that benefits the Board and the missions is that in the hands of the Treasurer. It is a fact as well established as it is sad that in many cases missionary money lies idle in church or Sunday school treasuries while the cause suffers. In many cases the amounts are small, but brought together they would mean much.

The interest account of the Board growing out of these delayed remittances would support two married missionaries at least.

The Board sustains living men and women in several countries. They must be cared for. They cannot wait on tardy church treasurers. This necessitates borrowing and interest.

It is the purpose of this letter to urge you to see that prompt collections and remittances are made by your treasurer.

It appears that there was a falling off in income from assessment the first six months of 1914. This we must remedy. Will you not help? Collect as fast as you can and send in at once, even though the amount be small.

Awaiting an early reply, I am, sincerely,

M. T. BYNUM, Treasurer.

Corinth, Miss.

THE SOUTHERN BIBLE CONFERENCE.

The Southern Bible Conference, to open at Lake Junaluska, N. C., on August 16, will be an event in Southern Methodism. We hope to make it the beginning of truly great things in the theological and thought life of our ministry. The school will cover a period of ten days, from August 16 to 26. Eminent and skillful workers and teachers will be on the program and in the schools. It is sufficient only to mention their names, such as Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Dr. Robertson of the Moody School, Bishop E. E. Hoss, Dr. Tillett of Vanderbilt University, Dr. Geo. R. Stuart, Dr. W. N. Ainsworth of Georgia, Rev. "Bob" Jones, and others. The work will include specialties in Greek New Testament text interpretation, exegeses, Bible literature methods, evangelism, etc. The living rates at Junaluska are low and the school expenses are only a small registration fee. It is a rare opportunity for our young preachers.

LOST.

What? Lost your temper, did you say?
Well, dear, I wouldn't mind it;
It isn't such a dreadful loss—
Pray, do not try to find it.

'Twas not the gentlest, sweetest one,
As all can well remember
Who have endured its every whim
From New Year's till December.

It drove the dimples all away,
And wrinkled up your forehead,
And changed a pretty, smiling face
To one—well, simply horrid.

It put to flight the cheery words.
The laughter and the singing;
And clouds upon a shining sky
It would persist in bringing.

And it is gone! Then do, my dear,
Make it your best endeavor
To quickly find a better one,
And lose it—never, never!

—Harper's Young People.

MANY JACKS.

Jack is not only a boy's name. It is applied to a flower—"Jack in the pulpit." "Jack Frost" means the cold, biting winds, and a "jack" is a machine to lift heavy weights. Then there are a "boot jack" for removing boots from the feet; a "smoke jack" to turn a spit; a "jackanapes," applied to a saucy person; "Jack Tar," a common sailor, and a "jacket," a small coat. Jackstay is a rail used on a boat to which to fasten sails, jackstone is a pebble piece used in the game of that name, jackstraw is a scarecrow, and jackwood is wood of the jack used in cabinet work.—Philadelphia Ledger.

MIGNONETTE.

By Helen Elizabeth Coolidge.

"I wish I were a flower, mamma. Flowers don't have freckles or turned up noses, and are always so pretty that everybody loves them. I don't like my face, and I think Millicent is an awfully ugly name. The boys ask me if I am a mill or a cent, and say I'll be married for my money. I hate to have fun poked at me! And here two big tears found their way over the freckled cheeks.

"I know a lovely flower-name you could earn," said her mother, "only it will perhaps take all Summer for it to bloom, and it will have to be watered well and kept free from weeds. It begins with 'M,' just as Millicent does; and, as you were named for my mother, you may try harder if I tell you it was her pet name when she was a little girl."

"What was it, mamma? I will really, truly try to earn it, if you'll tell me how."

"Mignonette," answered mamma, "and it means 'little darling.' How can you earn it? Why, as grandma did—by not thinking about her looks or whether she was having a good time, but by being so full of love and thoughtfulness for other people that every one around her felt the sweetness of her little acts of kindness and called her very smile 'sunshine.'"

"I wonder if Millicent ever did learn!" exclaimed Alice, as dear Miss Lois paused and looked into the eager faces of her Sunday school class; and I am sure each of them was as anxious as Alice to hear the end of the story, so there was a look of disappointment when Miss Lois very solemnly but very gently said:

"I want my girls to try this Summer to live so that each may deserve a flower-name, and when our vacations are over and we meet here in October, I hope I shall call you my Bouquet, when I will tell you, if you've not already guessed it, the true answer to my tale. You must, like Millicent, be careful not to let the weeds of laziness and thoughtlessness grow, and a little prayer each night and morning will bring the dew of God's blessing to keep your lives fresh and sweet.

If you cannot be a beautiful flower, you can surely be a sweet one, and how I shall love to welcome my little girls each carrying the fragrant memory of some acts of kindness."

A LITTLE TALE OF TWO BROTHERS.

The following story was found in a magazine, yellow with age, which was published in California, in the year 1860, in the month of July. The periodical was a copy of Hutching's California Magazine, and the fact that such a magazine ever flourished is all but forgotten. Here is the tale repeated word for word:

"In helping others we also help ourselves. A beautiful story is told of two brothers traveling in Lapland, which illustrates this truth more than whole volumes of aphorisms.

"It was a bitter, freezing day, and they were traveling in a sledge, wrapped in furs from head to foot, but notwithstanding this they were almost frozen in the fearful cold. By the wayside they discovered a poor traveler benumbed and perishing in the snow. 'Let us stop and help him,' said one of the brothers, 'we may save his life.' 'Yes, and lose our own,' replied the other. 'Are we not ourselves freezing in the cold? None but a fool would think of stopping on such a day as this! I would not throw off my cloak of fur to save a hundred travelers!' 'I am freezing as well as you,' said his brother, 'but I cannot see this stranger perish, I must go to help him.'

"He was as good as his word. He went to his relief, chafed his temples and gave him wine from his bottle to drink. The effort that he made brought warmth to his own limbs, and he took the traveler on his back and bore him to the sledge. 'Brother,' he said, 'Look! I have saved this stranger's life, and also I verily believe, my own. I am quite warm from the effort I have made.'

"But his brother did not answer. He was sitting upright in his furs on the sledge, cold and dead."—Christian Observer.

AN ACCIDENTAL DISCOVERY.

Blotting paper was discovered purely by accident. Some ordinary paper was being made one day at a mill in Berkshire, England, when a careless woman forgot to put in the sizing material. The whole of the paper made was regarded as useless. The proprietor of the mill desired to write a note shortly afterwards and he took a piece of this waste paper, thinking it was good enough for the purpose. To his intense annoyance the ink spread all over the paper. Suddenly there flashed over his mind the thought that this paper would do instead of sand for drying ink, and he at once advertised his waste paper as "blotting."

There was such a big demand that the mill ceased to make ordinary paper, and was soon occupied in making blotting paper only, the use of which soon spread to all countries.—Apples of Gold.

FACTS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT OUR FOREIGN WORK.

From the Missionary Voice.

1. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is undertaking to give the gospel to forty millions of people in China, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba and Africa.

2. In the division of the mission fields among the several denominations this responsibility has been assigned to us. Our laymen, gathered a thousand strong in Chattanooga in 1903, and two thousand strong at Dallas in 1910, recognized and accepted this as our share.

3. To do this work adequately and promptly we should have on the field perhaps 1600 missionaries—nearly five times as many as now. This would be 1 to each 25,000 of the people to be reached.

4. At present the missionary force numbers 258 (with 96 wives of missionaries in addition). This makes each missionary responsible for 155,000 souls. In the United States there is 1 preacher to each 546.

5. Two million Southern Methodists give to foreign missions through all channels annually less than $900,000. This is only 46 cents a member—less than a penny a week.

6. The annual assessment of Southern Methodism for this cause averages only 25 cents per member—about 2 cents a month—for the salvation of the world.

7. If no church paid more than the assessment, it would be necessary to recall more than one-fourth of our missionaries and discontinue a large proportion of our work.

8. The small sum contributed for foreign missions must provide in mission lands for all branches of religious and philanthropic work conducted at home by the churches, connectional boards, Christian schools and colleges, hospitals, orphanages, etc.

9. Our obligation abroad is five times as great as at home in point of number and a thousand times as great in point of need; yet we invest in Church work at home 14 times as much money and 20 times as many men as we send abroad. Our Savior said: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

10. Nine physicians and 3 trained nurses compose our entire medical force in our seven great mission fields. This is one medical missionary to each 3,300,000 people. In the same ratio Texas would have only one physician and nurse, and the entire United States less than 30.

11. In per capita gifts to missions we stand next to the bottom among the great denominations of the United States.

12. At our present rate of interest and giving it takes 7000 Southern Methodists to send out and maintain 1 missionary. The obligation rests upon every Christian to go or send. It is a sad commentary on our interest that we not only do not go ourselves, but that it takes 7000 of us together to send a representative.

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

In these modern days, with distance almost annihilated, the home minus a telephone is figuratively cut off and isolated.

Household duties, social requirements, pleasure and entertainment, sickness and business are all more or less dependent upon the telephone.

Lonesome moments may be turned into pleasant conversation with friends and relatives in the next block or the adjoining State.

Marketing and shopping may be done without effort from one's own home.

Editorial

"He liveth long who liveth well!
All else is being flung away;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day."

Faith ought to grow stronger as the Christian life progresses, because the more experience we have in dealing with God the more manifest it is that he can be trustfully relied upon. With unlimited knowledge, all power, and infinite goodness and mercy, never will He fail us.

It was when Jesus walked with the disciples on their way to Emmaus that their hearts burned within them. So to-day the persons whose hearts are on fire with love and zeal are those who keep company with our risen and living Lord. And it is the burning, glowing heart that makes the shining life.

The world has an entrance gate—birth, and an exit gate—death. Through these two gateways the millions of mankind are ever streaming; all who enter by the one must pass out by the other. When you are borne through the latter, as you may be at any time, whither will you go? To a happy home in heaven, or to become a dweller in the land of "outer darkness?" With the tomb certainly ahead, happy is he who can read his title clear to a mansion in the skies!

We frequently hear Christian workers pray for power, and undoubtedly it is what many persons in the Master's service lack and need. Power is a compound thing: it is made up of both human and divine elements. The former may be acquired by an intelligent direction of our own efforts; the latter are the gifts of God, and are bestowed not in response to mere superficial prayers, but when self is crucified and one lives for Christ alone. Too much ego is the explanation of the weakness and inefficiency of many who hold responsible places in the Church.

There is such a thing as the lure of the far-away. The door of opportunity seems to shine and beckon in the distance, while our eyes are holden and we ignore others that are near at hand. Southern Methodists are now having much to say concerning our newly-enterprised mission to Africa, which is proper; but what about the moral and religious condition of the thousands of Negroes in the States in which we live? It was for the neglect of Lazarus at his gate, and not for failing to care for those in far removed places, that Dives was sent to the awful abode of the lost. The proximity of a people to destitution and suffering heightens their obligation to do what they can to relieve it. The vessel closest to a sinking ship is rightly expected to do most toward rescuing those struggling in the angry waves.

THE GREAT EUROPEAN WAR.

What promises to be the greatest war in the history of mankind has been begun in Europe, and the world is awaiting with hated breath the clash of the mighty armies now in motion. The outbreak of this conflict seemed to be quite sudden; but in reality the storm had been gathering for years. The vast amount of talk that we have been hearing about peace being assured and the influence of the Arbitration Court at the Hague has in reality little to justify it. Only on the surface have things been calm and harmonious; underneath, the seething forces of discord and disruption have been steadily at work. Peace among the nations can never be secured by mere artificial methods. Gold cannot purchase it, and men of Mr. Carnegie's type cannot accomplish much toward its promotion. Capital has nearly always been against war, but in all ages it has been impotent to suppress it. Not until we have a reign of justice and righteousness will we have a reign of peace. And the former can come only when human nature has been regenerated by the power of God working through human instrumentalities.

What we may expect within the next few weeks, no finite mind can foretell. With Germany and Austria on one side, and Russia, France, Great Britain and the Balkan States on the other, the most titanic struggle of all time seems to be impending. The first great battle will likely be fought in the neighborhood of Namur, in Belgium, not far away from the field of Waterloo where the star of the first Napoleon went down to rise no more. Across that section of country the Germans are marching, having set their faces toward Paris. In front of them the Belgians are rising up and presenting a stubborn resistance; the French are hurrying forward to intercept them, and the English, having landed at Calais and Ostend, are hastening to join their allies and assist in beating back the invaders. How many other nations will become involved before the struggle is over, it is now impossible to predict. It seems certain, however, that billions of money will be wasted, that hundreds of thousands of men are destined to die, and that the whole world will be shaken and suffer vast and irreparable losses.

Those who are responsible for this war are guilty of a crime, the enormity of which staggers human conception. They will probably become million-fold murderers, wholesale producers of widows and orphans, and breeders of innumerable hatreds that will never die. And even if they succeed in acquiring new territory, the title to it will rest upon force and plunder and can never be rightfully theirs.

As Christians, let us pray that the conflict may yet in some providential way be restricted in time and area and that the bloodshed and suffering may be far less than now seems possible. Such events accentuate as nothing else could the tremendous truth that Christ is the supreme need of men everywhere. The prevalence of his Spirit in human bosoms is the only thing that can rid them of the passions that stir up strife and weld them into a universal brotherhood that shall extend around the globe.

A MISSIONARY SAW MILL.

From the Nashville Banner of July 11, we take the following:

"The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, South, has completed arrangements and given orders for the shipping of a well-equipped saw mill to the mission station at Luebo, in the Belgian Congo. This mill will be shipped from New York within a short time, and it is expected that within three months after shipment it will be in full operation. The outfit will be met at Stanley Pool by the Presbyterian Mission boat, Lapsley, upon which it will be conveyed to its destination. It is expected that this plant will more than meet its cost in furnishing materials for the construction of the training school and hospital buildings for the Mission."

Such missionary enterprise as this must challenge admiration. Even the clang and clash of machinery devoted to such a purpose will eloquently proclaim the love of Christ. And what an influence this plant is calculated to exert upon the benighted Africans! Missionaries have in many ways been the pioneers of progress as well as the heralds of salvation to the uncivilized peoples of the globe, and this undertaking shows that their resourcefulness is yet by no means exhausted. And they are right in seeking to harness every possible agency and make it help in the mighty task of uplifting fallen humanity.

As will be noted, these Presbyterian workers are the ones who have been so kind to Bishop Lambuth and his helpers in assisting them to establish our African Mission. May the Lord bless their labors and crown them with a large measure of success!

A NOTED TRIAL.

The trial of Mme. Caillaux, the third wife of Joseph Caillaux, the late Minister of Finance of the French republic and once Premier of that nation, for killing Gaston Calmette, editor of The Figaro, on the 16th of last March, resulted in her acquittal. The testimony developed "a pretty kettle of fish," and was a sad commentary upon the present status of society in France. And could anything be more amusing than the proceedings of a French court? The witnesses were allowed to confront each other, engage in colloquies, dramatically address the spectators, and do numerous other unnecessary things. For instance, M. Caillaux when giving his testimony was permitted to pause, stride gallantly across the floor, kiss the hand of his prisoner wife, and then resume his seat in the witness chair and go on with his narrative. We imagine that a French court-room is often about as exciting a place as is a cotton or stock exchange in our American cities when the prices of our staple commodities are rapidly fluctuating. When it comes to being mercurial and superficially and formally polite, the French people easily lead the world, but they seem very deficient in the composure and self-control necessary to make men and women great in the highest sense. Things done in a hurry are seldom as well done as they might be.

(Since the above was written, the press dispatches state that two duels may grow out of this noted trial: one between two of the judges, and the other between M. Caillaux, the husband of the defendant, and one of the lawyers for the prosecution. In France, a majority of the jurors can convict, and if the vote is equally divided it is accepted as an acquittal. The jurors are not confined and are at liberty to go where they please in the intervals between the sessions of the court. It is stated that the jurors while trying this noted case all received letters threatening them with death if they acquitted Mme. Caillaux, as well as others appealing to them to render a decision in her favor. Our judicial system lacks much of being above criticism in its workings, but we need only to look at that of our Sister Republic across the seas to see that it might be vastly worse.)

MAY BE BROUGHT BACK INTO USE.

The following dispatch concerning the work of the Georgia Legislature was sent out a few days since: "The Committee on Education reported favorably on a joint resolution by the House and Senate providing for the introduction of Webster's Blue-back Speller in the curriculum of the public schools."

Doubtless this item will be noted with interest by many of our older and middle-aged readers. This historic little book played a large part in the education of the youth of the Nation until within the last two or three decades, and they could spell in those days, which is more than many of the graduates of our high schools and colleges can do now. If Webster's Blue-back Speller can improve our present educational system at this very weak point, by all means let it resume its place in our courses of study. And let no one trump up the charge that this would be going backward. True progress is often made by returning to where one departed from the right path and taking it up again.

THE WOMAN'S EDITION OF THE ADVOCATE

The Woman's Edition of the Advocate last week was, we think, highly creditable. We can say this without the slightest impropriety, as we were out of the city, and had no part in the making of it. The matter for that issue was collected and arranged by Mrs. R. F. Harrell, of Centreville, Miss., who had the capable assistance of Rev. C. A. Battle, pastor of the Felicity Street M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans. Our woman missionary workers in Louisiana and Mississippi manifestly have many among their number who wield facile pens, and who know how to plead for the great cause which lies so heavily on their hearts. May the Lord prosper the work of their hands and give them still greater success in the days to come!

We were sorry not to have had a part in the issuance of that number of the Advocate, but at that particular time we had our only opportunity to get away from our desk for a few days this summer, and knowing that the work was in thoroughly competent hands, we felt that we were quite justifiable in availing ourselves of it. We yield to none when it comes to feeling a deep and abiding interest in the great service which the women of Southern Methodism are rendering toward the extension of the Master's kingdom. Most nobly have they wrought, and not this side of eternity can the thrilling story of their achievements be set forth in its full significance.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. V. D. Skipper recently assisted Rev. E. C. Grice in a very successful meeting at Bastrop, La.

Mr. J. B. Streater, of Black Hawk, Miss., who finds it necessary to go North every year at this season in order to escape the hay fever, left for Chicago and other points in the Northwest last Tuesday.

Rev. W. R. Hendrix, D. D., pastor of the Wesley Memorial Church of Atlanta, Ga., while on a visit to his cousin, Rev. A. Inman Townsley, at Rayville, La., occupied the pulpit of our Church at that place on July 28. His sermon is reported to have been one of the most spiritual and helpful ever heard in that town. While on his annual vacation Dr. Hendrix is conducting a revival meeting at Poolville, Texas.

Rev. M. L. White, of Flora, Miss., began a meeting at Bentonla, Miss., last Sunday. He is being assisted by Rev. Rolfe Hunt.

Dr. John T. Sawyer, of New Orleans, preached to an attentive congregation at the Union Protestant Church in Mandeville, La., last Sunday evening. It scarcely needs to be said that he gave his auditors a strong and helpful message.

Rev. J. H. Hoffpaur, of Indian Bayou, La., in a business note to our office, adds the following statement: "The work is moving along encouragingly in this charge. We have had 50 accessions on profession of faith since the last Annual Conference."

Writing from Tyro, Miss., on August 8, Rev. T. E. Gregory says: "We have just closed a very helpful meeting at Mount Vernon. Brother Dorman, our presiding elder, did the preaching. There were a number of accessions to the Church."

Rev. J. I. Hoffpaur, the stirring presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, says: "The preachers in the district are faithful and the work is in good shape." As a leader of the forces of Zion, Brother Hoffpaur is making an excellent record.

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. L. Sell, Brooklyn, Miss., 3; Rev. J. T. Lewis, Clarksdale, Miss., 6; Rev. Charles E. Downer, Foxworth, Miss., 6.

Rev. C. C. Clark, of Mantachie, Miss., writes: "The meeting here was a great success, the Church especially being spiritually quickened and strengthened. Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, did the preaching and we certainly enjoyed his good sermons. We hope to have him with us again."

Rev. A. H. Williams, our pastor at Shannon, Miss., held a series of revival services at that place last week in which he had the able assistance of Dr. H. G. Henderson, of Lexington, Miss. We are not informed as to the results of the evangelistic efforts of these brethren at this writing.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of the Louisiana Orphanage, assisted in a meeting at Oak Ridge, La., last week, and it is stated that much good was accomplished. This is one of the appointments on the Mer Rouge charge, where we are informed, Rev. L. C. Wilson, the faithful pastor, is in high favor.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Heidelberg, of Shubuta, Miss., left home some weeks ago for a European tour. We are publishing in this week's issue of the Advocate a very interesting account of a visit to Mt. Vernon Church, Washington, D. C., which Brother Heidelberg was kind enough to send us after he had set sail.

From the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of July 31, we take the following: "Dr. Briscoe Carter, one of the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference, called to see us last week. We were sorry to miss his visit. Anxious to keep up with the new university movement, he left his subscription to the Wesleyan Advocate."

In a personal note to the Editor, Rev. T. W. Adams, the able and faithful presiding elder of the Port Gibson (Miss.) District, says: "The work in this territory is moving along nicely. The pastors are all keeping well and busy. The cotton prospect is better in this section than at any time since the appearance of the boll weevil several years ago."

We acknowledge the reception of an invitation to the dedicatory exercises of our Church at Pontotoc, Miss., which will take place next Sunday. The preaching will be done by Bishop E. E. Hoss, which is a guaranty that the occasion will be a memorable one. The pastor of this congregation is the Rev. W. D. Wendell, who is a grandson of Bishop Paine.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, who attended the Educational Conference held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., last week, writes that the occasion was an exceedingly interesting and profitable one. He states that Rev. H. C. Howard, of Alabama, delivered a great address on the need of a better trained ministry and made a profound impression upon all who heard him.

Mrs. A. P. Holt, of Crowley, La., one of the leading missionary workers in this State, referring to the Woman's Missionary Edition of the Advocate which appeared last week, says: "I look for a real uplift to the work and an inspiration to many as a result of this issue. I pray that it may bring success in every way to our paper as well as to the missionary cause."

We have been pleased to receive this week a note from Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss., penned by his own hand. We are happy to know that this worthy veteran's eyesight is now considerably improved. From Brother Bachman's communication, we take the following utterance: "Hurrah for the new university! The glory of the latter house will be greater than that of the former."

A correspondent reports a very fine meeting at Sarepta, Miss., which was conducted by the pastor, Rev. George Yeager. He says: "Many persons confessed Christ and I do not think I ever heard so many people lead in public prayer. It rained nearly all the week, but the congregations were good and each service got better. I think that there were about twenty accessions to the Church."

A post card from Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, Miss., written from Deasonville, Miss., on August 5, reads as follows: "We are having here what the pastor, Rev. J. B. King, pronounces the most effective revival conducted at this point during his pastorate. There has been up to date 5 accessions, and the Church has been toned up in a manner that is likely to make the influence of the meeting felt for years to come."

A correspondent says: "President R. E. Bobbitt, of Mansfield College, has been doing some strenuous work in the interest of that institution during the past month, and as a result he has secured a large number of young women for the next session of that excellent school. Our people will patronize our schools if they are made to realize the high-class work that they are doing and are given a little encouragement by our pastors."

Rev. J. D. Simpson, our pastor at Pickens, Miss., writes us that Brother J. F. Wilburn, a leading member of our Church at that place and one of the choice laymen of North Mississippi, has been very ill for several days. When Brother Simpson wrote he was thought to be somewhat better, and we trust that ere this a decided improvement has taken place. Brother Simpson requests our readers to remember this worthy and faithful worker at the throne of grace.

Mr. R. P. Johnson, the superintendent of our Sunday school at Acona, Miss., and one of the leading laymen of the Black Hawk charge, underwent a serious operation at the Baptist Hospital in Memphis some ten days ago. We are pleased to state that he stood the trying ordeal well and that he has since been steadily improving. We trust that the surgical treatment to which he has been forced to submit will result in the perfect restoration of his health.

Rev. E. A. Tucker, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference, but now stationed at the Fountain Avenue Church of Paducah, Ky., is having a pleasant and successful pastorate in his present field. A tremendous struggle is now being waged to abolish the saloons in that city, and Brother Tucker is one of the most active participants in the great fight. It would be a truly extraordinary achievement if the prohibitionists should triumph in this noted Gibraltar of the whiskey traffic.

Mr. W. F. Lagrone, an esteemed layman of West Point, Miss., under date of August 5, wired us as follows: "Brother W. W. Mitchell was operated on for appendicitis last night and is doing well this morning." This dispatch reached our office too late for last week's issue of the Advocate. We greatly regret to know that Brother Mitchell found it necessary to submit to surgical treatment, but are delighted to be assured that he bore up under it so well. We pray that he may have a speedy and complete recovery.

Rev. Charles E. Downer, our pastor at the Buford (Miss.) charge, writes as follows: "We have recently held three very successful meetings. One was at Summer Chapel, which embraced the first Sunday in July. Rev. J. E. Williams assisted us and there were 5 accessions. Rev. H. J. Moore was with us at Hickman, where we had one addition and the Church was spiritually refreshed. The campaign at Sandy Hook embraced the fourth Sunday in July, where we were aided by Rev. John C. Chambers, and 18 persons joined the Church."

Referring to the recent installation of the new pipe organ in our church at Lexington, Miss., and an enlargement of the building, the Advertiser of that city, says: "Dr. H. G. Henderson deserves great credit for the substantial addition lately made to the capacity of the church as well as for the superb new pipe organ, which would do credit to a town ten times the size of Lexington. These improvements have been contemplated for years past, but through the energetic work of the present pastor and his splendid membership, they are now an accomplished fact."

Referring to the recent "Missionary Number" of the Advocate, Dr. W. W. Pinson, our General Missionary Secretary, in a personal note to the Editor, says: "I want to congratulate you and thank you in the name of the Board and Secretaries for your splendid effort in behalf of the cause of missions through the special number of the Advocate. That was indeed a fine stroke and it is bound to tell for good." Most of the credit for the work which Dr. Pinson commends is due Rev. W. W. Drake, the energetic Secretary of the Board of Missions of the Louisiana Conference.

We are in receipt of a prospectus of the Mississippi law school at Jackson, Miss. The faculty of this school is composed of the following gentlemen: Hon. Edward Mayes, LL. D.; Judge Richard F. Reed, of the Mississippi Supreme Court, and Judge A. H. Whitfield, formerly Chief Justice of Mississippi. Lectures are also delivered from time to time by Hon. J. A. P. Campbell, Chief Justice Sidney Smith, Associate Justice Sam C. Cook, Hon. J. A. Orr of Columbus, and Judge Stone Deavors of Laurel, Miss. Since the establishment of this school not a single graduate has failed to stand a satisfactory examination for license to practice law.

We acknowledge the reception, in a most attractive pamphlet, of a beautiful and eloquent tribute to Mrs. Margaret Lee Hawkins Cooper, which was delivered by I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, on July 9. The subject of this address is "The Broken Alabaster Box," and the sentiments that it embodies are the outpourings of a stricken, loving heart. This tender, touching utterance is well worth preserving.

Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, La., writes: "Our meeting with Rev. C. B. Powell at Palmetto was a success. There were several conversions, and nine persons, (three of whom had been Roman Catholics) united with our Church. Brother Powell will assist me in a series of services which will begin at Liberty Chapel, near Williana, La., on August 12. On the 24th of this month I will go to assist Rev. J. W. Faulk, of Sibley, and will be with him in two meetings. My time for evangelistic work is all taken up for this year."

The Editor of the Advocate has been absent from his office for the past ten days, having gone to Central Mississippi to look after his personal business a little and to secure a few days of rest. During his nearly five years connection with the Advocate, he has not taken at any season a longer vacation than this. The fact that he has been away will explain to his correspondents why they have not been answered more promptly and why the various departments of the paper are not as full as usual this week. He returned home last Monday night and expects to remain continuously at his post from now until the meeting of the Annual Conferences.

The National Conference of German Baptists, familiarly known as Dunkards, which was recently held on a farm near Frankfort, Ind., made vigorous warfare on automobiles, declaring that "they have a tendency to make their users high-minded, superior in feeling, and puffed up." The following resolution bearing on the question was adopted: "Whereas we realize the difficulty and unpleasantness of dealing with the automobile spirit, we advise all churches not to allow their members to own or operate an automobile, auto truck, motorcycle, or any other motor vehicle, at least until such time as they shall come to be in general use, or until we get more light on the subject."

In a recent issue of the Advocate, we largely copied a press dispatch concerning the death of Miss Bettie Brown, of Mayhew, Miss., in which it was stated that her obsequies were conducted by Dr. T. C. Wier and Rev. W. W. Woolard. We have learned since that the funeral service was under the direction of Rev. W. J. Burt, the pastor, who was assisted by the brethren mentioned above. We regret that we were led into this error by the dispatch referred to, and that Brother Burt's name was omitted from our notice. It is quite unsafe to rely upon the secular dailies for church news, but we are often forced to do so, as they are the only quick source of information that we have.

In the First Methodist Church of Greenville, Miss., on Thursday, August 6, at 9 o'clock a. m., in the presence of a large company, which overflowed the building, Mr. Audley W. Shands and Miss Eleanor Somerville were united in marriage, Rev. H. S. Spragins impressively officiating. The church was tastefully decorated and the wedding was a beautiful one. The bride, who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Somerville and a granddaughter of the late Col. Nugent of Jackson, is a graduate of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College and is a young lady of many gifts and graces. The groom, who resides at Cleveland, Miss., is a son of Gov. G. D. Shands, and one of the leading lawyers of North Mississippi. After the ceremony was over, Mr. and Mrs. Shands left for Chicago and other Northern points, where they will spend some time, after which they will be at home in Cleveland.

WHAT IS CHRIST TO YOU?

Christ is to each what each has found him. To the soul which has sunk in the mire, he is a Savior; to the intellect which has wrestled with doubt, he is a Guide; to the heart which has sorrowed, he is a Comforter. Each should travel his appointed road and accept and employ the experience which it brings. It is thus that we grow in grace.—David Smith.

Not a Corn

Last week that foot had corns. But the owner read of Blue-jay.

She applied it one night and the pain instantly stopped. In 48 hours all the corns came out. And those corns will never come back.

That's the story folks have told about sixty million corns. And tens of thousands tell it every day.

Some of them used to pare corns, merely to relieve. Some of them tried the old-time treatments until they gave up in disgust.

Now never again will they suffer from corns. When one appears, Blue-jay goes on it.

There is no more pain. The corn is forgotten. In two days they lift it out. No soreness, no pain, no trouble.

That sounds too good to be true. But remember, please, that a million corns a month are ended in this Blue-jay way.

Why don't you let it put an end to yours?

YOUR BOY'S ASSOCIATES.

Who are your boy's associates? From whom does he get his ideas of life, his views of the man's estate, his knowledge of the many things which he does not learn at home? The character of a boy's associates is a most powerful factor for good or evil in the shaping of his life.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, of Fayetteville, Tennessee, has given this question profound study during the 25 years in which he has built up the Morgan School, a training school for boys, of which he is principal. Mr. Morgan has devoted a long career to the training of boys. He knows boy nature. The close personal associations which he has fostered between his boy students and himself and his carefully chosen faculty, his careful attention to the boy's work, his thoughts, his talents and his special needs, are some of the features which have given his school its high standing.

Mr. Morgan is a man of inspiring, wholesome personality and deep Christian character. He has built his school to give the boy thorough mental, physical and spiritual preparation for an honorable, manly life. He is a proper man to train your boy.

A request to Mr. L. I. Mills, Sec. Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tenn., will bring a catalogue and full information of this school.

From the garden of earth a beautiful little bud has been transplanted to bloom in the paradise of God. Little MARGORIE HENDERSON, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Henderson, a bright, beautiful, baby girl, was taken from her sorrowing father and mother on May 8, 1914. Her short life was precious to those who loved her; and her memory will be fondly cherished by her parents and relatives. They will never forget her sweet little ways and laughing eyes. It is not the longest lives that always do the most good, for some times God blesses a whole family through the short life of a little child. And often, if we could only know how many sorrows our loved ones are spared, we would rejoice instead of grieve when they are called home to dwell with Him in whose presence is fullness of joy. May the Lord bless the broken hearted father and mother, and may they look forward to the time when they shall be reunited to their little darling, in the home where God shall wipe away all tears. Their friend, S. R.

One of the best and one of the most beloved members of the North Wesson Church, passed to his reward on May 13, 1914, in his home in Wesson, Miss. Brother J. T. BRIDEWELL, Sr., was born on May 17, 1843, and died on July 13, 1914, aged 71 years 1 month and 27 days. He joined the M. E. Church, South, early in life and proved to be a consistent member of the same till the day of his death. He served his Church as steward, trustee, and Sunday school superintendent. He was superintendent of the Sunday school at North Wesson Church 11 years. No man could have been missed more than Brother Bridewell. He was always at his post of duty. He loved his Church, and its institutions. He loved and prayed for his pastor and was true to all the interests of his Church. He died a triumphant death and went home to God. On the day of his funeral the North Wesson Church was crowded with his friends. At the grave the Masons took charge and buried him with Masonic honors. A good and true man is gone from us. We pray God's blessing upon his family—a wife and several children who are left to mourn their loss.
J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

JAMES GIBSON IRVING was born in Choctaw County, Miss., on March 23, 1847, and died of that dread malady, Bright's disease, on July 17, 1914. When 12 years of age he was genuinely converted and joined the Methodist Church, South. Loyalty to its principles and ordinances, and devotion to his Savior made him a consecrated man of God. He was left without a father's care at the tender age of 6, and as a dutiful son to his widowed mother, soon began to learn the serious realities of life. For 40 years he was a faithful steward in his beloved Church, and for 25 years he served as Sunday school superintendent. His home was his pastor's in almost a literal sense; its sweet Christian hospitality was proverbial. He emphasized the sanctity of the home, both by precept and example, aided by his splendid wife whom he chose as a helpmeet indeed, on November 5, 1876. Seven of their 9 children survive their noble father. May a double portion of his godly spirit characterize the life of each of them. God comfort and sustain the bereaved ones, and gather them an unbroken family into the presence of the King in the "sweet bye and bye."
J. M. WYATT.

JOHN ANDERSON was born in Guttenburg, Sweden, on Jan. 24, 1837, came to the United States in 1868 and settled at Port Gibson, Miss., where he resided till 1890. In that year he moved to Vicksburg, Miss., and there lived until his death on Dec. 19, 1913. In 1873 Brother Anderson was married to Miss Christian Anderson, also a Swede, who followed her lover as faithfully as, and more successfully than, Evangeline followed Gabriel. Brother Anderson belonged to the Lutheran Church during his early life, but when he came to Vicksburg, under the ministry of Rev. N. B. Harmon, he united with our Church and lived a faithful and consecrated life till God called him home. Brother Anderson was the pastor's friend, and during the early years of his church when there was no parsonage he would take the preacher into his home and care for him. He was very devout in his religious life, always in his place at the church services, and so fervent was he in his prayers that frequently he would break away from the English, which was cumbersome to him, and talk to his heavenly Father in his own mother tongue. Truly, a good man is gone, and the Church and community feel very keenly the great loss. To the devoted wife we commend the grace of our Christ which has sustained her all these years and will keep her till that great day when she shall be reunited with the loved one gone before.
L. L. ROBERTS, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Homer, La., at its regular July meeting, passed the following resolutions upon the death of Mrs. Lizzie Gill:

Death having invaded our ranks and robbed us of one of our most faithful and devoted workers in the person of Mrs. Lizzie Gill, therefore, be it Resolved by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Homer, La., That it is with a feeling of sincere and inexpressible sorrow that we chronicle the death of this devoted Christian worker; that in her death the Methodist Church, to which she belonged from early childhood, has been bereft of a member who by her grace and devotion to the cause of righteousness, was a bright and shining example of the Christian life; that her presence at our meetings was always an inspiration to holier living, and that this Society has sustained an irreparable loss.

Resolved, That we extend our condolence to the bereaved husband and family; that a page of our minutes be set aside for the purpose and that these resolutions be inscribed thereon, and that copies be furnished the local press and the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.
Signed: Mrs. J. T. Otts, Mrs. G. B. Hefley, Mrs. J. G. Wafer.

Tidings From the Field

Liverpool, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed our revival at Pine Ridge, on the St. Helena charge. Rev. P. O. Lowrey of Kentwood, La., assisted our pastor, Rev. R. V. Fulton in the meeting. There were 11 accessions to the Church, and the Church was greatly revived. Our services were held in the grove, near the place where our church was burned on May 25, 1913. Large and enthusiastic congregations attended all services. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. We have about 80 children on our roll. There has been much good accomplished.—Lula Lee Bridges.

Collinston, La.

We have just had a great revival at Collinston, La., the first one in several years. We attempted to close the meeting at the end of the first week but the people demanded that we continue for another week. Large and attentive congregations have heard the gospel. More than a score of persons were converted and united with the Church. During the meeting the session of the Morehouse Parish Sunday School Convention was held in the church, proving a help rather than a hindrance to the revival. The pastor, Rev. E. C. Grice, had the people well prepared for the meeting, and the success of it was largely due to his tireless labors.—A. Inman Townsley.

Davis Springs, La.

Our meeting has just closed with 14 additions to the Church. The Lord came in mighty power and was with us in every service. There were so many bright conversions that it was good to be there. Large crowds attended, and good attention was given. The Cargill brothers—Elza and Eugene—were with us at the beginning of the meeting. They did noble work and we were glad to have them with us. We had the old time shouting of the old time religion. It was good to hear the shouts of precious souls ringing out the praises of God upon seeing their friends and loved ones coming home to Jesus. It was a meeting that will be long remembered. I thank God for sending us such men as Brother George Andrews and Brother Sam D. Howard.—Mrs. J. A. Wafer.

Vaughan, Miss.

We have just closed a fine revival at Union Church, on the Vaughan charge, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. P. D. Hardin, P. E. of the Jackson District. The preaching was strong and forceful, and went to the hearts of the people. Much good was done. Strong men were saved, and the Church greatly revived. Brother Hardin is a strong preacher and a great lover of men. He has a way of getting hold of people.

We are now engaged in a meeting at Deasonville. Brother Ramsey of Mendenhall is doing the preaching. His preaching is fine and the congregations are growing from service to service. We are expecting here one of the greatest revivals ever witnessed in New Hope Church. Christians, pray that it might be even so. We will report the results of the meeting later.—J. B. King.

Mashulaville Charge.

Dear Editor: Will you allow me space to tell something of the great meeting just closed at Middleton? The Holy Spirit was with us in the first service, and continued in great power until the last. We had large congregations which continued to increase until the last day when the house would not hold the people. The meeting resulted in the Church being wonderfully revived, 14 accessions to the Church, and the baptizing of 5 children. We feel that much and lasting good was accomplished because we know the spirit of the Lord was there. The preaching (excepting one sermon) was done by the pastor, Rev. J. C. McElroy. At the close of the meeting one of the leading members said publicly that it was the best meeting and we had had the best preaching, that had been at that place for years. Our hearts go up in glad thanksgiving to God for giving us this great victory in the name of Christ. May much success attend you and the dear old Advocate.—Mrs. J. C. McElroy.

Guntown and Baldwin Charge.

Dear Dr. Meek: Brother Mitchell was with me at Pleasant Valley, July 19 and 20. He preached two good sermons, which were much enjoyed by my people. On Monday morning the business session of the third quarterly conference was held. The reports were very good for this time of the year. My revival meeting was protracted from the quarterly conference. Rev. S. A. Brown reached me Monday morning in time to preach at 11 o'clock and he did the preaching for the remainder of the week. We were greatly blessed with a good revival. The meeting closed Saturday with the 11 o'clock service. There were several conversions. Twenty-four joined our Church, nearly all of them on profession of faith. Brother Brown is good help in a meeting. The new church proposition will materialize, we expect to build at once a nice chapel. The major part of the subscription is made. The Advocate shall have a part of my time. May God bless the Editor and management. You are giving us a good paper.—W. C. Carlisle, P. C.

Lewisburg, Miss.

We have just closed a very successful meeting at the Shute school house near Black Hawk. Brother G. W. McLain of Carrollton did the preaching and did it well. He is a man who lives close to God and therefore is able to get hold of folks. The people were ready for the meeting, which was held under a brush arbor, and the attendance was large, the interest good, even from the beginning, and the behavior perfect. I do not believe I ever saw a quieter time under an arbor. Brother McLain is a strong and earnest preacher and is able to show a sinner the awfulness of sin and at the same time cause him to see Christ as his only help, and to make the Christian rejoice over the fact that his "sins are all under the blood." His sermon on Tuesday night from the text, "And now, Lord, what wait I for?" was one of the strongest appeals to the unsaved for an immediate decision for Christ that we have ever heard and over a hundred decided for Christ that night. In all, there were over a hundred and fifty converted and reclaimed. The Lord was there in great power, for it is He, and He alone, who can work such wonders through His people.

We are now with Brother Wilson assisting him in his meeting at Lewisburg. He is in high favor with his people here and the prospects are good for a meeting.—J. G. Johnson.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

We commend the district secretaries who are traveling through their districts without salary and thus rendering efficient service. Their services have been indispensable.

We want to hold a district rally in each presiding elder's district between now and the Annual Conference. The law puts the presiding elders in charge of this movement, but we are ready to co-operate with them and give them any assistance possible. We would be glad to hear from pastors who would like to have one held in their towns.

A Sunday school rally has been recently held at Kilmichael by the pastor, Rev. J. J. Garner. An interesting program had been prepared and was well rendered. Besides the local speakers, Miss Willingham, the district secretary, took part. She presented the work of the organized class. Her speech aroused so much interest that representatives were sent the next Sunday to Eupora to see the practical working of her "Morris Class."

We are glad that some of our pastors are taking the lead in planning these rallies. They are the leaders in this work and the secretaries are ready to give them any assistance that they can. There is a growing demand on the part of the intelligent laymen for this class of work. They are free in expressing themselves by saying they do not want a pastor who can not instruct them in the best Sunday school methods. The pastor who pays no attention to his Sunday school further than to drop in once in awhile five minutes before closing time, is already considered a "back number."

Miss Willingham and the writer arrived at Bowling Green on the West charge, on Saturday, July 26, to spend two days. Our next rally was to have been at the South Union camp meeting, but owing to the burning of the tabernacle, the meeting had to be postponed and we spent four days at Bowling Green, preaching and talking Sunday school methods. Four schools were represented. Brother Crowson, the pastor, is enthusiastic in the work and is letting no grass grow under his feet. Our next point was Liberty Hill on the McCool charge. Only one service was held there, but we were greeted with a packed house. Our next point was Liberty Chapel on the same charge. Here we spent two days. Eight schools were represented. Brother Lauderdale is in high favor with his people and is bringing things to pass. The circuit secretary of his charge, Mr. G. W. Pickle, deserves special mention. He has succeeded in organizing schools in each church where they had none and is now planning to organize an additional one in a neglected community. He is looking after the cradle rolls, home departments and teacher-training classes. Our next place was Center Ridge on the High Point charge. We spent two days here. On Sunday the rain fell almost continuously, but the house was packed. Brother Owen is diligently looking after the work on his charge.

DR. R. C. BETHEA, AND ELSE.

Dear Brother Meek: I have read with interest the tribute paid Dr. R. C. Bethea by Brother Burton in a recent Advocate. I was more or less intimately acquainted with Dr. Bethea for about 35 years. I knew him in Meadville, in Brookhaven, in Summit and elsewhere. I was in his home in Summit when his wife was called to her reward in 1895, and was his pastor at that time. The last time I was with him in a meeting, was at Shiloh Camp Ground in 1906. I well remember how helpful he was in revival work. He was appointed by the pastor on several occasions to conduct the ladies' prayer-meeting in the afternoon because he could do it with greater success than any one else. He seemed to be full of the Holy Ghost all the time.

His aim in life was to do the right thing at the right time. If at any time he discovered he was in error about anything, he would correct the error as soon as possible. I remember one instance. When I went to Summit I found trouble existing between the Baptists and the Methodists. They were hardly on speaking terms. My wife and I went to work to bring about a reconciliation between the Churches. A meeting was in progress at the Baptist Church. We attended the meeting and were treated like brethren. One afternoon I met Dr. Bethea in a sick room. I said to him, "Doctor, come to the meeting, we are having a good time." He replied, "I never expect to put my foot in that Baptist Church again." I said to him "Doctor, you are prejudiced." "No," he said, "I am not." "But you are," I said. We separated and each went to his own home. Supper was about ready when I reached home. While we were eating supper Dr. Bethea came in hurriedly. I invited him to take tea with us. He said, "I came to let you know that after we separated, awhile ago, I found out I was full of prejudice, but did not know it." "All right," said I, "eat supper with us and let us go to Church." We went to Church, the Doctor taking a seat in the rear of the church, while my wife and I went to the front. The next afternoon, when we got to Church, some one was preaching. I said, "That sounds like Dr. Bethea." He had gotten to Church early, and the preacher had asked him to make a talk: he did and told how he had been prejudiced against the Baptist Church and did not realize it. His talk did good. In April of that year, we had an Easter service in our Church. Just before the preaching hour I saw the pastor of the Baptist Church with his congregation coming to our Church. After that we had no trouble with our "much water" brethren. It pays to keep on good terms with all good people when we can. The Baptists have their peculiar ideas about some things. They also have, like Methodists, some fool cranks among them, but most of the intelligent among them are willing to live and let live.

SELMA, LA.

At the last Conference I was assigned to the Selma station, and reached my work on Dec. 28, 1913. The people received us kindly and soon provided comfortable quarters for us. Not many weeks later the "Ladies' Aid" visited us with all kinds of good things to eat, and many times since there have come to us tokens of thoughtfulness and love for which we are very grateful. During the last weeks of July, while my wife was so sick, people could not have been more attentive nor kinder. We did not want for a thing, if it was to be had. They bound us to them with the strong cords of love that can never be severed; and the physician was faithful and untiring in his efforts to bring relief. The memory of his kindness will linger with us through the years to come and he will ever have a warm place in our hearts. The good God always blesses and takes care of us when we love and serve Him in spirit and in truth.

Our little place in the kingdom is a good one. The congregations at each service are good; the spiritual state of the church is much improved, and the Sunday school under the leadership of Brothers Walker and Bryan is doing good work. Our mid-week meeting is an inspiration to us; during the last two months it has grown in attendance until the congregations are almost equal to those of Sunday mornings. The prayers of some of the laymen are uplifting and inspiring and we are glad always that we went up to the house of the Lord. Our financial system is a perfect one. All of the funds for the church are raised by the official board and disbursed by the treasurer monthly. We expect to give a good account of ourselves at Conference.—H. Brooks Perritt.

BOOK NOTICE.

The Articles of Religion, As Amended, Supplemented and Explained. By Rev. W. S. Harrison.

His reason for writing a book with the above title is well set forth by the author, in a few words of his introduction. He says: "All my ministerial life I have felt the want of some succinct, but sufficiently full statement of our creed which I could place in the hands of serious enquirers, with the statement: 'Here are the doctrines which Methodists believe, with some of the reasons why they believe them.'"

Rev. W. S. Harrison is an original thinker, and a forcible writer. His style is concise and clear. He has the art of expressing much in few words.

His book, explaining more fully our Articles of Faith, amending and supplementing them, will doubtless be not only very readable, but also a valuable contribution to our Methodist literature. It will be helpful to older readers and instructive to the young. It is worthy of a place in the library of every young minister.

MANAGING EDITOR OF THE MISSIONARY VOICE

As is generally understood, the last General Conference discontinued the office of Editorial Secretary of the Board of Missions. This action, which was on recommendation of the Committee on Missions, was in the interest of economy and did not mean that the Missionary Voice would be discontinued.

For the position of managing editor of this publication Mr. R. B. Eleazer has been chosen. Mr. Eleazer is a valued member of the secretarial force of the Board of Missions and for five years has been connected with that department of the Church's work. He was for some time assistant to Dr. C. F. Reid, Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and since his connection with that department ceased has been assistant to Dr. Ed. F. Cook, Secretary of the Foreign Department. His ability and worth well qualify him for the new work to which he has been called.—Nashville Advocate.

SOME CHANGES.

Miss Frances B. Moling, who for many years has labored at San Luis Potosi, Mexico, has been transferred to Cuba and appointed principal of the Eliza Bowman School at Cienfuegos. Miss Hattie Carson, who has occupied this position for some years, has been granted a furlough for rest and study.

Miss Rebecca Toland, principal of our school at Matanzas, will also take a furlough this year. Miss Belle Markey will be in charge of the school during Miss Toland's sojourn in the home land.

ONLY SIX THOUSAND AT CHURCH.

Where do you think such a thing occurred? In Christian America? No; in that land of heathen darkness where the light of Christianity is just beginning to penetrate—Africa. Mr. Fred Hope, a missionary in West Africa wrote the following words to his home board: "All morning it rained. For an hour or more it poured as it can do here in the tropics. That, of course, cut down the crowds, for only a little over six thousand people were here." These words were written about a Sunday service held in this section of Africa.

Mr. Hope further writes of the three days of preparation preceding the services, the large number admitted into the church, the number baptized, and the several trips made to out-stations for the same purpose. His words give only a faint idea of how colossal the work is in Africa. Truly, "the fields are white unto the harvest," but the laborers are few.

JAPANESE BUDDHIST MISSIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

San Francisco, temples 1, priests 2; Oakland, temples 3, priests 3; Vacaville, temples 1, priests 1; Sacramento Valley, temples 3, priests 3; Stockton, temples 1, priests 1; Fresno Valley, temples 4, priests 4; Southern California, temples 3, priests 4; Watsonville, temples 1, priests 1; San Jose, temples 2, priests 2; Total, temples 19, priests 21. There are Buddhist missions in Seattle and Portland, and recently missions in Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, were established.—From the Japanese-American Year-book.

MISSIONARY STATISTICS OF JAPAN.

The missionary statistics of Japan show a most healthy condition existing in that field of labor. The number of organized Christian congregations increased from 745 to 857; the number of ordained native preachers, from 702 to 728; and the number of communicants showed a gain of 7000.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The Nashville Advocate of recent date contained a brief item about these vacation schools. In Philadelphia, more than 100 of these Bible schools are open daily, employing 300 teachers, and giving instruction to more than 7000 children. The Jewish children are not being neglected, for 14 of the schools are conducted for them. Who can estimate the vast amount of good being accomplished? Seed sown during these vacation months will spring forth in the future and yield fruitage, some twenty fold, some fifty fold, and some an hundred fold. Would that we had more such schools!

SHADI'S PRAYER.

A missionary lady had living with her a little Hindu orphan named Shadi. She had taught him about Jesus, and one night when he was six years old she said to him: "Now pray a little prayer of your own." And what do you think was Shadi's answer? It was this: "Dear Jesus, make me like what you were when you were six years old."—Pacific Methodist.

PRESIDENT YUAN RECOGNIZES SUPERIORITY OF MISSION SCHOOLS.

The Missionary Review contains the following interesting fact. President Yuan Shih Kai, of China, has recently placed two of his daughters in a mission school in Peking, because he recognizes that the Christian schools are far superior to those under government contract. Nor is the president the only one who is taking this step. The Commissioner of Education in Peking is advising his fellow officials to send their children to mission schools.

COMPARATIVE ESTIMATES.

At the recent Council meeting the Secretary of the Home Base made some interesting comparative estimates. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as a whole, gave 46 cents per capita to missions in 1913. The women in the Foreign Department of the Woman's Missionary Council contributed $2.19 per capita, and those in the Home Department, $1.88 per capita.

MOVING PICTURES FROM MISSION LANDS.

The moving picture as a means of missionary education is quite new, but is soon to be put at the disposal of the public. It would seem that the South is to be a pioneer in this field. Bishop Lambuth, on his recent journey to the heart of Africa, took a moving picture machine and brought back a wonderful collection of interesting views. Bishop Lambuth's pictures were exhibited to great and deeply interested throngs at the recent General Conference in Oklahoma City and are being shown at other points. The Southern Presbyterian Church will soon put on throughout the South a series of moving pictures of mission work in China, Japan, and Korea. Mr. C. A. Rowland, of Athens, Ga., and Mr. J. P. McCallie, of Chattanooga, Tenn., two leading laymen of that Church, are now touring the Orient on a journey of missionary investigation. They have with them an expert moving picture man and are taking characteristic views illustrating the life of these interesting people, and particularly the many phases of missionary activity that are being carried on so successfully. Within a few months it will be possible to set down in the midst of even our small towns and villages graphic sketches of life on the other side of the world, and a man without leaving his home town may gain first-hand knowledge of evangelistic, medical, educational, and industrial missions.

Messrs. Rowland and McCallie have been commissioned by our board to get a series of representative pictures of our own work, which will be widely exhibited throughout the territory of our Church.—Missionary Voice.

THE KAISER AND THE SUNDAY LAWS.

Just what the details of the "Sunday Rest" law of Germany are, we are unable to say, but they manifestly forbid the sale of provisions at least during certain hours on the Sabbath. A Berlin news-item, quoted by the "Lutheran Observer," tells that on a recent Sabbath the Kaiser wanted sausage for his evening meal, and there was none on hand in the palace. A telephone order to the dealer soon started a delivery-boy to the palace with a supply of sasages, bologna, and boiled ham. The boy was stopped by the police and the dealer fined five marks for violating the Sunday-rest law. He appealed from the fine, offering as his defense a paragraph in the law which provided for exceptions when for "public interest" contending that satisfying the expressed desire of the Kaiser constituted a case where the "public interests" were involved. The higher court sustained the first finding, holding that no exception could be made for the Kaiser. "No doubt," says the "Observer," "the Kaiser was behind the appeal and did not allow the man to suffer, but the decision is a notable one, and shows the development of the spirit of democracy in the Kaiser's empire. Kings do not occupy the same position of superiority to the law that they once did. And yet there has always been something of that same spirit in the Fatherland, and the case of Frederick the Great and the mill that still stands in Sans Souci park, at Potsdam, is an evidence of the German reverence for law and its binding power for king and peasant alike."—The Presbyterian.

Editorial

Flattery is often the bait underneath which Satan hides his waiting hook.

There is no limit to the reaching power of prayer, because it enlists the arms of God. If things need to be accomplished that are beyond your strength, this is the agency that you should energetically use.

It is good preaching which reaches and rightly stirs the heart; it is better preaching which finds the conscience and makes it vibrate in response to a sense of obligation; it is the best preaching which lays hold upon the will and leads the individual into the way of higher and better living.

One of the meanest things that a preacher can do is to magnify the little faults of a brother minister to members of a congregation that he may be appointed to serve. Viewed singly, these deficiencies may appear to be very grave, whereas when they are taken along with the many excellent qualities of the man, they are obscured and almost lost sight of. It is not one of the duties of a Methodist itinerant to pick out his successor. That task had better be left to the Bishop and his cabinet.

Tolerance, rightly exercised, is a noble virtue, but it may be practiced to an improper extent. Certainly it should not lead the Christian to look with the least degree of allowance on things that are obviously evil. The easy-going type of religion that is all gentleness and which never stands up resolutely for the truth and right is not after the Scriptural pattern. There was a martial note in the Christianity of Christ and the apostles. The world is ever ready to applaud the professed disciple of Jesus who goes through life flying a flag of truce; but the important question is, what will the Master say when he stands before him in the judgment? With the fierce light of that awful day about to burst upon him, it was not the exultation of St. Paul that he had antagonized nothing, but that he had "fought a good fight."

If any one thinks that the Psalmist overdrew the picture when in describing the wicked man he said, "God is not in all his thoughts," let him observe the conduct and listen to the conversation of some of the worldly people of this day. They undeniably talk and act as if they were wholly without any conception of the existence of the Supreme Being and their accountability to him. Truly, sin must be an awful form of insanity, thus to blind human beings to this most tremendous and outstanding truth in the universe. Does not the Master suggest such to be the case in the Parable of the Prodigal Son, when he represents the profligate young man as having come to himself? Dr. Adam Clarke, furthermore, advances the view that this idea is embodied in the Greek word for repent, "metanoite," which is related to the verb, "metaneo," which he says is possibly derived from the two words "meta," after, and "anoia," madness.

A NOTABLE ADDRESS.

One of the most striking and luminous utterances that has come under our eye in many a day was the fraternal message delivered to the recent British Wesleyan Conference by the Rev. James R. Day, D.D., Chancellor of Syracuse University (New York), who spoke as the official representative of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It called to mind the brilliant deliverances made to the same historic body a number of years ago by those two noted princes of the public platform, Bishop Charles B. Gaiaway and Bishop C. H. Fowler, and it seems to have rivaled them in the profound impression that it produced. Mr. Owen S. Watkins, of London, in a communication to the Christian Guardian, of Toronto, in referring to the messages given to the Conference by representatives of the various branches of the Methodist family, says: "It was all good speaking, and again and again our hearts were thrilled, but it was Chancellor J. R. Day, of the United States, who reached the top note. * * * Many able men have crossed the Atlantic to bring greetings to the 'Mother Church,' but none more able than Dr. Day. Few men have so impressed the British Conference. I need not describe him; he is known in Canada almost as well as in his own country, and world-wide Methodism rejoices in possessing such a son."

As most of our readers perhaps know, Dr. Day was elected to the Bishopric of his Church some years ago, but declined the honor to continue at the head of the great educational institution with which he is connected, and which has had such remarkable prosperity and growth under his leadership. His influence as an educator is undoubtedly widely felt, but in reading his really extraordinary address we could not but help thinking that perhaps it would have been better if he had consented to serve as one of the chief pastors of his denomination, as it would likely have opened the way for Universal Methodism to feel more effectively the impress of his sound teaching and masterful personality. We wish that the space were at our disposal to give our readers the whole of Dr. Day's suggestive and stirring message, but we can only quote a few brief extracts from it. He said:

"The world has been trying to improve upon the gospel. It has made no improvement upon it in a solitary instance. It has offered substitutes, shouting itself hoarse with the voices of discontent, but it has found nothing to make one mortal contented. The power of the Divine Spirit in the human heart has made millions contented in their lot and place though having nothing. It was the joy of early Methodism. It is now.

"Methodism is not indifferent to the economic conditions of the people who flock like doves to her windows. The great weight of her influence in parliaments and congresses must ever be placed in the scale of their well-being. Her great lawyers and legislators are sent of God to secure the wisest and best things for her humble sons and daughters burdened with economic conditions. To these things Wesley was not indifferent, but he was presciently wise in council. But the first remedy that he applied was that spiritual power which gives a clean heart and contented mind—not an indifferent mind; but a contented mind. This renewed, this regenerated mind does not forsake Providence nor force it. It does not make the mistake of seeking soul remedies in change of physical estate. Soul remedies change many physical conditions. And the best of all is that the changes come by the law of sequence as sure as that which throws open the gardens and meadows of the spring to new flowers and harvest seedings. That is what makes the desert life blossom and rejoice. It makes no ugly wounds and scars and leaves no broken hearts indifferently by the way. It soothes the troubled breast and makes the wounded spirit whole. It rejoices with exceeding great joy while the great economic adjustments move on with the rhythm and harmony of the stars. It may seem contemptible to the wise, but salvation procures social order. * * * If you stop preaching the gospel Wesley preached and substitute socialistic economics, the flood tide of progress will lose the force that propels it and the glory of England will become a memory and America will instantly feel the chill and gloom of the darkened heavens. * * * Our danger is that we shall attempt an accommodation, a compromise, a substitution.

"I think that I can report to you that this is our faith and message across the sea, to an encouraging degree. * * * We are still loyal to the form of pastoral appointment. It is a grand spectacle to see those thousands of ministers handing up their stewardship accounts at the Conferences annually and taking their commissions for another year of service. Sometimes it involves personal loss and much inconvenience and, what is more, the distress of families. But they go. They sing their songs of consecration. They bear their names read off and they go out to fields new and old. Some of them have been told where. Many of them, the most, know not whither. The promise of our ministry is in keeping down close to that old example: 'Here am I, send me.' Not where can I get the most, but where can I do the most. When the woe goes out of our ministry, its power goes; it is dead and it will be plucked up by the roots. God will give its glory to others. He will have a true ministry, a real apostleship. If we do not want it, He will find those who will be glad to take up the pattern of the Mount. The last words they heard Him utter was the great commission. 'And they went forth preaching everywhere, the Lord working with them, with signs following.' The signs that followed were the converts and the quickened churches.

OUR HOME COMING.

The United States is about to have a great home-coming, and this time no persuasion is required to bring the wanderers back. Indeed, we dare say that upon their arrival they will be in a fitting frame of mind to sing with spirit and understanding John Howard Payne's great song, "Home, Sweet Home."

UPRIGHTNESS PAYS.

Corruption undoubtedly sometimes wins, but honesty oftener does so, and is the best policy. Conscious integrity is worth more than meretricious success, and though men in this world may overlook uprightness and fail to appreciate it, God will certainly recognize and reward it. The future is freighted with blessings for the good man, and the trickster may be sure that it will finally bring to him exposure and a correct appraisal of his worth. "Now we see through a glass darkly" and many deceive us, but the light will be turned on by and by.

THE MEASURE OF THE MAN.

We measure mountains by the height they climb
Beyond the clouds—reaching the eternal blue.
We measure oceans by their waves sublime
That kiss the far shores of many a crime
We never knew.

We measure deeds by what they make us know
Of life, its lights and shadows by the way.
Each deed is touched with shadow or with glow
Just as we live the hours from day to day.
We should be true.

We measure time by moments as they fly,
But in Heaven's Calendar there is no time.
Men call "to-day" the hours that now go by:
Beyond these days, no clock the hours shall chime
For me, for you.

What, then, shall be the measure of the man?
Who would attain to human heights sublime.
Like some tall cliff, whose top no eye can scan,
Far up—away from earthly sin and slime,
Beyond the blue.

He will be found: and like his master grown,
Will live from day to day, a life so high,
That Master shall at last the likeness own,
And bid him "Come up higher," by and by:
For he is true.

—Wm. Laurie Hill, in Presbyterian Standard.

REASONS FOR ATTENDING CHURCH.

Some persons continue to ask for reasons why one should attend church. The following reasons have recently appeared in one of our exchanges:

"Because the Church is the mightiest agency on earth for the realization of human progress.

"It is the efficient advocate and ally of every great reform of our day.

"It stands for the highest thinking and the most sacrificial doing.

"It presents the noblest ideals of life, and points the way to their realization.

"It furnishes the motive and the incentive for the expression of sympathy and compassion.

"It is the supreme character-making institution in the world. It is the only organization under the sun doing business for God exclusively.

"It is the divinely appointed and accredited agency for the realization of the kingdom of God on the earth.

"It is the avenue through which men and women walk up the heights to God.

"It relates mankind to God savingly and satisfyingly, and to one another in joyful fellowship.

"In its advocacy of civic and social righteousness it does more than all other organizations or institutions combined to make crime difficult and virtue easy."

We add a hearty amen to the reasons here-with given.—Central Christian Advocate.

OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

It is not extravagant to say that no single event in the history of our Church has excited interest so widespread and intense as the establishment of our new university in Atlanta. The members of the Educational Commission can never forget the scene which characterized the launching of the enterprise. This is not strange. But the strangest of all things is a Methodist whose heart is not stirred and whose loyalty is not fired by the movement. Our history, traditions, hopes, prayers, past achievements and future prospects, are all gathered up and, by a solemn act of consecration, enshrined in the institution. It will express our ideals and in a large measure determine our destiny as a Church.

The demands of the times in which we live, the resources of our great Church, self-respect, protest against wrongs which the historian of the future will record to the amazement of posterity; and the unselfish generosity which makes the beginning of the institution possible, all conspire to arouse the deepest interest throughout our wide connection. It is of the very first importance, however, that we keep in mind the fact that we have only made a beginning.

We have undertaken a tremendous task. It would be a craven thing to shrink before it; and we simply cannot measure the disastrous consequences should we fail and disappoint public expectation.

The opportunity is great and will never come again. It must be seized and improved. Hesitation is not to be thought of. There should be no dawdling at daylight.

The wealth of the Church must be unlocked and directed along the channels which the university will open to Christian beneficence.

The institution is ours—ours in law—and we must make it preeminently ours by devotion and unflinching loyal support.

The members of the Commission were a unit in the judgment that no department of the university should be opened until it could be planted on a foundation broad enough and deep enough to guarantee its perpetuity and efficiency.

In pursuance of this policy, the School of Theology will be opened the 23d of September. The advantages will be incomparable.

The faculty is made up of thoroughly equipped, scholarly, vigorous, consecrated instructors. The endowment and available buildings enable us to command unequalled facilities.

It is to be assumed that every young preacher in our Church naturally and earnestly desires to enjoy these extraordinary advantages. It is simply impossible to overestimate the effect of these things upon his future usefulness. He should covet beyond measure the privilege of being enrolled among the first students of the initial session. We shall encourage in every possible way this laudable desire. I do not know how we could do our young preachers a greater kindness than to urge them to be on hand on the opening day. It will be a memorable event in their history.

In executing the expressed will of the General Conference, the Commission has acted with dispatch and yet without undue haste. Everything will be in readiness.

A united Church will guarantee the largest success. We have a right to expect this. There should be no division of sentiment. The training of our young preachers is the matter of supreme moment just now. This, more than anything else, will determine the character of our future.

THE VANISHING MOTHER.

Some time ago we reproduced an article from the New York Tribune entitled "The Vanishing Mother," in which a bartender is expressing himself in a comparative estimate of past and present mothers as viewed from his stand behind the bar where necessarily the thought of mother must come from time to time. He spoke of the lessening reverence attending the mention of that name, the frequent jests into which she is drawn with careless propriety; and the songs of to-day dealing lightly with the thought of motherhood. "Where is my wandering boy to-night?" fails to grip the wanderer as of old. "Mother," he says concludingly, "has changed with the times. Mother isn't sitting up now at nights. Son and daughter have their own latch key. And mother, why she is out in front there now with a wig and a cigarette. Surely times have changed."

This man of the world, and the underworld at that, paints a pretty dark picture, but he got his colors somewhere and we may as well recognize the fact that he is indicating a tendency of the times. The mother is "vanishing" in a real as well as a figurative sense. Actual motherhood is on the wane. There are more childless homes to-day than ever in the history of the nation. The average family has about two children, and four is a large family. We have no inclination at this time to dwell upon this tendency of the times, only to add that if parents of the middle and upper grades of citizenship decline this divinely imposed duty and permit the immigrant and poor to swarm, it requires no particular prophetic insight to figure the result in the generation just ahead. The old-fashioned mother who accepted motherhood as her life occupation, who built her life with all its joys, its sorrows, its hopes about her family—such mothers, who considered "the hearing and the training of a child a woman's wisdom," are to-day rare indeed. Instead, what have we? A race of women who consider the presence of one or two children such an incumbrance that their care is too often turned over to a third party in the person of a governess or nurse. Actual motherhood is dying out and this one fact will some day be a matter of deepest national and social concern.

In another and as inimical a sense, motherhood is vanishing. Our modern social system has minimized the home as an integral force. The kingdom—or queendom—of the home has lost its pristine glory and the reign of the queen thereof is dimmed. Not many decades ago the American home was a little world in itself. The father and mother were there practically all the time beyond work hours, and the children—not the child, but the children—resorted thither for their amusement and instruction. Each had his labor to perform and all joined in the evening circle of conversation or reading. Parental authority amounted to law and this the children knew right well.

It was thus that the young man and woman passed from the home out into the world bearing distinctive marks of the handiwork, the brain work, the heart work of the parents; and the youth forever regarded home as the place on earth designed of heaven whence his life was to secure its direction and whither he could return in body or spirit for inspiration.

It was largely because of this close and unbroken link between mother and child that there has been thrown a glory about home centering in the halo encircling the modern Madonna's head. We are not so sure, were it left to the present generation to paint the picture, to pen the poem, to sing the song, whether the inspiration were forthcoming or not to give it such colors divine.

Motherhood is vanishing. Mother has stepped across the threshold; she has heard the sound of distant conquest and yearns to engage in the fray. Between home—her sole realm of yesterday—and business, the club, the political rally, the card table, and other modern institutions of a distracting character, the home is largely neglected.

Certain communities exist where these modern waves have not beat and where the home of yesterday still exists with its plenteous fold and unbroken ties; but the picture we have painted is fairly applicable to many communities. Will the mother, once having been touched with this modern spirit, ever be content to serve as queen of the household? The contrary is greatly feared, and that the influences operating to push the home into the background will become more potent with time until home—the home of yesterday into whose sacred confines the family retreated as into a sanctuary—shall become a dream to a distracted and homesick age.

What the present day needs is more home-like homes; more children in these homes, and more mothers ready to consecrate their love, their time, their all to the culture of the life that God has encircled them with. Society's demands are all too numerous and insistent. The call of the home must sound with unmistakable clearness, and be heeded.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

A GOOD MAN WITH THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

From a good brother in Alabama I have received the following letter:

Bishop W. A. Candler, Atlanta, Ga.:

My Dear Brother: As you have been elected the first Chancellor of the new University to be established in Atlanta, and as I have read of some of your good work in some of the Atlanta papers, I wish to write just a few lines to you.

I can not write you the spirit of my mind as it is; but some time ago I was reading some of your pieces and was very much impressed, and they did me good. I am a young man and have hardly reached the age of twenty-nine, and like many other young men have done, I have let my golden opportunity slip. While my parents were very poor, I could have gotten an education if I had started in time. But I will not now worry a minute about the past.

I have a wife and three sweet children, two of whom are boys, and by the help of God, I hope to bring them up and teach them to take advantage of the great opportunities that present themselves to every young man now.

God has blessed us with good health, and I thank him for it, and for the many other blessings that we receive daily.

For the past fifteen years I have felt the spirit of God calling me, and at times regret for the past brings tears of sadness to my eyes. Of late I have been trying to live better, but my feelings of regret remain. I feel that I am too weak to do my duty to God, but I am trying to lean on the strong arm of Jesus. He must have something for me to do or his spirit would not stay with me so long. I ask you to pray for me that I may get right and may be able to do my duty to God, whatever it may be.

Brother Candler, I do pray that the Trustees of the new University will be good Christian men, and that they will keep even the appearance of evil from the school. I hope to see the day when my dear little boys may go through that University, and that they may go through it to the glory of the Master.

Please let me know if you will accept a small gift to the University. I wish that I were able to give like your brother did; but you know that my gift will be small as I have to support my family on $70 per month.

Yours truly,

That letter breathes the true spirit. The writer is a poor man, but he intends to have a part in building a great university for his Church. He does not wait to be asked, but acts on his own motion at once. His example ought to provoke thousands to give without delay all they can to this great cause.

Our people have never had such an opportunity to make a really great university in the South. Will they seize the opportunity and make the most of it? God help us all to do our duty in this momentous hour in the educational history of our Church!

DR. W. B. PALMORE—AN APPRECIATION.

By Rev. Theodore Copeland, D.D.

Whether a man is to be regarded great or insignificant depends upon the unit with which he is measured, and the scale of values is not always and everywhere the same. From time immemorial two standards have obtained, the hero and the saint, and these belong to widely different spheres. Secular history is so occupied with the cabinets of kings and the exploits of conquering armies that meager attention is given to the men whose moral strength and purity of soul have swayed the minds of their contemporaries, who rising above their times, have assailed all forms of error, rescued great truths from the corruption of ages, and by their characters, deeds and sufferings have proved themselves the benefactors of the race.

A fair specimen of the world's celebrities was Mirabeau, the genius of the French Revolution, endowed with an athletic frame and extraordinary mental powers; an illustrious orator and statesman, but closing his checkered, profligate career in utter and ignominious failure, exclaiming as he left the world, "If I had only been a good man, if I had not wasted my life by sensuality, and my youth by evil passions, I could have saved France."

A great man is he who stands out from others, not for some accidental difference, but for something which makes others follow his lead, acknowledge his power, accept his teachings and admire his conduct.

During my pastorate in New Orleans, Dr. Palmore walked into my Sabbath school one Sunday morning, preached that day to my congregation, and took a collection for the San Francisco sufferers. This was our first acquaintance; and with the passing years my love and admiration for him have grown and intensified, for I soon learned that "his life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man."

Dr. Palmore possessed in an eminent degree the sterling qualities that fitted him for the highest service; and service, we learn from the great Teacher, is the badge of true greatness. His gifted mind grasped and felt in full force the truths and impulses which were dimly and dumbly moving in the minds of others. In his soul was room for many interests and many aims, while he possessed the power to comprehend and reconcile them all into one great purpose.

As Editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, he displayed marked ability and extensive knowledge of the men and the movements of his generation. His weekly editorials and the general management of the paper kept it in the front rank of religious journalism. He stood for personal purity and civic righteousness, denounced craft, cruelty and hypocrisy, and encouraged every enterprise looking to the welfare of society. His frequent visits to foreign countries, and his wide observation of men in every clime, found expression in his numerous notes of travel published in the religious press.

To his large soul was added deep, abiding conviction. Constantly aiming at that which was to last for centuries, he met with such obstacles as none but leaders ever encounter, and found straight in his path the passing passions of the day, roused to fiercer enmity by their own shallowness. Amid opposition and discouragement, he held firmly to his high purpose. The only real moral power influencing the world is courage to act in accordance with our convictions. The irresolute who never can be got to take a decided stand; the frivolous who can not perform a serious purpose, or take a sober view of their responsibilities; the timorous who will not undertake a duty lest they will have no strength to perform it—these classes fail us utterly in the emergencies of life.

One other trait must be mentioned, his resolute will. If not the highest element in a great man's nature, the will is at least the one which saves the others from downright degradation. No spectacle is more contemptible than clear knowledge combined with weakness. No character is more universally despised than that of a coward. Dr. Palmore, knowing the right, pursued it with inflexible perseverance, allowing no compromise to deflect him from his high endeavor, looking for his recompense at the resurrection of the just.

With a heart that felt another's woe, his sympathy was co-extensive with his knowledge of human want, suffering and misfortune.

The disposition of his estate, as shown in his last will and testament, evinced his abiding interest in the institutions which exist for the glory of God and the extension of his Kingdom. A Prince and a great man is fallen in Israel.

THE OXFORD CAMP MEETING.

Dear Dr. Meek: It gives me very great pleasure indeed to regale your readers with echoes from the old Oxford Campground, which was established in the year of 1872, making the meeting just closed the 43d held at this sacred spot. There were present at this time four persons who have attended each of the forty-three consecutive meetings held here and twelve persons present who were present forty-two years ago, which is quite remarkable.

The meeting this year was under the personal supervision of Rev. E. S. Lewis, our pastor at Oxford and Rev. C. T. Floyd, the Methodist pastor at Abbeville, who manifested thoughtful and prayerful interest for weeks before the meeting began and throughout all the services. Brother Lewis in his usual affable way looked after the people and made everybody happy and welcome.

Brother Floyd took an active part in the work of the choir, using his splendid God-given voice to the glory of his Maker and to the benefit of the people.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, Miss., was chosen to lead the meeting and came to us filled with the Spirit and ready for service. He, with his big-hearted, genial presence, soon found his way to the hearts of the people and rewarded their attention with some of the soundest, most convincing, and heart-warming gospel thoughts that it has been my privilege to hear. Favorable comment on every hand attested the stimulation of deep thought and heart-searching. We beg leave to mention specially his discourse from I Peter 5:10 which was "more precious than rubies" to the disciple who has suffered for the sake of Christ and who has "felt his brothers' need." Long may Brother Lipscomb live to proclaim messages of faith, comfort and good cheer to the children of men.

On Monday that dear and faithful old soldier of the cross, Brother W. J. O'Bryant, of Water Valley, came to us, and from time to time warmed our hearts with the pure gospel and took us, as it were, to the very gates of heaven in prayer. May God bless him and make his latest labors for the Master the richest and sweetest!

The meeting was well attended throughout, a number of visitors from other States being present. Among them was Rev. R. G. Slaughter of DeLeon, Texas, who was reared in this section and who has spent a goodly portion of his life in this vicinity and for years has been a familiar figure on the old Campground. Brother Slaughter broke up the fallow ground of our hearts by relating his Christian experiences and work for the Master in his adopted Western home. He made us understand that, while he had severed many ties here, he still retained the constant fellowship of Him whom he found precious to his soul in the years gone at this blessed place. Brother Slaughter's legion of friends here bless his very name and the influence of his godly life is a sweet aroma wherever he goes.

While there were a few vacant tents this year, the camp meeting on the whole was very gratifying. The presence of the Holy Spirit was manifest daily, and the desire for better Christian living was expressed in preaching, testimony and song almost hourly. The noted choir from Mt. Zion Church, which has so happily furnished music for the camp meeting for years, under the faithful leadership of Prof. J. W. Stephens, was never better. When they caught up the notes and blended their voices in the famous "Resurrection" song, we were made to feel that the very heavens were opened and that the redeemed from the choir invisible had caught the strains triumphant and were wafting them around the throne of Him whom angels and archangels delight to honor. We are sorry that at this writing we are unable to give the number of conversions. However, we know that sinners were moved and that this, the forty-third, camp meeting will not have been in vain in its lasting influence for good in the hearts and the homes of the people. A number of family altars were pledged, and this, within itself, is the secret of holy living and the making of godly men and women.

Church News

Bishop Moulton is now on the Pacific Coast where he is preaching and getting in hand the work of his episcopal district.

The Baptists of Louisiana are planning to establish a hospital in Shreveport which they expect ultimately to cost $300,000.

Of the many fine hymns written by blind Fanny J. Crosby, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" is said to be her favorite. This sweet singer in Israel is in her 94th year.

Bishop Earl Cranston has registered a protest against the Methodist Episcopal Church using missionary money to establish congregations within the territory of the M. E. Church, South.

The British Wesleyan Church maintains 385 missionaries in the foreign field, not including the wives of missionaries. It has therein 129,000 full members, and the total number of its baptized adult adherents is 287,000.

A new $12,000 Southern Methodist Church was dedicated at King's Mountain, N. C., on August 2, the sermon of the occasion being preached by Dr. Plato T. Durham, Professor of Church History in the Atlanta Methodist University.

Bishop W. A. Candler will deliver the address at the educational anniversary of the South Georgia Conference, over which he will preside, on November 25. This means that the South Georgians will hear a masterful message on the subject of Christian Education.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma has decided that it is not in the power of the people of Guthrie, even by an election, to give the old capitol building, situated in that city, to the Northern Methodist University located there. This leaves that institution without a domicile in which to carry on its work.

Southern Methodists generally will sympathize with Dr. T. N. Ivey, Editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, in the loss of his mother, who died at Statesville, N. C., on July 27, 1914, in the 83d year of her age. She was the widow of a Methodist itinerant, Rev. George W. Ivey, and wrought worthily for the Master in many fields.

Rev. J. B. Mitchell, formerly of North Mississippi and a Millsaps graduate, is chairman of the Board of Trustees of Southern College, our leading educational institution in Florida. Rev. R. H. Alderman, the new president of this school, is reported to have taken hold of his work with great energy and enthusiasm.

Rev. N. L. Linebaugh, of the East Oklahoma Conference, has been elected to the presidency of the Oklahoma Wesleyan College, located in Oklahoma City, to succeed Dr. W. A. Shelton who has accepted the chair of Hebrew and Old Testament Literature in the Theological Department of the new Methodist University at Atlanta, Ga.

President Woodrow Wilson has accepted the honorary presidency of the International Lord's Day Congress to be held at the Panama-Pacific Exposition next July. In accepting the position, the President expressed his deep conviction of the necessity of preserving the Christian Sabbath and his entire sympathy with the purpose of the announced congress.

By designation of the National Reform Association, the second Sunday in September (the 13th) will be the "Day of Prayer for the Public Schools." Helpful literature for the occasion may be had by addressing the association referred to, at 603 Publication Building, Pittsburgh, Penn. We think that our pastors would do well to co-operate in this movement.

Great things are being done for the further equipment of Wesleyan University, at Middleton, Conn. A large outlay is soon to be made for additional buildings, the endowment fund has lately been increased by the amount of $1,000,000, and plans are being formed to raise for this fund another $1,000,000. The future of this historic institution was never so bright with promise as it is to-day.

Dr. C. A. Rush, presiding elder of the Montgomery (Ala.) District, has been chosen president of the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., a position recently made vacant by the resignation of Dr. Andrew Sledd. Dr. Rush is an alumnus of the institution of which he now becomes the head, having been graduated there in 1886. He is a son of the late Dr. J. W. Rush and a grandson of Bishop J. O. Andrew.

The Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South, has set aside $3000 for the employment of a man to take up the work of perfecting the organization of the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, which is to be related to the whole Church west of the Mississippi River in accordance with the plan formulated by the late General Conference, and Dr. W. D. Bradfield, of Austin, Texas, has been chosen for this task. Dr. Bradfield is expected to visit as many of the Annual Conferences west of the Mississippi as he can and present the claims of the great institution with which he has become connected. He will reside at Dallas.

Bishop J. H. McCoy and Rev. J. D. Young recently made a speaking tour through the Panhandle of Texas and raised $6000 for the endowment of a Chair of Religious Education in the Southern Methodist University at Dallas. In this connection, it may be of interest to our readers to know that our Educational Commission has requested our General Sunday School Board to divide the $50,000 raised by the Sunday schools of the Church for pedagogical instruction between the universities at Atlanta and Dallas, and that each institution be requested to increase its half as soon as possible to the full amount of $50,000.

CENTENARY NOTES.

A number of leading Shreveport citizens have volunteered to raise a special subscription to supplement the maintenance fund of Centenary College for the approaching session, and to enable the President to install some needed improvements. This is an expression of local interest in the institution that should stimulate the Conference campaign.

The prospect for the opening in September seems bright.

Prof. B. D. Battle, brother of Rev. C. A. Battle is one of the many teachers now marooned in Germany.

Waldo W. Moore, Jr., of Pascagoula, Miss., a recent graduate of Millsaps College, has been engaged as instructor in our Preparatory Department.

R. H. WYNN.

VIRGINIA'S LOSS, ATLANTA'S GAIN.

The new theological seminary at Atlanta has called two of the choicest ministers of the Virginia Conference to positions in the faculty. Dr. William J. Young has accepted the chair of theology and homiletics and Rev. W. A. Smart the chair of Biblical theology.

Dr. Young has for many years served our leading churches and is one of the most efficient and popular pastors in the Conference. He is a man of scholarly attainments and studious habits and will make, without doubt, an excellent instructor of the young men preparing for the ministry of our Church.

Brother Smart, the worthy son of our honored and deceased Dr. R. D. Smart, has been a member of the Conference but a comparatively short while. He has, however, demonstrated that he is a man of unusual ability and has filled with great success the several pastorates he has served. He has had excellent educational opportunities and is well equipped for the work to which he has been called.

We wish these brethren much success in their new fields of labor but, while we most heartily congratulate the Seminary upon securing their services, we regret the loss of two such useful and efficient pastors.

By the way, a third member of the faculty comes originally from Virginia. Dr. Andrew Sledd, the son of the lamented Dr. R. N. Sledd, of our Conference, was reared in this State and received his education at Randolph-Macon College, taking post graduate work at Harvard. He will teach New Testament Greek and he will do it well. He goes to the new institution from the presidency of the Southern University, in Alabama—Baltimore and Richmond Christian Advocate.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE THIRTY YEARS AGO.

Dear Dr. Meek: It must make the older ones of the Church feel lonely to see no more the faces of the ones who thirty years ago were the leaders. We glean from the Conference minutes of 1884 the following:

C. G. Andrews was Secretary—had been from '65 and continued to be until 1900. Bishop Parker was in the chair. Dr. Andrews was assisted by J. J. A. Jones, T. W. Adams and J. W. Chambers. All these, except Brother Adams are with us no more. All members of the Boards of Missions, Church Extension, Sunday School, and Education, except Dr. Moulton and S. B. Watts, have been gathered unto their fathers.

If we should call that roll now, only 23 would answer this side of the City of God. Only one laymen present, so far as I can tell, is yet with us—T. A. Holloman. The Conference met in Yazoo City. The resolution of thanks adopted mentioned the courtesies of railroads and steamboats. At the head of the Conference roll, is the name of "Father" J. G. Jones, the author of Methodism in Mississippi. Of those admitted on trial, S. L. Jones is the only one now living. Of those remaining on trial B. F. Lewis and A. F. Watkins are yet in the service, and of the class admitted into full connection, J. W. Brown and V. D. Skipper.

The report of the Board of Education is especially interesting and suggestive. No assessment appears for any purpose or school. It contains a resolution of thanks for the generous gift of the $20,000 Institute Hall to Whitworth College by Dr. H. F. Johnson. The following recommendations are made: Rev. D. M. Rush to the presidency of Centenary College (Jackson, La.); Dr. H. F. Johnson to the presidency of Whitworth College; Rev. A. D. McCoy to the presidency of East Mississippi College (Meridian, Miss.); Rev. T. C. Bradford to the presidency of the Port Gibson College; Rev. T. W. Brown to the presidency of Woodville Seminary; Rev. H. W. Featherston to the presidency of Kavanaugh College (Holmesville, Miss.). The number of pupils in the colleges was as follows: Centenary 74, Whitworth 277, Port Gibson 100, East Mississippi 119, Woodville 50, and Kavanaugh 90. The presiding elders serving at that Conference have all been translated. Gallant men they were, judged by the record they left behind.

Of the appointments made by Bishop Parker at that session all the elders have also gone home. We cannot take space for all the assignments, but note the following: C. B. Galloway, Brookhaven Station and Editor of New Orleans Christian Advocate; Meridian Station, W. C. Black; Natchez Station, E. H. Moulton; Madison, I. W. Cooper; Benton, T. W. Adams; Martin Mission, A. F. Watkins; Bayou Pierre, B. F. Lewis; Marion, R. F. Witt; Yazoo City Station, T. B. Holloman; China Grove, W. W. Simmons; Sharon, J. S. Parker; Missionary to China, J. W. Lambuth; Providence, H. P. Lewis; Westville, R. A. Sibley; Hillsboro—to be supplied by J. C. Long; Rocky Springs, R. Bradley. Only eleven who were members of that Conference are effective now. Some of the statistics follow: Members, 26,540; Number in Sunday School, 10,750; Paid on Conference Claimant Fund, $2250; for Missions—foreign $4000, domestic $1078; 7 districts paid the presiding elders $7565; preachers, $48,546; average salary $400. How times have changed! How sacred are the memories of these bygone days! May we prove to be worthy sons of these noble sires! C. M. CHAPMAN.

Secular News and Comment

China has appealed to the United States to help her maintain her neutrality during the great war now raging in the eastern hemisphere.

The attendance upon the Tulane Summer School this year was 899, against 843 last year. This number embraced 128 men and 771 women. Truly, this looks as if woman were forging ahead in the educational field.

The Hon. Joseph B. Foraker was defeated for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate, in the Ohio primaries last week. It seems quite as hard for a down-and-out politician to "come back" as it is for a beaten prize fighter.

It is claimed that as a result of the European war the United States Government is confronted with a probable shortage of $100,000,000 in its annual revenues. An increased tax on beer, cigars, tobacco, and incomes is being advocated as a means of supplying this loss.

The July imports passing through New Orleans broke all records for that month, reaching the sum of $3,123,156, against $7,275,433 in July, 1913, the next highest record. Including both exports and imports, New Orleans is the second port in the United States, New York, of course, being the first.

The Committees of both houses of the Georgia Legislature having the matter in charge have reported favorably a measure exempting college endowments from taxation, except such portions of them as may be in real estate. This was the law in Georgia prior to the adoption of the present State Constitution in 1877.

What to do with our cotton crop is a problem now engaging the attention of the statesmen(?) at Washington. Mr. Houston, the Secretary of Agriculture, estimates that at the lowest calculation the situation abroad will leave between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 bales on our hands for which there will be no market. Various expedients are being proposed to remedy the present menacing situation.

Carbajal, the temporary President of Mexico, fled from the Capital of that nation, thus abdicating his office, on August 13. He was unable to secure pledges of amnesty for the Federalists from the Constitutionalists, who will hereafter direct Mexican affairs. General Carranza is reported to have withheld a shipment of arms from General Villa last week and there seems to be an increasing fear of friction between these two leaders.

Ex-United States Senator J. W. Bailey, of Texas, tried to influence the recent Democratic Convention of that State to declare against national prohibition and woman suffrage, but most signally failed, the vote standing 645 to 107 against the resolutions. Mr. Bailey was quoted as saying that if such action was not taken, he would stand for a seat in the United States Senate and take the stump against these issues, and it now remains to be seen whether he will measure up to his manifesto.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says: "Germany has twenty universities in which there are 60,943 students—almost double the number enrolled twenty years ago. And yet with all this learning, according to a writer of that country, Germany has seriously retrograded in morals during the last few years. Learning alone is not enough. There must be moral and religious influences around the student or his education may work harm." Our contemporary is right. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION is what the world needs.

Eighteen of the twenty peace treaties recently negotiated with foreign countries by our Government were ratified by the United States Senate on the 13th inst. They provide for commissions of inquiry before a resort to arms in international disputes which cannot be settled by the ordinary methods of diplomacy. These treaties are with the following nations: Norway, the Netherlands, Portugal, Switzerland, Denmark, Italy, Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Bolivia, Persia, Costa Rica, Venezuela, Uruguay, Argentine, Brazil, and Chile.

There are said to be in the United States 13,500,000 foreign-born residents. Of these, 600,000 are from Great Britain, 50,000 from Belgium, 2,500,000 from Germany, 120,000 from France, 1,400,000 from Italy, 1,730,000 from Russia, 1,670,000 from Austria, and 100,000 from Greece. Most of these have come to our country to stay and many of them have become naturalized, but it is estimated that approximately a million of them feel that they are under obligation to render military service to their native lands in the struggle which is now on in Europe.

MRS. W. S. SHIPMAN.

The many friends of Rev. W. S. Shipman and family were greatly shocked Tuesday night, when it was announced that Mrs. Shipman had died suddenly from the effects of a stroke of apoplexy. She was sitting at the piano playing for her eldest son, Smylie, to sing, when the summons came.

Mrs. Shipman was a splendid type of Christian womanhood, a devoted wife, and an ideal mother. She made her home an earthly heaven for her husband and children. A happier family circle the writer has never known. Many have said, "What a beautiful family relationship exists in the home of Brother and Sister Shipman!"

Mrs. Shipman had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church since early childhood. She always had strong religious convictions and lived her religion day by day. In her death the Methodist Church has lost one of its most useful members and the Sunday school a valuable teacher. We shall miss her happy face and her cheerful greeting on Sunday morning.

Mrs. Shipman leaves a sorrowing husband, four children, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Her children have a rich heritage of love and faith, and may they imitate the example of their sainted mother!

A FRIEND.

REV. R. D. NORSWORTHY CALLED HOME.

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy passed away at his home here in Yazoo City last Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock. He had been in feeble health for more than a year and finally succumbed to paralysis. His last hours were cheered by the tender ministries of his dear ones and intimate relatives and friends. His son, Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, hastened to his bedside from Sharon, Miss., where he was conducting a meeting. No son was ever more unceasing in his watchful and tender care of his father.

Brother Norsworthy was buried in the Yazoo City Cemetery where lies a daughter, who was burned to death, while he was pastor in this city years ago. The funeral service was from the Methodist Church, Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, the pastor being assisted in the service by Revs. R. F. Witt, H. B. Cottrell, T. B. Cottrell, W. M. Williams, W. H. Lane, J. D. Crymes and the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. W. J. Caldwell. Brother Norsworthy's aged wife, Mrs. Eugenia Norsworthy, is sorely afflicted, and for her and the children we ask the prayers of the brethren. This worthy veteran's reliance upon the atoning blood was implicit; his communion with God was sweet; his title to heavenly reward was clear, and Robt. D. Norsworthy is now with the saints of the ages. A suitable memoir will be prepared later.

PROTESTS AGAINST THE MODERN DANCING MANIA.

As a rule our Methodist people are observing to a marked degree that rule of the Church which forbids the taking of such diversions or amusements as "cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus." There are some, however, whose feet are slipping over the precipice of the modern dance. It is no time for our pastors and church workers to relax their efforts to keep the line of division between the world and the Church distinctly defined. The influence of so-called society is more insistent than ever before, and the increase of wealth makes the dangers that beset our young people the more subtle.

There is no hope for society which gives itself over to the allurements of the modern dance. The whole system as now taught and practiced is essentially vulgar and depraving. We quote from one of our exchanges:

Not only churchmen but other writers and leaders of men are protesting in vigorous words against the modern dancing mania. For instance, Dr. Hugo Munsterberg, the famous psychologist, in his book, "Psychology and Social Sanity," says: "The fate of imperial Rome ought to be an eternal warning to imperial Manhattan. Italy, like America, took its art and science from over the sea, but gave to them abundant wealth. Instead of true art it cultivated the virtuosi, and in Rome, which paid three thousand dancers, the dance was its glory until it began ingloriously to sink." A reviewer of this book in the New York Times says, "License, criticism, and imitativeness in a high degree are stirred up by dancing movements, and these mental effects on the mind of the individual tend to leave a serious impress on the community as a whole."

Dr. Frank C. Richardson, a professor of nervous diseases in Boston University, in an address before a medical institute at Atlantic City, said recently: "No careful observer can fail to conclude that the modern dances constitute a social ulcer which is a serious menace to morality and a potent factor in the production of crime. The modern dancing methods have been the acknowledged avenue to the moral downfall of large numbers of wives and mothers who have been led captive by this craze of syncopation and laying on of hands.... The very pose of the dancers suggests impurity, and the various steps and movements are contrived with devilish ingenuity." Some of the new steps Dr. Richardson considers the nursery of the divorce court. "The hope of the nation lies in the renaissance of home life and the awakening of woman to the grandeur of her mission to mother the weary world."—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

TWO NOBLE ITINERANTS.

Dear Brother Meek: A few days since I picked up a page of the New Orleans Christian Advocate printed in the early weeks of 1906. The page contained two letters—one from Gilderoy Porter, the other from James W. Honnoll, two of the best friends I ever had. I first saw Brother Porter at the session of the Memphis Conference at Trenton, Tennessee in 1888. He was there for admission on trial. I got acquainted with him two years later at Aberdeen, the close of my first year in the Conference. Up to 1891 we had nothing more than a "Conference acquaintance." About that time we began a friendly correspondence—to me both pleasant and profitable. The correspondence was kept up as long as he lived, or more than thirty-five years. In addition to his contributions to the Advocate while I was editor, he favored me with many personal letters. Through him and my Conference classmate, John Barcroft I kept in touch and sympathy with the North Mississippi Conference during the eighteen years I was employed in Arkansas.

Porter kept me fully informed concerning North Mississippi happenings. An important outcome of his newsy letters was a long controversy over "the moral status of infants." He would tell me of the erratic preaching of Dr. J. B. Cottrell; at that time preacher-in-charge of Columbus station. Dr. Cottrell made no secret of his notions of depravity. They were not "orthodox." A few persons still living remember that Dr. L. C. Garland objected to Dr. Cottrell's preaching and forced him to answer before the bar of the Conference. Porter, in writing of these things, stated his objections and set forth his own views. I discovered that he was about as much of a Calvinist as Cottrell was a Pelagian. And the controversy began. It extended over a period of several months. Porter was born a Calvinist and was excusable. I was born an Arminian, and had instruction and training under a profound Arminian teacher. So, though Porter had more sense than I, the advantage in argument was with me. After this discussion closed we entered upon another. The "human will" was the question. The argument was long and labored. Both of us did our "level best" and kept our tempers. In a letter to me dated May 5, 1873, Porter says: "You did get me on the infant question: I was used up. And I knew you thought me defeated on this (the question of the will), but I think not."

But strange things happen. My friend got so straight that he came near leaning the other way. I quote from a letter written to me on October 23, 1877: "I am fully cured of all calvinistic taint, but you are not. * * * I hereby and herein charge you with Calvinism in your view of 'original sin.' * * * I am now on a solid rock, and invite investigation, and challenge you to investigation." This was after he had devoured the Southern Review, then conducted by Dr. Bledsoe. Nothing resulted from this challenge.

My dear friend was a loyal Episcopal Methodist. Never in all our long correspondence, which was confidential, did he ever express a word indicating dissatisfaction, let alone disloyalty. He was enthusiastic and zealous—energetic in pushing the work, and always stood for the "old paths" and the "old time religion." He never wavered. This is attested in the letter to which allusion is made in the beginning of this communication, which letter was written not many months before he left us. One paragraph concludes with these words: "Methodism is the best method of doing the greatest good to the largest number of people."

Brother Honnoll and I first met in 1862, the year he joined Conference. I remember him as distinctly as he appeared then, almost fifty-two years ago, as I do his appearance the last time I saw him at the session of our Conference in Sardis, in 1911, when I had the pleasure and honor of entertaining him. For ten years we were in the same Conference—first in the Memphis, then in the North Mississippi, but we saw each other only during the annual sessions. Our paths diverged in 1872. We were associated no more until 1886 when I returned to North Mississippi. I was appointed to the Holly Springs District and he to Holly Springs Station. During my absence of eighteen years many preachers had entered the ranks, to every one of whom I was a stranger. Brother Honnoll had not forgotten me. He had not forgotten even the little sermon I tried to preach to the Negroes at Jackson in 1862. He heartily welcomed me, not only back to the Conference, but to the district and to his home, the hospitalities of which I often shared. He was always brotherly, always congenial, always ready to advise and to assist. And what is remarkable, in our association, covering a period of more than twenty years, we seemed to see everything pertaining to the work of the Church from the same standpoint. Without consultation or conspiracy, we were invariably on the same side of every important question. I never felt unsafe when we stood together.

What a man Brother Honnoll was! In mind and heart and physical stature, he was every inch a man. He was as true to God and the Church and to his fellow-man as any preacher that ever had a place among us. He was a wise man. He knew what Israel ought to do. He weighed matters carefully and conscientiously, and rendered his judgment in the fewest words possible. His speeches in Conference were few and always short. If he ever talked as long as five minutes, I do not recall the time or the occasion. So conspicuous was he for short speeches that somebody said: "Brother Honnoll makes half his speech while rising up, and the other half while going down." His best sermons too were short. No matter how important the occasion, he was never tempted to go beyond the usual time. His sermons were well studied, well delivered, and invariably well received. He preached no sermons except his own. In the letter before us, written in 1906 he says:

"I am re-reading Munsey's Sermons, which I read twenty-five years ago. You need not fear that this young man will try to memorize and preach one of them. It would be like a three-year-old boy trying to chop with his father's ax. I have done a great many foolish things in my life, but this is one I never did."

In following the course wisely marked out in early life, Brother Honnoll escaped the mortification experienced by many thoughtless but well-meaning preachers. I know the feeling. When I was a fledgeling, trying my young wings before joining the Conference, I foolishly drew on three distinguished preachers who flourished and passed away before I was born. Of the material collected, a patch-work sermon was made which I thought was fairly good. The first opportunity to preach after its preparation was to a congregation of Negroes in a small city. I let them have it. The thing was a failure. I felt mean. I have never tried that sort of a trick since. Not only that, it set me against filling my mind with printed sermons. I studiously avoided reading after popular preachers—Beecher, Spurgeon, Talmadge, and all other preachers except Wesley, whose discourses being necessary to my education, I had to read.

We have none like Brother Honnoll left among us. Brother Porter left no successor. We see them no more save in our dreams. They have gone above "to the general assembly and Church of the first-born which are written in heaven." The memory of them is precious. The hope of meeting them in heaven is glorious.

A WORTHY OBJECT.

In the Spring Hill Cemetery, seven miles southwest of Grenada, Miss., rests the body of Rev. Joseph Travis, a veteran itinerant preacher of the M. E. Church, South, who died in 1858. He labored faithfully for many years in several States on circuits, stations and districts. In Mis-issippi, among others, he served Natchez, Holly Springs, and Grenada as pastor and teacher.

He also served in New Orleans, La. In every place he left the savor of a good name. There are yet living a few persons who cherish the memory of "Father Travis," and many children and grandchildren of those who were blessed by his life and ministry.

No stone marks his grave, and soon those who can now designate it will be gone. Therefore, it has been proposed that a sufficient fund be raised to provide a suitable monument to mark the grave and perpetuate the memory of one who did so much for the cause of Christ, especially in North Mississippi. We believe that there are many appreciative persons who will say it shall be done. A layman of moderate means gives $5. Who else will give any amount, more or less, in cash or subscription to be paid by December 1? Send money or subscription to Mr. M. G. Dubard, Bew Springs, Miss., or the undersigned, immediately or as soon as practicable. Acknowledgments will be made in the Advocate.

THE SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Sardis district conference was held at Courtland, Miss., July 1-2, 1914, with Rev. J. W. Dorman, P. E., presiding. The attendance, both lay and clerical, was very poor. One remarkable feature of the conference was that nearly every local preacher in the district was present.

The preaching was done by the Revs. J. T. Lockhart, T. W. Dye, and T. H. Lipscomb, and was of a high order. The interests of the Church were well looked after. We had with us during the session of the conference, Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference; Prof. J. M. Sullivan of Millsaps College; Rev. John R. Countiss, President of Grenada College; Rev. V. C. Curtis, Conference Sunday School Secretary, and Miss Ethel Golding from our Orphans' Home, all of whom addressed the conference in the interest of the causes and institutions represented by them. We were also glad to have with us Rev. G. W. Bachman, Conference colporteur, and Hon. T. B. King, lay leader of the Memphis Conference.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: Rev. T. W. Dye, J. L. Christy, P. T. Callicott, and Herbert Holmes. J. W. Loch of Hernando, Miss., was elected district lay leader. The next district conference will be held at Coldwater, Courtland entertained the conference royally.

P. T. CALLICOTT, Secretary.

THE NEW UNIVERSITY COMMENDED.

Those who have been in sympathy with the Southern Methodist Church in its unsuccessful fight against the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University will be glad to know that a bigger and better institution will be established in Atlanta to take the place of the one lost. The enterprise starts with the most promising outlook and there is little doubt that within a decade it will stand out as one of the great universities, not only of the South, but of all the United States. Bishop Candler has been chosen as the first Chancellor, and those who are informed as to his intellectual and religious strength know that in them is found the basis for a great institution. There are few, if any, as great intellects in Southern Methodism as that of Bishop Candler.—The Kosciuszko (Miss.) Courier.

GRASSHOPPER GREEN.

Marian Churchill Graves.

"Grasshopper Green is a comical chap,
He lives on the best of fare.
Bright little jacket and trousers and cap,
These are his summer wear.
Out in the meadow he loves to go,
Playing away in the sun.
It's hopperty, skipperty, high and low,
Summer's the time for fun."

Dick was so much interested in his song and his picture book that he did not know Uncle Rob had entered the room until some one behind his chair said:

"Well, where did you learn to make that noise?"

Dick laughed and clapped his hands. He was always glad to see Uncle Rob.

"That's a song I learned at kindergarten, and I've found a picture of 'Grasshopper Green' in my book," he said. "Won't you tell me a story about him?"

"Did you ever hear a grasshopper sing?" asked Uncle Rob.

"Yes, lots of times. It sounds just like a little saw-mill," said Dick.

"I've caught you the first thing, Dick, boy. A grasshopper can't sing as much as I can. He makes that noise by rubbing his rough legs against his hard wing-covers. He has two pairs of wings. One set is folded neatly under the other set, except when he is flying. Then he opens the under wings like a fan. The outside wings are very hard and they keep the other wings from harm.

"The grasshopper has three pairs of legs. He uses two pairs to help him in eating and the largest pair are his hopping legs. The muscles in these large legs are very strong. A man would find it hard to jump across this room, but if there was a grasshopper as large as a man he could jump three miles."

"My, I'd like to see a big jump like that, Uncle Rob," said Dick, with mouth and eyes wide open. "Tell me more funny things about him."

"But you never will see a jump like that," Uncle Rob went on, "for you could hold the largest grasshopper in the world in your hand without much effort. The next time you see a grasshopper, look at his eyes. I think they are very queer."

"I've seen his eyes," said Dick. "There is one on each side of his head, just like anybody's."

"They aren't just like anybody's, though, Dick. Each of those eyes is made up of many, many small eyes, so tiny that you can't see them without a microscope. Besides those eyes, the grasshopper has three other very small eyes. These are more 'like anybody's eyes.' There is one small eye under each of those large eyes and one between them, just about where his nose would be if he were a boy."

"Oh, ho, an eye in the middle of his face," laughed Dick.

"But I know something about him that is queerer yet. He doesn't breathe through his nose and mouth, as you and I do. Instead, he has ten little holes on each side of his body through which he takes in air. These holes are very tiny, about as large as a needle point. But there are two larger holes, one on each side of the body and under the wings. Most sensible people wear their ears on their heads, and you would never guess that those holes down in the sides of 'Grasshopper Green's' body were his ears, unless I told you."

Dick laughed harder than ever.

"I'd like to see a grasshopper right now," he said. "I never knew they were so funny."

"The next time you come to my house we'll look at the 'comical chap' under my microscope," Uncle Rob promised.—Zion's Herald.

"STONEWALL'S" MOST IMPORTANT ORDER.

Perhaps the most important order that "Stonewall" Jackson ever issued—certainly the most vital to himself—is not in the official war records. The order was given in person by Jackson to a Northern artillery officer as he stood, in full uniform, ready for battle beside his gun, and—strangest of all!—was at once executed by him, with the result that the battle was lost by the Union forces.

It was on a spring morning in 1862, just before the battle of Port Republic. Jackson, in advance of his troops, with only a single escort, galloped across the bridge over the Shenandoah River into the town, which stood on the east bank. Learning that the army of General Shields was still a good many miles away, and confident that his own troops would be in possession long before the enemy, he rode to a residence at the farther end of the village, where he spent nearly an hour.

But meantime the energetic Shields—whom Jackson later declared to be his most formidable opponent—had thrust forward a small swift column to occupy Port Republic, seize the bridge, and halt Jackson's advance. So rapidly did it move that it gained both objects without firing a shot. More than that, Jackson was a prisoner—if anyone had known it!

Jackson, in utter ignorance of the disastrous change, mounted his horse, and ambled down the main street to the bridge. What was his astonishment to see groups of soldiers—in blue!—busily moving to and fro about the bridgehead, and throwing up intrenchments and fortifications. Planted on a little knoll that commanded the bridge and its approaches was a formidable field gun!

Fortunately for Jackson, the recent campaigns up and down the valley had faded both blue and gray uniforms into a nondescript drab. As Jackson sat on his horse and watched the busy scene he formed his plan swiftly. He could not go back; he must cross that bridge; that was his only chance. It was the frowning field gun that he feared. He must put it out of commission long enough to get beyond its range. Throwing up his hand to attract attention, he shouted to the officer in command of the gun:

"What are you doing with that gun up there? I didn't order it there, and I don't want it there!" There was authority and petulance in his voice as he added, "Limber up, and run it over on that knob over there!"

The officer at the gun, thinking that he had to deal with some superior officer recently arrived, hastened to obey without question, explaining in self-defense that he had understood his orders otherwise.

Sitting on Little Sorrel while the Federal troops worked busily about him, Jackson calmly waited until the gun was lumbering off to its new position. Then he rode quietly across the bridge, and up the other bank until he was well out of musket range. Then he turned, waved his hand to the astonished Federals, and, putting spurs to his horse, galloped away from the rain of bullets that pattered harmlessly in the rear.

Had he been captured, the Confederate victory at Port Republic which he won a few hours later would not have happened; the able and energetic Shields would have defeated his troops, stunned by his loss.—Youth's Companion.

A VALUABLE COLLECTION OF BUTTONS.

The heir of a man who recently died in Ghent, Belgium, received the mass of his fortune in a collection of buttons valued at $40,000.

This collection is interesting, for the buttons from all the regiments that have existed in France, from the archers of Charles VII to the Alpine chasseurs. The collection began with a button from the robe of Charlemagne, and ended with one taken from the uniform of Napoleon, and includes buttons of wood, glass, bone, ivory, lead, brass, zinc, silver, gold, emeralds, rubies and diamonds.—The Presbyterian.

WHAT IS CONTRABAND OF WAR?

The New York Tribune answers this question as follows:

"Of great interest to American shippers is the question of what cargoes may be safely shipped to belligerents. Confusion still exists in the definition of contraband goods, but thanks to the conference of London, held in 1903-'09, certain general probabilities can be laid down. Arms, ammunition, etc., are known as 'absolute contraband' and are liable to seizure when shipped by a neutral to the territory of a belligerent.

"Foodstuffs and fuel, clothing, gold, vessels, railway and telegraph equipment, balloons and flying machines and similar articles which can be used in warfare, but which are not necessarily so used, are termed 'conditional contraband.' They are subjected to capture only if it is shown that the goods are destined for the use of armed forces.

"Finally there is a considerable number of articles which cannot be regarded as contraband of war under any conditions. The list of goods exempt from seizure comprises such products as raw cotton and the other raw materials of the textile industries, raw hides, ores, paper, machinery and furniture."

AN INTERESTING EVENT.

Some two or three weeks ago mention was made in the Advocate of the unveiling of a portrait of President William McKinley, in the Westminster Central Hall of London, the new headquarters of Methodism in Great Britain, in which are being gathered pictures of distinguished Methodists from all over the world. The Methodist Times (London) reports that the exercises on this occasion were quite interesting, a large audience being present and Sir Robert Perks presiding. Some brief remarks were made by Mr. Perks and Mr. J. G. Butler, Jr., of Youngstown, Ohio, the donor of the portrait, after which the principal address was delivered by Mr. Page, the United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James. The picture of President McKinley, which is said to be an excellent likeness of him, was painted by Mr. C. C. Davis in 1893; it hangs near a portrait of the late Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. It was stated by the presiding officer that it is expected to have later a picture of General Grant, another Methodist President, in this growing collection. In the exordium of his able and appropriate address, Ambassador Page referred as follows to the work of the Methodists in the United States:

"It is an honor and a pleasure to take part in the placing of this portrait of a most distinguished and devoted member of the Methodist communion in the United States in this great house of Methodism in London. This communion has one of the two largest Protestant memberships in the United States; and since the visit of Wesley himself it has played a large, honorable and devoted part in American life. There is hardly a town in the whole vast continental area of the Republic but has its Methodist church; and throughout the rural parts of the Union there are found in most neighborhoods country churches that have been, and are, the centers of the community life and the builders of character; country churches that are served by the circuit-riders who come with their message of hope and of warning one Sunday a month, if not more. In the early days of the Republic there were no braver or truer or more helpful men than the traveling Methodist preachers. They had the heroic quality of pioneers and the religious zeal of missionaries. The debt of American civilization and character to these men, like all debts that society owes to its great leaders, is incalculable."

"The Church that played this honorable and helpful part in the early period of our national life naturally planted itself firmly in the land and in the hearts of the people; and its vast membership of to-day and its corresponding great influence for good have naturally followed. If by its organization and zeal it was peculiarly fitted for a pioneer period, by its zeal and vigor it is quite as well suited to serve the people of our own time; and many of the sturdiest family stocks in the United States have held to its communion generation after generation."

THE DEATH OF MRS. WILSON.

The death of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, which occurred at the White House on the afternoon of August 6, was a shock to the entire Nation. Though she had been in failing health for several months, the private affairs of the President's family had been intruded upon the public attention so little that it was not known to the people generally that she was ill until a day or two before the regrettable end came. This was the third time in our history that death has claimed the wife of the country's Chief Magistrate, the other two being when Mrs. John Tyler died in 1841, and Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, in 1891.

Mrs. Wilson was a Southern woman and the daughter of a Presbyterian minister, the Rev. Samuel Edward Arson, much of whose ministry was spent in Georgia. She was born in Savannah and educated in the Woman's College at Rome, in that State. It was while she was studying at the Art Students' League in New York City that she met Woodrow Wilson, then a young lawyer, and the acquaintance which ripened into love and matrimony began. The wedding took place in the old home of her parents in Savannah, and of her husband's father, who also was a Presbyterian clergyman.

Mrs. Wilson was a woman of gifted intellect, was fond of painting and poetry, and always took a deep interest in the work of her husband, whether literary, professorial, or political. Mr. Wilson dedicated his well known volume, "The State," to her and acknowledges his indebtedness to her for assistance while writing it. In the White House she met the many onerous duties devolving upon her with consummate tact and was fully equal to all occasions. She was a student of public affairs and quietly exerted her influence for the relief of human suffering and poverty, without joining the ranks of the woman suffragists. Even in her closing hours she was much concerned about the legislation pending in Congress for the betterment of conditions in the Washington slums. Faithful as a wife, mother, woman and Christian, she wrought well, and has gone to her grave widely and sincerely mourned. The President and his family have the sympathy of the American people, regardless of party or creed, in their sore bereavement.

LET OTHERS DO LIKEWISE.

The letter to Bishop Candler from a young Alabamian which appears on another page in this issue of the Advocate certainly has the right ring. If our people generally were actuated by a like spirit, we could soon have in operation in Atlanta a university second to none in the Nation. And why should they not be? This is undoubtedly a time of crisis in our educational work, and the exigency of the situation should appeal strongly to every Southern Methodist who loves his Church. Our denomination can not prosper and successfully fulfill its great mission in the world without well equipped and endowed educational institutions which she owns and controls. For proof of this one only needs to read the history of the various Churches of Christendom. Yet the right of Southern Methodism to a place in the field of education has been challenged by a man who acknowledges allegiance to no Church and the influence of his hoarded money has been used to aid in wresting from her the largest of her schools.

The question that now squarely confronts us is, shall this blow struck by infidel hand against the cause of Christian education leave the educational forces of our Church shattered, weakened, and disorganized, or will the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South rise up and repair the injury done? We have no doubt what the answer of our people to this question will be. The splendid showing already made toward the establishment of another university within the past two months foreshadows the meeting of this grave crisis in a manner that will form one of the brightest chapters in the annals of our denomination.

But this task of re-arranging and strengthening our educational system has only been fairly started. The larger part of the work still remains to be done; $500,000 having been set aside for the Theological School of the new University, only about $1,000,000 of the funds already secured is available for the other departments. The various buildings needed are all yet to be erected. Not less than $2,000,000 more should be forthcoming at the earliest day possible. Every man, woman, and child among us should lend a helping hand in this great undertaking, upon which so much depends. We trust that the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi will do their full share toward the promotion of this absolutely necessary enterprise. There are quite a number who ought to give thousands; many more who ought to give hundreds, and there are none who ought not to give something. Small as well as large gifts are desired and will be appreciated. The reason that the Roman Catholic Church can achieve such financial triumphs is that all her communicants, rich and poor, are contributors to her treasury. It is high time that we were learning the same valuable lesson.

We should be happy to know that many in our patronizing territory have forwarded to Bishop Candler donations to the new university and have taken their places alongside the worthy young Alabamian, who has spoken so admirably and set such a good example. We trust it shall prove to be the case that he is but a pioneer in a general rally of our people that shall soon embrace hundreds of thousands. For our part, we expect to practice what we preach by giving what we can. The call is alike to clergy and to laity. In our opinion, the building and equipment of these two new universities at Atlanta and Dallas is for us the most imperative duty of the hour—the task to which we should first set our hands. Let our answer to Mr. Carnegie's challenge be such a piling up of our offerings for these two enterprises as shall find no parallel in the records of American philanthropy. Thus may we refute the sneer that all that can be expected of the Church is the maintenance of "poor little colleges," struggling for existence.

REV. R. B. NORSWORTHY TRANSLATED.

The death of Rev. Robert B. Norsworthy, which, as will be seen in the statement from the pen of Rev. N. B. Harmon appearing upon another page, occurred at Yazoo City, Miss., on the afternoon of August 13, will be widely and sincerely mourned in South Mississippi. He had been in declining health for several months, and it had been evident for some weeks that he could not survive much longer. It was not our privilege to be personally acquainted with the deceased, but we have known of him almost from our boyhood. He was a faithful minister of Jesus Christ who freely spent his strength to extend the Master's kingdom and who has left behind an unsullied and highly creditable record. For many years he was one of the leading ministers of his Conference and filled a number of its most responsible appointments. Everywhere he made proof of his high calling and won the confidence and esteem of the people. He had been a superannuate for several years, but continued to feel a deep interest in the work and success of the Church. As the shadows of earth thickened about him, the future seemed to become increasingly radiant. His was the path that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. What a splendid demonstration is the career of such a man of the truthfulness of the words of the great Apostle: "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come!"

But we must leave to other hands the task of paying a fitting tribute to this worthy veteran who has fought the good fight, kept the faith, and gone to receive his reward. We trust that some one who was close to him and who loved him will perform this service for the Church in the near future. We extend to the bereaved our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously comfort and sustain them.

THE EUROPEAN WAR SITUATION.

The scene of the great conflict in Europe is so veiled in secrecy that it is impossible to tell what is really happening. So far there do not seem to have been any decisive engagements of much magnitude. The most significant development of the past few days has been the extension of the war area. Portugal has cast her lot with England, France, and Russia, and Japan has made demands upon Germany that will likely set cannons to booming in the Far East. Turkey and Greece are also snarling at each other and there is no telling what a day may bring forth. In the United States sentiment has generally been against Germany, because, whether justly so or not, there has been a prevailing disposition to blame her for the outbreak of the present terrible strife. There is a possibility that this feeling may change, however, as a result of Japan's course, unless England should disclaim any responsibility for the action of her oriental ally. So far, the meager dispatches have almost universally chronicled German reverses, but it is well to remember that these messages have been coming chiefly from London, Paris, and Brussels. We scarcely think it is possible for Germany and Austria to come off victorious with such an array of enemies to combat, and we are inclined to the view that they do not deserve to win; but when the curtain lifts there is no telling what disclosures it may make. All the indications are that the bloodiest and most terrific struggle of the ages is impending. The day of the Evil One seems to have dawned; but let us remember that God is still on his throne, and that he "moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

CALLED TO THE CHURCH TRIUMPHANT.

On Wednesday, August 12, after our paper had gone to press, we received from Rev. E. Nash Broyles, our pastor at Durant, Miss., a telegram announcing the sudden death of Sister Shipman, the wife of Rev. W. S. Shipman, presiding elder of the Durant District, which took place on the preceding evening. We have since received a somewhat fuller statement concerning this sad occurrence which we are publishing in this issue of the Advocate.

Our heart goes out in the tenderest sympathy to Brother Shipman and the other members of his stricken family in this sorrowful and trying hour. But they are not without much to comfort them in their sore bereavement, for the ascended wife and mother possessed a beautiful Christian character and there is not the slightest doubt, though it came unexpectedly, that she was ready for the Master's summons.

Sister Shipman was formerly Miss Smylie, of Meridian, Miss., where she was noted for her consecration and usefulness before she became connected with the Methodist itinerancy. She met splendidly the many and varied responsibilities of a minister's wife, and in that capacity exercised in many parts of North Mississippi an influence for good that will long abide. We trust that a more extended account of the life of this choice servant of the Master will be furnished the Advocate at an early date. Her body was laid to rest at Meridian, Miss., to await the resurrection of those who sleep in Jesus.

THE BLINDING INFLUENCE OF SIN.

One of the most terrible things about sin is that it darkens the moral understanding and leaves one, so to speak, largely color blind as to what is right and wrong. This is the reason that worldly minded persons are unable to discern the harmfulness of many of their practices. About the first work that the Holy Spirit has to do in effecting the salvation of a lost human soul is to clarify its vision, that it may realize its true condition. This is what we call "conviction." And even among Christians the clearness of their spiritual perception is in proportion to the depth of their piety. The Master said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God;" and Paul's wonderful prayer for the disciples at Ephesus contained the following petition: "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the greatness of His power to usward who believe." Men and women of spiritual sight have been the need of the Church in all the ages, and never was the call for them more imperative than it is to-day.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. V. D. Skipper, of Tallulah, La., assisted Rev. W. T. Woodward in a meeting at Sicily Island last week.

Rev. N. E. Joyner delivered an address on Mexico in our Church at Biloxi, Miss., last Sunday. His message was an informing and impressive one.

Rev. W. W. Graves, of Lake, Miss., says: "I have just closed a fine revival meeting at Conehatta, Miss. I will write you more fully concerning it at a later date."

Now is the time to introduce the Advocate into the homes of your people, brother pastor. You now have the opportunity of giving it to them for six months for 50 cents.

The Magnolia Gazette of August 12 says: "Rev. J. A. Moore, pastor of the Methodist Church at this place, is engaged in a revival meeting this week at the Adams Campground."

Rev. A. H. Williams, our energetic pastor at Shannon, Miss., is conducting a meeting at Troy, one of his appointments, this week. We trust that his labors will be crowned with a large measure of success.

Rev. A. D. George has recently conducted a very successful meeting at the Little Creek Church on the Mangum charge. Brother Barr is regarded as one of our most consecrated and energetic pastor-evangelists.

Dr. Franklin N. Parker, of Trinity College, N. C., who is resting at the Seashore Campground for a few days, preached in the tabernacle at that place last Sunday morning and evening. It is needless to say that his discourses were strong and helpful.

Dr. Fitzgerald Parker, of Nashville, Tenn., is spending a few days in New Orleans, having come to the city to secure medical treatment for his little sons. He called at the Advocate office last Tuesday, but the Editor, much to his regret, was out and missed seeing him.

We are grateful to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgement has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. H. Holder, Okolona, Miss., 3; Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, Houma, La., 2; Rev. J. H. Grice, Gloster, Miss., 16.

Brother pastors, have you preached the "sermon on Christian education" this quarter? The Discipline of the Church requires this, and who knows how many of our young people might be influenced to attend our Church school by your persuasion?

Bishop E. E. Hoss was scheduled to dedicate the Methodist Church at Pontotoc, Miss., of which Rev. W. D. Wendel is pastor, last Sunday. We have been much pleased lately with the reports that have reached us concerning the state of the Bishop's health, which is reported to be much improved.

In the absence in New Orleans of Dr. Reumie, who serves as pastor the Episcopalians of Mandeville, La., Dr. J. T. Sawyer by request preached in his stead, it being Episcopal day in the Protestant Church at that place. He was greeted by a good congregation and states that he enjoyed preaching the Word.

The following dispatch from Starkville, Miss., appeared in the Jackson Daily News of August 15: "The many friends of Mrs. D. A. Saunders who, with her son and daughter, left for Europe several months ago, will be pleased to learn that they are in Switzerland and safe. They will return home in a short time."

In addition to his regular work as pastor in Rayville, La., Rev. A. Inman Townsley has established a number of new preaching places in schoolhouses near the town. Several meetings will be held and perhaps some churches organized. This disposition to push out into new fields is much to be commended.

We are informed that Rev. H. T. Young, who has been serving the Texas Avenue Church of Shreveport, has been transferred to Arcadia, La., to succeed the Rev. Hayes Howell, who some weeks ago was relieved of that pastorate. We have not heard at this writing who will be Brother Young's successor at Texas Avenue.

In giving us a list of subscribers from his charge, Rev. W. F. Rogers, of Sallis, Miss., makes the following reference to his work: "Everything is moving on well. We have had some fine meetings. We are to have a union tent meeting at Sallis, beginning on the fifth Sunday in August. Rev. J. B. Culpepper will do the preaching."

Rev. K. W. Dodson continues to accomplish things worth while in his pastorate at Lake Charles, La. He says: "Our congregations hold up well. Last Sunday night (August 9) we had one of the largest audiences that we have had in two years. We have received about 145 members since Conference, and the indications are that every assessment will be paid in full."

The Methodists, Presbyterians, and Campbellites of Nettleton, Miss., have lately united in a union revival at that place, as it has been their custom to do for a number of years. It was the time of the Methodists to furnish the preacher and they secured the services of Dr. J. W. Hill of Texas, who is said to have done some most superior pulpit work.

We have on our table a copy of the Church Extension Hand Book for 1914. This publication has been measuring up to a high standard for a number of years, but in our judgment the present one is the best that Dr. McMurtry has yet issued. It contains nearly 500 pages, and is finely illustrated and brimful of interesting matter. If you haven't seen it, write for a copy.

We have been requested to state that the Palmer Creek Camp Meeting, near Wortham, Miss., will begin on August 28 and continue ten days. The general public is cordially invited to attend and all preachers will be entertained free and given their transportation from the railroad and back again. Persons coming from a distance should get off the train at Wortham, which is on the Gulf and Ship Island Railway.

Mrs. Crow Girard, in a communication to the Publisher, expresses a high appreciation of the recent Woman's Missionary Edition of the Advocate, and states that an effort is being made to extend the paper's circulation in Lafayette, where Rev. H. N. Harrison is the popular pastor. Mrs. Girard is one of the most active missionary workers in the Louisiana Conference and we are grateful for her encouraging words.

Read Bishop W. B. Murrah's admirable utterance concerning our new university, which appears in this issue of the Advocate. It is timely and to the point. No member of the Episcopal College has a clearer judgment or weighs his statements more carefully than Bishop Murrah, and what he says may always be accepted without the least reservation or hesitancy. And when he talks or writes it is invariably in such English as but few can command.

Dr. Plato T. Durham, of North Carolina, has been chosen Dean of the Theological Faculty of the new University. This is an admirable choice. One of the encouraging things about the professors in this department of our new school is that most of them are not mere theorists, but are men who know how to do successful work in the itinerancy. This is as it should be, but it is a good deal more than can be said for the instructors in some theological seminaries that we could mention.

We acknowledge the reception of an invitation to the marriage of Mr. Frank West Ellis and Miss Pearl Calhoun, which will take place in the Methodist Church at Mt. Olive, Miss., on Sept. 3, 1914, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. Miss Calhoun is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Calhoun, and is a most attractive and estimable young lady. The prospective groom, who is a young man of promise, is the youngest son of Rev. G. R. Ellis, of Seminary, Miss., an esteemed member of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

Mr. A. Trimble, of Natchez, Miss., in ordering us to continue to him the Advocate, says: "This is my 25th annual subscription. I began taking the paper when I was married in the spring of 1890, and during all these years it has been a most welcome visitor. I look forward with pleasure to its arrival every week." We appreciate the continued patronage of this long-time friend of the Advocate, as well as his kindly words of encouragement, and pray God's richest blessings upon him in his life and work.

In a personal note to the Editor, written from Centreville, Miss., on August 12, Mrs. R. F. Harrell, among other things, says: "We are in the midst of a union revival meeting here which is being participated in by the Methodists and Presbyterians. The preaching is being done by Dr. Caldwell, of Hazlehurst, and we are having some deeply spiritual sermons. We trust that the Church members will be quickened and strengthened, and that those who know not the Savior will find him ere these services shall come to a close."

Writing from Waynesville, N. C., under date of August 13, Mrs. V. R. McDonald, a daughter of Brother and Sister J. A. Randolph, says: "This is to inform you that we are changing our address again. We will leave in a few days for Tutwiler, Miss. There is a splendid missionary program on at Lake Junaluska now and they are planning for a great Bible conference next week." From the first part of the foregoing statement we infer that Dr. Randolph, who was graduated from the Medical Department of Tulane University last June, has either located at Tutwiler for the practice of his profession, or that he is contemplating doing so.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, passed through New Orleans last Friday, enroute to Franklinton, La., one of his appointments. While waiting for his train in the city, he dropped in on us at the Advocate office and we had the pleasure of fellowshiping with him for a brief season. He reported his work as progressing favorably and had many kind things to say of his fellow-laborers in his diocese. As an evidence of the development that is being made in the Baton Rouge District, Brother Bowman stated that there would be a demand for four additional ministers within its bounds next year.

Rev. C. A. Battle, of New Orleans, has informed us that his father in Georgia has received a cablegram from his brother, Prof. B. D. Battle, who sailed from here on June 6 for Germany with a view to studying at Heidelberg, to the effect that he had safely crossed over into England, landing at London, and that he is now at Oxford University. Prof. Battle taught in Centenary College during the last session and has many friends in Louisiana who will be pleased to know he is away from the theater of the great European war, and that, though his plans have been interfered with, he will have the privilege of pursuing his studies at one of Great Britain's most renowned seats of letters.

Rev. C. C. Gibson, of Biloxi, Miss., who is pastor of the Coalville charge, was in New Orleans last Friday and paid our office an appreciated call. He has been to Hammond, La., where his father-in-law, Mr. C. C. Foote, is seriously ill and at whose bedside he had left Sister Gibson. Brother Foote came South from Illinois many years ago and resided for a time at McComb, Miss. He has been living in Hammond for about sixteen years, where he has been an active and useful member of our Church. He is advanced in years and grave fears are entertained that he may not survive the present attack. Let our readers remember this faithful servant of the Master and the anxious loved ones at the throne of grace.

From the Bossier (La.) Banner of August 13, we take the following: "Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Parker, who have for a week or so past been visiting a son residing near Linton, are guests this week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Smith. Old friends here in Benton had the pleasure Sunday of hearing the aged Dr. Parker, formerly resident minister, preach. He and Mrs. Parker refer to Mansfield as their home, but spend the greater part of their time in going from place to place visiting their several children. Recently he visited the site in Alabama where fifty years ago he and Dr. Oscar Dowling's father held a series of services in a log school house, light being furnished at night by placing the ends of lighted pine splinters in the cracks of the building. On this visit he found a town of 25,000 population, boasting of a $60,000 church as a place of worship. Thus does time add its monuments to the cause of progress and Christianity."

THAT BOY OF YOURS.

What kind of a man will he be ten, twenty, thirty years from now? You know, every parent knows, that it depends entirely upon the training he is getting right now, his associations, his ideals, his inspirations.

Mr. Robert K. Morgan, principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee, has been training boys for twenty-five years. He wants your boy. He recognizes in him one of the men who may some day manage big affairs, and he wants to train him for that end. His school has been built and equipped and his instructors chosen with the first and only consideration of giving the boy the mental and physical training, the association with clean, high-minded men, the ideals of character, the inspirations to ambition, which the world expects in the men to whom it entrusts its greatest affairs, be they business, professional, religious or social.

Robert K. Morgan is a Christian gentleman of strong, wholesome, inspiring personality, and his school is the material projection of that character. He is a graduate of Webb School, Bellbuckle, Tenn., and of Vanderbilt University.

The boy deserves your most careful thought. Write Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee, to-day, and let him send you a catalogue and tell you what this school can do for your boy.—Advertisement.

Mrs. N. E. WRIGHT was born in Wilkinson, Miss., on April 3, 1837, and died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. M. Nugent, in Alexandria, La., on June 10, 1914. Grandmother Wright joined the Methodist Church in her girlhood days and in her young womanhood she was married to Mr. Stephens. Of this union was born one sweet little daughter who was destined to be the comfort and stay of her mother in her declining years. The father lived but a short while, when God called him home and Sister Stephens was left alone in the world with little Birtie. A few years later Sister Stephens, hoping to gain comfort and protection from the hardships of a widow's lot, married Mr. Wright, who lived but a short time, and Sister Wright was again left a widow. She moved to Pineville, La., in the early 70's, taught a private school for a time, and all the while plied her needle to help support herself and little Birtie. In due time the little daughter grew to womanhood, and was married to Mr. J. M. Nugent. From this time forward Sister Wright made her home with her daughter; and for the past 17 years she had been an invalid, being almost helpless. She bore her afflictions with patience and fortitude. Her greatest regret was leaving her daughter, who is now a widow, but by a kind Providence had been amply able to care for her dear old invalid mother. As the innocent babe falls asleep in its mother's arms with a sweet smile on its face, so Grandmother Wright fell asleep in Jesus.

A FRIEND.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas God in his mysterious providence has taken to Himself our beloved co-laborer, Miss Mary Lawrence, therefore be it resolved:

1. That in the death of this estimable lady the Woman's Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, at Houghton, La., has lost one of its most active and devoted members, the Church a faithful member, and the Sunday school an efficient teacher.

2. That while we bow in humble submission to the will of Him that doeth all things well, we do sincerely mourn the great loss we have sustained.

3. That this Auxiliary tenders its heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved loved ones, and prays that God will comfort them in their sorrow.

4. That these resolutions be entered on the minutes of this Auxiliary; be published in the Bossier Banner, and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy be sent the family of our deceased sister.

Signed: Mrs. W. B. Hickman, Mrs. J. E. Wyche, Mrs. T. R. Tomlinson, Miss Mattie Brown, Committee.

RESOLUTION.

(Adopted by the Missionary Society of the Baker M. E. Church, South.)

Whereas, God in his wisdom and love removed from our midst the soul of our beloved sister and Corresponding Secretary, Miss Em Carney, and

Whereas, we the members of the Baker Auxiliary have sustained an irreparable loss in the death of our faithful Secretary, who was ever mindful of the sacred duties that were confided to her care; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of this Auxiliary, extend to her sorrowing family our heartfelt sympathy in this hour of their affliction and trust that the knowledge of her devoted life will in a measure assuage the grief with which their hearts are filled.

2. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the family of the deceased and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. N. B. Brown, Mrs. L. H. Eubanks, Addie Williams, Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Many hearts were saddened when on July 31, Miss Maggie Lee Fennell, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. F. M. Fennell of Holy Springs, Miss., fell into that "blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep." By the death of her father in the epidemic of 1878, she was left in earliest childhood the sole comfort of a saddened mother. As she grew into girlhood, fond of music, flowers and books, she had no taste for gay society, finding her pleasures in her home and in the Church of which she early became a member. Her seat was never vacant at any service, and now her voice will be missed from the choir, her flowers from the altar, her presence in the Sunday school, as will the willing hands ever ready for the Master's work. Spending the past winter on the Southern coast, she was much impressed by the need of missions in that section, and earnestly engaged in the work being done by her Church for the improvement of conditions among the people. As a friend, she was loyal, just and kind, and held a favored position in her circle of friends. As a daughter, in her tender, unselfish devotion to an aged mother, she was a beautiful example and her life, seemingly merged into that of her mother, brightened their home with the sunshine of a cheerful, contented spirit.

In a long and painful illness she often said, "Do not grieve, mother; my only regret is in leaving you. God knows best, and it cannot be long until you will follow." On August 2, her funeral was held at the Methodist Church which she had so loved. Her piano, a parting gift to the church, was used by the choir. As we turned from the cemetery, leaving beneath a flower-heaped mound the body of this earnest Christian woman and devoted daughter, a wave of sympathy swept over those present for the desolate mother whose loss is irreparable.

MARTIN LUTHER KNIGHT, M.D.

Our home has received with great sorrow tidings of the death of Dr. Martin Luther Knight of Hazlehurst, Miss. The memory of scenes of anxiety and suffering in which this beloved physician was our friend came rushing back, bringing a distinct sense of personal loss. Dr. Knight was born on May 17, 1860, in a devout Methodist home of which his own life was always a bright reflection. While a medical student at Tulane University he joined, 23 years ago, our Carondelet Street Church in New Orleans and to the service of Methodism he gave a life of singular purity, generosity, kindness, and affection. His memory in our home will always be blessed, for he touched us for good and reminded us of the Great Physician. He had been with Jesus.

On Nov. 4, 1896, he was married to Miss Ida Myers, who now, with one young son, sits in the shadow of one of life's greatest sorrows. Jealous for the time-honored institutions of the Church, proud of her history, true to her leadership, Dr. Knight was a Methodist of that type, all too infrequently met, which delights a pastor's heart.

Death came to our friend suddenly at the close of Sunday, July 12, 1914; but without doubt he was ready and answered this call with the same cheerful obedience he had answered so many others. At the close of his day of labor he, like a tired child, lay down to sleep to awake in the sunshine of a better land. Think not of him as dead. Live to meet him in the sweet bye and bye and in the meanwhile dare to write over his grave even what was said of his Lord, "He went about doing good."

Tidings From the Field

Darbonne, La.

We have just closed one of the best protracted meetings ever held at Darbonne Church. Sinners were convicted and converted, backsliders reclaimed, and members of the Church were revived so that many stood up and testified to a brighter, stronger faith, while some shouted and glorified God. Rev. W. T. Currie did the preaching, assisted by Rev. A. J. Coburn, and Sister Coburn helped in the singing and prayer. Brother Currie preached 17 sermons or more with great power. We do not believe that his preaching can be surpassed. It was the best preaching we have had in this community, or in Vernon Parish in ten years or longer. Much good has been done whereof we are glad.—J. J. Futrell.

Myrtle, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are having a great meeting at Myrtle this week. I have with me Rev. Lee M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, and Mr. I. N. Price, an evangelistic singer, both of whom are bringing soul-stirring messages in sermon and song at every service. All the services are largely attended and much good is being accomplished. I will give a fuller report later. Brother Price has ten days, from September 3 to 13, which he would be glad to give to any of the brethren desiring his assistance. Address him at Byhalla, Miss., after August 22; prior to that time at Myrtle, Miss. As a consecrated man and efficient, spiritual and talented singer, Brother Price ranks high, and any one securing his services will be fortunate.—E. H. Cunningham.

Pleasant Ridge, Miss.

Dear Editor: I have just closed a meeting at old Pleasant Ridge Church, in Copiah County, Miss., which was in many respects the best meeting held there in many years. Rev. M. L. White of Flora, Miss., did the preaching in power and demonstration of the Spirit. His expositions of the Scripture were clear and sound, and his illustrations practical and forceful. There was a deep interest manifested by the congregation, from the beginning, and all are anxious for Brother White to come again. The visible results are, 9 accessions to the Church, 10 children baptized and 16 subscriptions taken for the Advocate. We expect great results from this meeting, for a wave of interest and enthusiasm was set in motion that will not soon die.

At Matthew's Chapel, where the pastor held the meeting, we had 1 accession and secured 4 subscriptions for the Advocate.—J. H. Grice, P. C.

Calhoun, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: Thinking it may be of interest, I will give the Advocate a brief report of my work in the Calhoun charge. We began our revival campaign at Pine Grove, an afternoon appointment, on the first Sunday in July. Your humble scribe did the preaching, and the people say that the services were a success. We did not have any accessions, but the Church was revived and strengthened.

We commenced our meeting at Downsville on the second Sunday (July 12). Rev. F. R. Power, of Shreveport, came to us on Monday night and did the preaching until the meeting closed. He is good help in a revival. The measles was scattered through the surrounding country, keeping many away, and we discontinued the services on Friday night, as the Baptist meeting was to begin on Saturday night, but the attendance was good, our membership was spiritually quickened, and we had two additions. The people gave Brother Power a very nice purse as an expression of their appreciation of his work among them, and when our quarterly conference met at Downsville on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July, Downsville reported more quarterage than any other church on the charge.—On Sunday, July 19, at 11 a. m., we opened up a series of services at Douglas, assisted by Rev. W. T. Woodward, of Sicily Island, who reached us in time for the Monday evening service and continued with us through the following Sabbath. It goes without saying that the preaching was well done, for all who know Woodward know that he can preach. He won the hearts of our people at Douglas, as Power did at Downsville. This meeting was a success in many ways. The congregations were large, nearly filling the house in the day time and overflowing it at night; the behavior was good, and we had 17 accessions and baptized 9 infants. At the suggestion of Brother Woodward the people made the pastor a present of a Jersey cow and calf, for which he is truly thankful. (We are now having plenty of fine milk and butter). Here, too, a nice purse was given Brother Woodward, and besides this Douglas stood next to Downsville in its financial report to the quarterly conference.

At Beulah (a new church organized by Brother Grice), where the Methodist Protestants also have a church, and the house of worship is a union one, we decided to hold a joint meeting. Brother Terry, the M. P. pastor, and I did the preaching. We had good attendance and excellent attention. Here we did something before unheard of in these parts: at the close of the meeting each of the two Churches raised the balance due its pastor on his salary.—Our meeting at Wilhite was begun on the first Sunday in August and continued for a week. The people attended in large numbers, some being unable to get in the house at the evening services. There were 23 accessions on profession of faith. On the last night I preached from I Peter V, 8; and had 19 to join the Church, the largest class I have ever seen join at once. I also baptized 14 infants. At the close of the meeting the people raised for the pastor $25 in cash, and a subscription of $18.90, which is due to be paid by our next preaching day at that point.—On the entire charge, I have received 43 into the Church this year on profession of faith, and have baptized 27 infants. So, we are pressing the work the best we know how. Pray for us. We yet have two meetings to hold: one at Calhoun, and one at Walnut Lane.—B. H. Bamberg, P. C.

IT REMOVES THINGS.

"Alcohol," says an exchange, "will remove stains from summer clothes." That is true, but it also removes the summer clothes, as well as those of the spring, the autumn, and the winter, not only from the one who drinks it, but also from his wife and family. It removes the household furniture, the eatables from the pantry, the smiles from the face of his wife, the laugh from the innocent lips of the children and the happiness of his home. As a remover of things, alcohol has no equal.—Boy's World.

AT SHANNON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our first revival meeting for 1914 has just been finished at Shannon. "Not so many go to the meetings here," it was whispered: but splendid congregations attended from the first unto the finish, and the occasion is mentioned as the best of the kind ever occurring in Shannon. Dr. H. G. Henderson, of Lexington, Miss., assisted, and his sermons graded among the best of pulpit deliverance, and the services were exceedingly helpful to all who attended. The results in this last particular were impressively remarkable, and the Divine presence was evident in the general community, and at every coming together at the Church.

The large choir rendered earnest and useful service, and the Lexington pastor many times, in the work of his sermons approached the Himalayan heights of the finest ministerial oratory. Not from effort to display, but as a result of solicitude and special gifts and equipment for the class of service to which he is called and committed. Genuine hospitality prevailed and all the Churches of the town took good interest and were helped by the services. Eleven names were announced for church membership, and eight were baptized, with some others to be received. Much good will long linger at Shannon, as a consequence of the earnest service rendered "in His name."—A. H. Williams.

FROM THE SICILY ISLAND CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just closed a meeting at Oak Grove Church, which was built when Brother W. L. Hamilton was the pastor here 25 years ago. Brother H. M. Honeycutt, of Rayville, La., did most of the preaching. He did fine work and my people liked him very much. I can heartily recommend him. We had 14 additions to our Church—My meeting here at Sicily Island closed just preceding this one. Brother V. D. Skipper did the principal part of the preaching. It goes without saying, that it was well done. Brother Honeycutt and myself both preached several times in this meeting. Ten persons united with the Church—My meeting was held at old Pine Hill Church just one month ago. Brother J. F. Waltman, of Gilbert, did the preaching for me. He is splendid help in a meeting. Any brother needing assistance will make no mistake in getting him. We had 10 to join at this church, all by profession of faith, making 34 in the three meetings held.—W. T. Woodward.

DECATUR AND UNION (MISS. CONF.)

We recently closed our revival campaign on this charge with very encouraging results. Brother Dan Kelly, our Conference evangelist, was with us at Decatur for ten days following a few days of special prayer services. He certainly preached in power and demonstration of the Spirit and large congregations waited upon his ministry. The entire community was moved in an unwonted manner, there were many professions of definite religious experience, and 24 names were added to the Church roll—nearly all on profession of faith.

At Union we were ably assisted for eight days by Rev. T. J. Norworthy, of Yazoo City, whose forceful preaching was greatly blessed of God in strengthening the religious life of the place. Interest in the meeting grew from the first service to the last. We were compelled by providential circumstances to close the meeting sooner than we otherwise should have done, and therefore feel that the visible results were not as great as they might have been if we could have continued a little longer. A large number testified to having been blessed during the meeting, and 13 united with the Church.

Brother Otto Porter, an excellent young minister and song leader, of Rose Hill, Miss., was with us in both of these meetings, conducting the music. His consecrated life and efficient service contributed largely to the success achieved.

The people of this charge are worthy of special mention because of their kindly thoughtfulness of the pastor and his family. It is almost a daily experience that remembrances of a substantial character are received from friends in and around Decatur, and Union capped the climax on the last day of our meeting there by "pounding" us to the amount of 450 pounds, made up of "various and sundry" things, from chocolate candy to salt and lard, and from dress patterns, toilet soaps, fruits and jellies of all kinds to umbrellas. Long may these people wave and never waver. Such treatment as this, in the language of Bud Robinson, "makes a fellow want to live to be about 110 years old." Our earnest desire and prayer is that we may ever live and preach as becometh a true minister of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Reader, pray for us.—W. A. Hays.

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL.
That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fall down. Mrs. S. E. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." 50c at druggists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

A BLESSING FROM HEAVEN.

In this money-mad day so many remedies are being offered the public that it is extremely difficult to find the right one. When we do find such, it is like a blessing from heaven. If you suffer from boils, bruises, burns, old sores, abscesses, carbuncles, poison oak and the like, waste neither time nor money in experimenting with other remedies, but get a box of Gray's Ointment at once, an old reliable remedy which originated in 1820. For the purposes mentioned it has no equal. To test its value before you buy, write Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., for a Free Sample postpaid. 25c at druggists.

DR. J. W. HILL AT NETTLETON.

Dear Dr. Meek: Rev. J. W. Hill, D.D., of the North Texas Conference, is here according to an agreement made some months ago. He has been preaching for us for more than ten days, and he will continue until next Sunday night, and maybe longer. We have never seen his like. Deeply spiritual, a man of wide and comprehensive information, he preaches a gospel that lifts men up and brings them closer to Christ. He is preaching to the largest crowds that we have ever seen assembled in this country. He is really and truly a great preacher. He discusses the great fundamentals of the Christian religion, and does it in such a way that even a child can understand and appreciate him. Great crowds from the country come in to hear him, something we have not had heretofore in our union meetings. Pray for us.

J. A. LOWE.

Nettleton, Miss., Aug. 17.

A LETTER FROM OKLAHOMA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I wish to express my appreciation for the work that is being done through the Advocate by you and your faithful corps of assistants. My paper reaches me every Saturday morning and is always read with a great deal of pleasure. It is through its columns that I keep in touch with the doings of the Mississippi Conference. This is of special interest to me, since the greater portion of my life was spent in that State.

Owing to having exhausted my resources, it became necessary that I should quit college (Millsaps) last fall. And knowing that the home Conference was crowded, I came out here and joined the West Oklahoma Conference. I have never regretted this move. This is a great country, and it is settled by a good people to labor among.

I would advise other young preachers of Mississippi and Louisiana to investigate the opportunities offered by these Western Conferences before joining a Conference that is already uncomfortably crowded.

This section of the State is a high, dry and fertile prairie. The crops of wheat, corn (and other feedstuffs), and cotton has been excellent here for several years. However, the farmers are rapidly impoverishing the soil by clean cultivation and by burning all trash, thereby destroying all materials for forming humus in the soil. And it is well known that this humus is an absolute necessity to the successful growing of crops in any soil.

The Southern Methodist Church is doing a good work in this part of the State. Along by our side is the M. E. Church, which is doing everything in its power to hold its own with the other denominations.

The error here seems to be too many churches. Every religious organization imaginable has its representatives and in many places the houses of worship are more numerous than the worshippers.

The M. E. Church, South, has a good $2500 church building here, of which I am pastor. We have about one hundred members, but our congregations usually greatly exceed this.

Continuing to watch your pages, and praying the Master's richest blessings upon you in your efforts, I am

Your brother in Him.

CLEVELAND REGAN.
Grandfield, Okla., Aug. 15.

KEEP THE BALANCE UP.

It has been truthfully said that any disturbance of the even balance of health causes serious trouble. Nobody can be too careful to keep this balance up. When people begin to lose appetite, or to get tired easily, the least imprudence brings on sickness, weakness or debility. The system needs a tonic, craves it, and should not be denied it; and the best tonic of which we have any knowledge is Hood's Sarsaparilla. What this medicine has done keeping healthy people healthy, in keeping up the even balance of health, gives it the same distinction as a preventive that it enjoys as a cure. Its early use has illustrated the wisdom of the old saying that a stitch in time saves nine. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla for appetite, strength, and endurance.—Adv.

OLD-TIME REMEDY MAKES PURE BLOOD

Purify your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has been and still is the people's medicine because of its reliable character and its wonderful success in the treatment of the common diseases and ailments—scrofula, catarrh, rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, that tired feeling, general debility.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been tested forty years. Get it today.

CLUB SAVED THIS MEMBER $150

The Management of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club has received a letter from one of its old members who selected the Ludden & Bates Self-Player-Piano. He describes the instrument as "The Prince of Home Entertainers" and continues as follows:

"After investigating two other makes during a recent visit to New York, I concluded that I saved one hundred and fifty dollars by buying from you."

This letter is a fair sample of the daily correspondence of the Club. Similar expressions are received by the hundreds from those who have had their instruments for sufficient time to judge, and are delighted with the prices, terms and privileges afforded by the Club.

Every subscriber is cordially invited to write for a copy of the Club's illustrated catalogue which pictures and describes the Pianos and Player-Pianos and explains the big saving in price which results from clubbing our orders in a syndicate of one hundred buyers. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.—Adv.

WHAT IS THE COCA COLA HABIT?

First and foremost it is a myth. There is no such thing as the Coca Cola habit except in the same sense that there is a water habit, a sugar habit, a fruit habit or a caffeine habit. As Coca Cola contains only carbonated water, sugar, fruit flavors and caffeine, the refreshing principle of coffee and tea, it is absolutely impossible for it to create a habit.

People drink Coca Cola because they find it delicious and refreshing. They continue to drink it because they find it wholesome and beneficial. When they are hot, thirsty and tired they crave Coca Cola in the same sense that they crave cool water or iced tea. In spite of the fact that Coca Cola contains only about half as much caffeine they prefer it to tea and coffee.

Some have made the ridiculous blunder of confusing caffeine with the habit-forming drugs like cocaine and morphine. In chemical composition and in physiological action it belongs to an entirely different class. Caffeine is refreshing to mind and body, whereas morphine and cocaine, being narcotics, have exactly the opposite effect.

In defining the term "habit-forming" and in discussing the question as to whether caffeine belongs to that class or not, Dr. Mallet, Fellow of the Royal Society, and for nearly forty years the Professor of Chemistry at the University of Virginia, gave the following expert testimony under oath:

"In the first place, I think the habit formed must be a detrimental one and an injurious one, and in the second place, one which becomes so firmly fixed upon a person acquiring it that it is thrown off with great difficulty and with considerable suffering, and in the third place, that the continued exercise of the habit increases the demand for the habit-forming drug; and caffeine is not a habit-forming drug in that sense."

If you are interested in knowing why Coca Cola is the ideal beverage, from every standpoint, write for free booklet containing the expert opinions of the leading scientists of America and Europe. Address the Advertising Managers of this paper, Messrs. Jacobs & Company, Clinton, S. C.—Adv.

CROWLEY AUXILIARY.

The Crowley Auxiliary has through the very able leadership of our president, Mrs. A. P. Holt, made rapid strides toward an ideal working plan. We meet every Monday in the month. The first for business; the second for a literary meeting, using the Voice and leaflets for the month as a basis for the program; the third is the Mission Study class meeting; and the fourth, for Social Service reports under the fourth vice president's leadership. The fifth Mondays are given to purely social meetings at which time we entertain the ladies of the Church. The members have been asked to pledge a regular amount each week for which the duplex envelop system is used.

The social service work here is splendidly planned. The membership is divided into circles which meet on the first and third Thursdays, at which time local business is discussed, local dues paid, and the pledge on the new church building collected. Reports are made of garments, supplies and cash given away. A total report is made on the fourth Monday and handed to the corresponding secretary for her report.

Of course, this does not run as ideally as some of us would like, the meetings are not as well attended as they should be, and we have not reached all the women we should like to, but we have kept up with all of our dues, pledge, and scholarship, besides having turned over $4500 to the building committee of our new church during the past two and a half years.

We held an open session in conjunction with the Young People and Juniors last Sunday night, which every one considered a most perfect success. We have a splendid Young People's Society under the leadership of Mrs. Shelby Taylor, our second vice president, and a flourishing Junior Society under the very able leadership of Mrs. Leala Mixon.

We are planning a service in the near future with our missionary hymns and hymn writers. The plan is to have a sketch of the circumstances surrounding the writing of the hymn and something of its author, followed by the hymn being sung. This ought to be a pleasant as well as an instructive evening.

Mrs. JOE WYNN, Pub. Supt.

A MESSAGE FROM THE COUNCIL TREASURER.

Beginning with the October quarter, I shall close my books on the 20th of the month, and all reports received after the 20th will have to await reporting till the next quarter—that is, all reports must reach me on or before October 20, January 20, April 20, and July 20.

Auxiliary Treasurers, please take notice and send in your reports to the Conference Treasurer in time; and remember, if your fourth quarter's report is late, it will make the Conference report for the year that much less than it should be. Please be prompt.

ORGANIZATION OF HOME MISSION WORK IN THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We owe the women of the Mississippi Conference Missionary Society an apology for the tardy appearance of this article. It should have appeared in our Woman's Missionary Edition, but circumstances over which we had no control prevented us from writing it at the time.

Mrs. B. F. Lewis, of Crystal Springs, sent us two very valuable missionary documents containing many interesting facts concerning the early organization of the missionary work in our Conference. We feel that these facts must be put into print for the benefit of our women who do not know them. Not being a native Mississippian, they were new to us, but so full of interest and soul-stirring depths, that we would not deprive others of the pleasure of reading of the faithful and efficient labors performed by these pioneer workers for our great missionary cause.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society was organized in 1893 at East End Church, Meridian. Repeated efforts had been made to effect a Conference organization, but all had failed until this time, and its successful accomplishment was due to the arduous efforts of Mrs. Clara H. Cope. The first officers were: Mrs. I. N. Chatfield, president; Mrs. E. P. Mellen, vice president; Mrs. M. F. Lewis, recording secretary; Mrs. Clara H. Cope, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. T. B. Holloman, treasurer.

The first annual meeting of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society was held at Ellisville, Miss., June 15-16, 1894. The meeting was called to order in the parlor of the parsonage, at 3 p.m., June 15, with Mrs. I. N. Chatfield, president, in the chair. Rev. N. B. Harmon opened it with prayer. "This being the first meeting of this society, the calling of the roll was dispensed with, and the business proceeded rather informally until all could adapt themselves to the newness of the situation."

At the close of the first year, Mrs. Holloman reported $216.88 raised in the Conference from dues and special contributions. At this meeting, Rev. N. B. Harmon turned over to the treasurer $26.75, in dues from three auxiliaries, making a total of $243.63 received by the treasurer. Contrast this with the total amount given in the Home Department during 1913—$17,708.55.

The corresponding secretary's report showed 10 adult societies organized during the year and 2 juvenile ones, with 72 adult and 31 juvenile members, making a total of 15 adult and 3 juvenile societies, with 261 adult and 45 juvenile members. It is interesting to compare these figures with those found in the minutes of the Third Annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society where it shows 116 adult auxiliaries with 2285 members; Young People Junior, and Baby Divisions, 110 auxiliaries numbering 2004 members.

During this first session a public meeting had been provided for and Rev. B. F. Lewis delivered the annual address reviewing the principal features of the various reports as well as noting the encouraging growth of the work. Sixteen subscribers were secured for "Our Homes."

Mrs. Lewis writes: "No account of the Woman's Missionary Society in the Mississippi Conference would be complete without making special mention of Mrs. E. D. Jones, of Carlisle, Miss., and Mrs. Clara H. Cope, of Meridian, Miss. Before we had any organization, for years Mrs. Jones travelled as an organizer, wrote letters, interested the preachers and labored and prayed for the work. After we were organized, Mrs. Cope was our first corresponding secretary, and in the days of our small beginning served us faithfully and well. Both are still living and are held in grateful remembrance by those who know the history of the organization."

Mrs. Lewis' other possession is a letter from Rev. T. L. Mellen dated April 15, 1905. It was evidently in answer to one from her asking for information relative to charges needing parsonages or help on those already under way. Ever mindful of the twofold work of the organization, questions had been asked concerning the foreigners living on the coast, and on this phase of the work Brother Mellen reported thus: "At Biloxi are 500 families of Bohemians; at Pascagoula 1000 at Gulfport 50; at Bay St. Louis 200; and probably at other points 100 families more; and just across Pearl River, in Louisiana, and on the Louisville and Nashville railroad about 200 more families; at Rigolets about 100. They are neglected by all denominations. They are here generally from September to May, the summers being spent in the North. A goodly number remain throughout the year. North of Ocean Springs are 250 or 300—possibly more—people, descendants of French or Spanish fathers and Choctaw mothers. They, too, are neglected on account of the bug-bear of 'social equality.'"

Mrs. Lewis, armed with this letter, presented its contents to the first board meeting she attended and upon its facts based her plea for missionary work among the foreigners on our coast.

MEETING AT FLORA, MISS.

Our meeting at Flora began on July 15 and ran 12 days. Rev. J. W. Ramsey conducted it till Friday, when Rev. J. F. Campbell, being on a visit to his father, gave us two good sermons. The pastor finished the meeting. There were nine members added to the Church. I had the pleasure of baptizing and receiving into the Church a Japanese girl, Ume Naito. This girl was brought to this country at the age of five years by Miss Belle Kearney. She is about fifteen years old. She lives with Mrs. Sue Kearney and is a very bright, sensible girl. Brother Ramsey is a very fine man to have in a meeting. His preaching is helpful and strong, and my people were delighted to have him. On the first day of the meeting, on July 15, our quarterly conference was held at Livingstone. Brother Hardin presided admirably. At the close of the quarterly conference, I baptized the infant son of J. A. Bennett, and received into the Church Willie Bennett, and Sarah Mann, daughter of W. E. Mann of Mansdale. At the close of my meeting at Flora I assisted Rev. R. E. Rutledge in a meeting at Wesleyanna Church, the home church of Rev. Daniel Loflin. Here I met his people, the Prices, Ainsworths, Harpers, Singleters, and others, all good people. We had a very good meeting. Brother Rutledge is a fine preacher to help in a meeting. I had the pleasure of spending a few hours in the parsonage at Florence. Brother Rutledge has a very excellent family, all religious church workers.

From there I went to Oak Ridge, in Copiah County, to help Brother J. H. Grice in a meeting. Here our meeting was beyond the ordinary in the number of accessions to the Church and the number of infants baptized.

I begin my meeting tomorrow at Bentonla, assisted by Rev. Rolfe Hunt. Everything looks good up this way. The people are interested in Church matters: their crops are very fine, and everybody is cheerful.—M. L. White.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Field Secretary has just completed a campaign for better Sunday schools on Rev. W. J. Dawson's charge. We found that Brother Dawson is doing some good work, considering the conditions. We think his Sunday schools will be much improved, as all seemed to enjoy and appreciate the work of the Field Secretary.

At New Augusta, and Sumrall, with Brothers Dominick and Alford, we were able to do some successful work. The New Augusta people, are planning to do more in their Sunday school. At Sumrall, they have the best equipped church building for Sunday school work I have seen in some time; everything is up to date, including the superintendent. The young pastor, Rev. R. E. Selby, was just entering upon his duties at Sumrall and seems to be in the right place.

A GOAL for the Sunday school teacher; Knowledge of God plus love of Him; attention to the lesson plus love for it; regular attendance plus love of coming; acts of service plus the love of doing; knowledge of the pupil plus love of the soul.

The secretary of the Sunday school on a circuit and be of much help to the Sunday school and to the pastor, if he will write a report of the school on each Monday and mail it to the pastor, telling him just what happened in the Sunday school on Sunday. So often the pastor on the circuit is lost to the Sunday school because of his infrequent visits. It is the duty of the secretary to keep him in touch with it.

In conducting a Round Table, I was asked by the pastor, "How to get the children and young people to remain for the preaching service." After leaving the church the superintendent asked me privately, "How to get the pastor to attend the Sunday school." This seemed to be a case of, "If you help me I will help you, and if you stay with me I will stay with you." The children cannot be expected to attend the Church services if the pastor does not attend the Sunday school session.

I recently visited a Sunday school, in which I did not see a Bible. I could not help wondering what text book was used in that Sunday school. Let every pupil who can read carry a Bible to the school and use it at least a little, that he may be so taught that he will know how to use the Book.

Mansfield Female College

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Founded in 1854.

This College offers a happy home to those who believe in regularity, promptness, honor, obedience to authority, work, play in season, loyalty, and reverence for the sacred institutions of life.

The Christian standards of womanhood are ever before our girls and the discipline necessary to growth and vigor of body and soul are constantly sought to be maintained.

Our faculty members are chosen for their special fitness to do a given task, and always with the knowledge, as far as is possible for us to learn, that each is the living embodiment of a Christian woman's grace and charm, and dignity and power. Girls learn much from books, but more from daily association with noble, consecrated women.

A Variety of Courses

English, leading to M.F.A. degree; Teachers' leading to the L.L. degree; Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin, Voice, Harmony, History of Music, Sight Singing; Domestic Science and Art; Art (China, water color, pastel, oil, leather craft); Academy; Intermediate Primary.

Our course for Teachers is similar to that of the best Normal and includes observation and practice teaching. Graduates exempt from examination except in Theory and Art of Teaching. Thirty enrolled last year.

Mansfield College has always boasted of its Music Department, and we still believe we offer superior advantages for the study of the Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin and Voice. Last year shows the largest enrollment ever known at M. F. C.

We call especial attention of mothers to our Domestic Science and Art course. This work has been offered for two years now. Ten were enrolled last year and two received certificates in June.

The College will have a large kiln for firing china. The teacher in charge of the Art Department is a lady of splendid Christian character and is an artist of rare ability and of large experience.

The College that expects honest work; requires obedience; demands loyalty; has discipline; boasts a strong, cultured, Christian faculty; gets a fine, appreciative and rapidly growing patronage, collects its bills and pays its debts.

Write, telephone, telegraph or call and see for yourself. If you have investigated and are not satisfied, send or go elsewhere. We expect every Louisianian to investigate before sending to some distant school.

Two thousand catalogs are being distributed. Write for one, and do it now.
R. E. BOBBITT, President.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE QUESTION NUMBER THREE—"AND THE PASTORAL INSTRUCTION OF CHILDREN?"

Perhaps no question in all our Church proceedings receives as many different answers as the one mentioned above, and which is called at every quarterly conference. Indeed the answers made are almost as varied as the personnel of men in the pastorate. With the direct question before him, the pastor seeks to make an honest and intelligible report, and yet, how often that report is unsatisfactory to himself! The impossibility of reaching the children in the homes and the consciousness that he had very little personal contact with them on the streets, suggested to this pastor early in his ministry the advisability of a few minutes talk—a sermonette of five minutes—at the close of the Sunday school. There is no more important feature of any Church's life than that of the care and instruction of its children; yet this question with its indefinite answer has become so formal as to have lost largely its great significance.

When reading Dr. W. P. Harrison's most excellent book, "The Gospel Among the Slaves," some years ago, I was led to ask that, if in the methods used by the missionaries to the plantations in their instruction to the children, we could not discover the true meaning of this question? From the reports of these pioneers we have statements like these: "It was the regular custom to catechise the children on these plantations every Monday morning about 11 o'clock." Speaking of this CUSTOM another says: "I commenced and carried the children through the questions, and the little fellows were really beyond themselves; their answers were prompt, distinct, and correct." The Rev. Sam'l. Leard, of the South Carolina Conference, makes the following statement: "We had a large colored society, and a still larger number of little negroes under catechetical instruction. The children were catechised during the week at their plantation homes and generally made fine progress." He tells of catechising a class of fifty or sixty under a large oak which stood in front of old St. Mark's. Another, in writing of the work, speaks of it as a duty, saying: "Another duty of the missionary, in addition to catechising the children and preaching to the adults, was to visit the sick and aged in their cabins."

Some years ago I had within my pastorate a brother who was reared in the Dutch Reformed Church in Holland; on inquiry as to the methods of that body, he said the pastor's study was on the same campus with the day school and that every other day in the week, from 3 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon the pastor would instruct the children, and that no child was excused from attending these classes three times in the week, except in cases of sickness. An intelligent, God-fearing, enthusiastic Sunday school teacher, I can not forget with what emphasis he concluded this conversation by saying, "This I consider pastoral instruction to children."

In the Sunday School Magazines of January, February, and March of this year there appeared contributions from Rev. Irving McCann which throw much light upon the origin and meaning of this most important question. These articles are in the nature of a review of Mr. Wesley's methods of dealing with the problem of the pastoral oversight of the young. The communications are too long to find place in this article, but I shall make from them one or two brief quotations: "Our general method is before school in the morning and after school in the evening to catechise the lowest class, etc. In a reference to the work of instructing the children we have this language: 'Having set apart an hour weekly for that purpose I met the children of our four schools together; day schools are referred to. Mr. Wesley gave instructions to his preachers, 'To give the children the Instructions for Children, and encourage them to get them by heart, and wherever there could be gotten ten children in a society, to meet them at least an hour every week.' From these articles of Mr. McCann it is evident that in the earlier days the instruction of children was more systematic than it is in this day, and furnished an opportunity for a more intelligent report than is now possible with us.

Again, we are led to the conclusion that the Sunday school is largely the development of this idea of our earlier days for the care of the children; and probably the loss of force in that part of Question Three, which refers to the pastoral instruction to children, has resulted in part, at least, therefrom.

It would be well indeed for the children if we could inaugurate some plan whereby, with the co-operation of the parents, the pastor could come into closer touch with them and instruct them in religious matters; but until some such arrangement has been effected, this part of "Question Three" must continue to have a significant vagueness and must occupy a place in the Discipline simply because of an honored past. Port Gibson, Miss. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

THANKS.

I thank Thee, Lord, for cloudy weather,
We soon would tire of blue;
I thank Thee, Lord, for Pain, our brother,
Whose rude care holds us true.

I thank Thee for the weary morrow,
That makes the Past more sweet;
I thank Thee for our sister, Sorrow,
Who leads us to Thy feet.

ONE FAITH FOR PREACHERS AND PEOPLE.

A correspondent of the British Weekly says: "Prof. George Adam Smith once said it was a good thing to wash one's face, but not to leave any soap on it! The vast majority of young preachers frankly accept the critical position. I believe it is possible to give the results of criticism without treading on the toes of your people. I believe a minister's first duty is to conserve his church and do not think Biblical criticism need ever interfere with the preaching of the Gospel."

We have often seen such statements as this, but we have scant patience with them. If higher criticism is a good thing for a minister, if it strengthens his faith and enriches his spiritual life, why is it not a good thing for his people also? We do not believe in one creed for the clergy and another for the laity. Such a putting on of clerical airs is too much like the Roman Catholic view that the priests alone can understand the higher things of the Scriptures and that the membership of the Church must have the Divine Revelation interpreted for them. An honest man in the pulpit must preach his real convictions, whatever they may be; and if they are such that he cannot do this and must hide them out of sight, the only decent course for him to pursue is to quit preaching at all or to find another forum where he can freely advocate the truth as he conceives it. A puzzled ministry, setting forth in public only a part of the faith that it cherishes in private, would be nothing more nor less than a species of hypocrisy. Such a procedure would be a disgrace to the Christian Church. It should be remembered that the great inspired Apostle declared that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." The true attitude of the Divinely-called pastor toward his flock is that expressed by the familiar lines of Charles Wesley:

"What we have felt and seen,
With confidence we tell;
And publish to the sons of men
The signs infallible."

OUR SCHOOLS.

The time is rapidly approaching when all the schools in our patronizing territory will open for another session, and if we had the space at our disposal we should like to write an editorial specifically commending each of them. We believe that all the institutions maintained by our Church in Louisiana and Mississippi are deserving of the patronage of our people, and we sincerely hope that every one of them will have a large attendance. As we see it, there is little excuse for Methodist parents in this section to send their sons and daughters to distant States to be educated. It is worth much to a boy or girl to attend college in the commonwealth in which he, or she, expects to live and work. The friends made there are apt to be near-by in one's after life and not infrequently their influence contributes largely to one's success.

We will repeat again what we have already affirmed in the Advocate more than once, namely, that every young man and young woman who can, should by all means go to college. Not to do so if the way is open is, in most cases, to make an irretrievable mistake. Scarcely any sacrifice should be counted too great to obtain an education. The odds in this age are largely against the unprepared man, and are becoming increasingly so, for the reason that competition is growing fiercer in every field of human effort. It takes a better lawyer, or preacher, or physician to succeed now than it did in former decades. Ignorance is on the retreat everywhere, and the self-taught and self-made man who achieves large things is not so easy to find as in the days ago, because, as we have said, it now takes an ampler equipment to win in the race of life.

It is to be hoped that our people will not allow the financial depression consequent upon the great European war to interfere with the patronage of our schools to any greater extent than is absolutely necessary. We think that the education of their children is one of the very few things that parents are justifiable in going in debt to secure. It is wiser to practice economy at almost any other point than this. Let us do our duty, as we see it, to the best of our ability, and trust in God, and doubtless the outlook will soon grow brighter. The world has its dark days, but the sunshiny ones are far more numerous.

THE BRETHREN IN CUBA AND OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

The missionaries and native preachers in Cuba hold annually a Preachers Institute at which they study their work and the books in the Course of Study. These occasions are seasons of great spiritual power also.

The meeting this year has just been held in Havana, and it is reported as one of unusual interest. Among other notable incidents was a joint donation from the brethren of $100 for our new university in Atlanta. Such generous action in one of our mission fields ought to provoke thousands of our people to make liberal gifts to the university. Surely it will.

In every part of the Church the people are profoundly interested in the University; but nothing nobler than the gift of the brethren of the Cuban Mission has been done. Nothing can be finer than this unsolicited manifestation of generosity.

SABBATH DESECRATION IN LOUISIANA.

We have been noticing with regret for some years that the desecration of the Sabbath in Louisiana is more open and flagrant than it is in most of the other Southern States. In New Orleans, for instance, the real estate men publicly advertise that they will do business on Sunday and seem to consider it an excellent time for effecting sales and making leases. As further evidence of the slight regard that many of the people have for the obligation to observe the sanctity of the Lord's day, we take from the New Orleans States of Saturday, August 22, the two following announcements appearing near each other upon the same page:

"Plaquemine, La., Aug. 22.—A big mass meeting of the Parishes of St. James, Iberville, Ascension, and Assumption, under the auspices of the South Louisiana Immigration Association, will be held at the Court-house here Sunday at 11 a.m. The meeting is for the purpose of bringing about consecrated and systematic efforts at tick eradication, and also to urge the selection of the Oakley farm on the west bank of the river, at St. Gabriel, as the site for the national demonstration farm."

"Aroused to action by the advance made by the militant Lafourche Democrats, the Progressives of that parish have arranged for a mass meeting to be held at Thibodaux on Sunday. All of the Congressional candidates will be brought here to entertain the crowd."

Such business and political rallies on the Sabbath are a positive reproach to our citizenship and ought to be forbidden by public sentiment, if not by law. There are few communities in the South where such gatherings on the Lord's day would be tolerated. We have never known any of our leaders in national politics to engage in Sunday campaigning. They dare not do so, because they know it would cost them hundreds of thousands of votes.

We are aware that this condition of affairs in Louisiana is largely due to the presence of a considerable foreign population and to the influence of the Roman Catholic Church, which seems to care little for a right observance of the Sabbath. But this does not make the situation any less deplorable, or the challenge to the Protestants of the State to remedy it any less imperative. Obviously, the redemption of Louisiana from the reign of the saloon is not the only reform that we need. We must have a day for rest and worship that is safeguarded by law and respected by our population before we can develop a Christian civilization that measures up to a high standard. Let our preachers and people in every part of the State stand up resolutely for this cause and seek to make their influence strongly felt in its behalf. It is a matter of vast importance.

WANTED—BIG MEN.

Mr. W. M. Thayer relates how Agassiz learned that Cuvier was preparing a work on the same plan as his own, and he knew that if Cuvier's was given to the public there would be no sale for his. While he was lamenting the misfortune to himself if Cuvier should publish his work, the latter sent for him and showed the material which he had collected for his book.

"I have examined your material," he said, "since you placed it in my hands, and it is so excellent and your work so much further advanced than mine, that I deem it more than right to put my material at your disposal, hoping that you will be eminently successful in your efforts."

That is the sort of men the world needs—big men, big inside, big above the shoulder blades.—Christian Intelligencer.

HEAVEN.

Life changes all our thoughts of heaven.
At first we think of streets of gold,
Of gates of pearl and dazzling light,
Of shining wings and robes of white,
And things all strange to mortal sight.
But in the afterward of years
It is a more familiar place:
A home unhurt by sighs or tears,
Where waiteth many a well known face.
With passing months it comes more near.
It grows more real day by day:
Not strange or cold, but very clear—
The glad homeland not far away,
Where none are sick, or poor, or lone,
The place where we shall find our own.
And as we think of all we knew
Who there have met to part no more,
Our longing hearts desire home, too.
With all the strife and trouble o'er.

—Southern Churchman.

BEGIN NOW.

Do something for God and man. Take up some form of Christian work, however lowly. Do not wait to be asked—begin now; offer yourself. Do something, even if it be a cross to you. Do not be daunted by difficulties. It is more than possible, it is highly probable, that God has a great career in store for some of you, but it will not come to you to begin with, neither should you seek it. God will lead you to it through the faithful performance of obscure tasks.—Rev. Charles Brown.

THE NEW WESLEYAN PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

(We give below an extract from the report made to the Methodist Times of the address of Dr. Dinsdale T. Young to the recent session of the British Wesleyan Conference, following his assumption of the office of President, to which he had been elected. Dr. Young will be remembered by some of our readers as the brilliant fraternal messenger to the General Conference of our Church which met in Birmingham in 1906.)

The Methodist Inheritance.

He was sometimes anxious as to whether they were denominationally loyal and ardent, as once they were. He was old-fashioned, and he would view with great deprecation any suppression of the Methodist name anywhere. They were not ashamed of the old colors. It would ill become them to shuffle out of the great name of Wesleyan Methodist. He wanted their Church always to maintain its denominational character. They must be careful of the type. They must see to it that they could not be charged with abandoning so splendid a type. Did they value their magnificent connectional system? It was the envy of all other Churches. Even their itinerancy, which some of them found so oppressive—(laughter)—was viewed with wistful jealousy by almost every other Church. Dr. Riggs used to say that in Methodism it was by their peculiarities they had flourished. It was individuality that counted amongst men. It was not how much they were like everybody else that counted, but how much they were unlike other people—especially some other people. (Laughter.) God save them from marring their own inheritance. Were they as proud as they might be of their magnificent circuit system? It was of priceless worth. He said it with all the more emphasis because he belonged to that most pathetic category of Methodist preachers—the circuit minister. But circuit Methodism, especially in country districts, was one of the problems of Methodism. How did they stand in respect to their peculiar means of grace? What about the Class Meeting? Was it played out? ("No.") He was glad to hear that resounding response. Surely it was not. If they played fast and loose with that, there were other Churches which would take it up. Where were they in respect to their fervor? Fire had always been a great characteristic of the Methodists. There was a day when if a minister of another Church preached without a manuscript and as if he had a message to declare, instead of a philosophy to expound—the highest compliment which could be paid him was to say, "Sir, you preach like a Methodist preacher." (Hear, hear.) A cold, phlegmatic Methodism would never win the victories red-hot Methodism had done in the past. Let them remember the words of Archbishop Alexander—"The Church which renounces its past renounces also its future." (Hear, hear.)

The Impregnable Bible.

How stood they in the matter of secularity? Was there not much danger of a mechanized Methodism? Were they not able more easily to win secular victories than spiritual? "You raise wonderful sums," they were told; "you have splendid buildings; you have a marvelous organization." But they were silent on these points: "The Holy Ghost sent down from heaven is among you. You are walking in the unction of the Holy One." It was the spiritual Church in the long run which won the people. How did they stand as to the great historic notes of doctrine? What was their relation as a Church to the Bible? He assured them frankly that multitudes among them—and they were not uncultured people, not the crotchety grumblers—multitudes among them were greatly concerned with that question. And if the people were concerned, it behooved them to face the matter frankly, how stood they in relation to the Bible. John Wesley's motto was: "I am a man of one Book; I defer to it in all things great and small." The presupposition of all Wesley's teaching and work was the plenary inspiration of Holy Scripture. He (the President) was not there to argue for any special theory of inspiration. He spoke not by commandment, but by permission. They would allow him, perhaps to bear his personal testimony. He held as an individual the old views concerning the inspiration of Scripture. He wished to involve no one else. But to him the Bible was from cover to cover—rightly translated and rightly interpreted—the Bible was from cover to cover, every sentence of it, not a cluster of human opinions, more or less fallible, but the sure revelation of the mind and will of God. It was only in a very subordinate sense that that Book was a human book. The rock on which the Methodist Church was built was the impregnable rock of Holy Scripture. It was only the Churches that were true to the uttermost to the plenary inspiration of the Bible, to its sovereign character as the Word of God, that could meet the needs of the age, and that would live on without a wrinkle on their radiant brows.

OUR NEW UNIVERSITY AND ITS SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

The establishment of the new university in Atlanta has created sincere joy, not only among our Methodist people, but also among all the true friends and patrons of Christian education. And assuredly our own people should be full of thanksgiving for the wonderful providence which has blessed them with this new institution of learning. It is, when all things are taken into consideration, the most remarkable single educational achievement that has been accomplished in the South. The readiness, the enthusiasm, the faith, the hope, and the exceptional benefactions which brought about this success even startled the public. There has never been anything in the history of education in the South like it, and all lovers of real American education have the most solid cause for their joy and thanksgiving.

The Commission wisely followed the plan, which pressing needs indicated, and established the school of theology as the first department of the university. When the General Conference adjourned, the latter part of May, our Church, unlike any other great Church in our country, had no theological school in which to train its young ministry. It was a gloomy outlook. The most hopeful leaders among us did not see how it would be possible within one or two years to provide a Methodist school for the training of Methodist preachers. However by the blessing of God, in less than two months there was actually founded a new theological school on the largest scale ever undertaken by our Church.

Our young preachers are to be heartily congratulated upon having such exceptional opportunities as this institution will furnish to prepare them for high service in their sacred calling. And every young man who expects to enter the ministry in our Church should avail himself of this rare opportunity to secure special theological training.

There are many distinct advantages which this school offers and I write this article to bring some of them to the attention of the Church, and particularly to the attention of our young preachers. The location of it is one of the largest assets. Atlanta is recognized in all parts of our country as the leading city of the South. Its growth in industries and commerce has given it the most commanding influence of all our Southern cities. But in matters of education and religion Atlanta holds a foremost place, and our own school is stronger there than it would have been in any other Southern city. Students in the theological school in Atlanta will come in contact with the larger activities of our modern life, wider varieties of all kinds of enterprises, more phases of church work, a larger number of national leaders in all professions and callings, a fuller expression of our American civilization, and will have a better chance to observe all the best methods of dealing with the tasks of our modern world than they would anywhere else within the territory of our Church. The city is a laboratory of study of all phases of our complex conditions and activities.

The work of the School of Theology will be conducted in the great Wesley Memorial Building, and if the Commission had taken ample time and labored with care and diligence to plan a building adapted to the work of a theological school, it is exceedingly doubtful whether they would have been able to provide such an elegant and well-fitted building as the one turned over for the use of our Theological School. One can not resist the impression that in the building of this commodious and imposing structure a good providence directed, in the beginning, for this larger service it would come to render. There is not in my knowledge in the South a building so well adapted to educational work as this Wesley Memorial Building is adapted to the work of a theological school. Numerous and large lecture rooms, a complete gymnasium with good equipment, a very rare library of Methodist history, an unsurpassed collection of Wesley's works, and the most splendid auditorium of our Church in the city, make it an exceptionally splendid home for a school of theology.

The school which has been established is distinctly and positively a Methodist school of theology. There is no attempt to mislead in this respect. Methodism was called into being by a distinct experience and given a distinct work in the world. It is not a worldly enterprise, seeking patronage, but a branch of the Christian Church proclaiming the truth of the Gospel as it has been delivered unto our people by the Holy Ghost. We are not ashamed nor afraid of our belief; nor do we wish a ministry trained out of sympathy with it. Methodist pulpits must be filled by Methodist preachers. No other kind of theological school should have Methodist patronage. This is not narrowness, it is only moral sincerity—a virtue which a gospel ministry must possess. The time has come when schools and individuals that will not hold to Methodist belief, but desire Methodist support, should be given plainly to understand that we are opposed to such a type of brazen infidelity. And young men who expect to fill Methodist pulpits should be careful to attend a school which has the highest regard for the faith of their Church and whose known attitude leaves no cloud of suspicion on their soundness of faith. The Church to which we belong demands soundness of faith in its ministry. There may be a few, and there are, who disregard this demand; but the true attitude of the mind of the Church, unknown to them, is very far from being one of assurance. Let our young men preparing for our ministry go to a school about which there is no question, and upon whose diploma there will be placed no interrogation point. The world needs to-day the preaching of orthodox Methodist preachers. It needs such preaching now as it needed it in the days of Asbury; and all should labor to furnish such a faithful and sound ministry to this complex age.

But the chief advantage which this new school offers our young preachers is the high type of men who have been chosen as teachers. It is very doubtful whether in all respects there has ever been brought together a company of more capable teachers in a Southern school. They are men of rare natural endowments, the best scholastic training, striking personalities, wide experience, commanding influence in their Conferences, distinguished success as pastors, and men who can preach. They are not untried men. Each of them has a record which reflects honor upon him and his Church. And if one really wishes to prepare himself for the ministry he should by all means place himself under the instruction of men who are preachers. It is the force of the preacher upon the student that makes the preacher as far as human assistance is helpful. The theological school which has in its faculty the best preachers is the first consideration to be taken into account in the selection of a school in which to study. A person who is a poor preacher may give instruction in rules and theories and doctrines, but he will scarcely stir the souls of the young men with the fire of the prophet or the faith of the apostle. The men chosen to fill the faculty of this new school are unsurpassed among Southern teachers in their scholarly attainments, and this must be given due consideration. Yet beyond these qualifications, the members of our theological faculty come to their work out of pastorates where preaching is not a theory; where it is not an art, but a real labor. They know the true meaning of the ministry. They bring to their work the deep consciousness of the pastoral duties, pulpit demands, and the world's call for a saving gospel. They are as sound in faith as they are superior in scholarly attainments. They will not experiment with youth; they will not confuse the minds of students with useless doubts; they will not inspire worldly ambitions; they will not raise unworthy aims; but they will direct their students in the ways of known truth and do all that is possible to fit them for the holy work of a gospel ministry.

This is the best chance our Church has ever offered our young preachers to secure genuine training for their work. It is a chance which should fill all of our people with joy and enthusiasm, and should be used by all our young men who are getting ready for the ministry in our Church.

Now that a good Providence has given to us, by such signal mercy, this school for the training of our young ministers, it is the bounden duty of every bishop, presiding elder, pastor, editor, and church member, who holds his faith with sacred steadfastness, to make it the largest school east of the Mississippi River, and to urge our young men to attend it. We dare not trifle with such a trust. Into it has been put more money for its maintenance and development than we ever before dreamed of putting into a theological school, and this has been made possible by the faith of a single member of our Church, whose letter accompanying his gift is a call to all of us to give the world not only an educated ministry, but a ministry profoundly imbued with the doctrines and experiences of our holy religion. Unfaithfulness to such a providential trust would forfeit the confidence of men and all our claim to divine guidance. I have good faith that our people will love and honor this school in a manner becoming them and in keeping with the Divine Providence which has given it to them.

A FUND FOR THE QUEEN OF BELGIUM.

(We are indebted to the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News for the following statement and letter. Should any one desire to forward money for this cause through Major Millsaps, it would perhaps be best to address him at Jackson, Miss.—Editor of the Advocate.)

Major R. W. Millsaps has received a letter from Bishop Lambuth in which he sets forth his reasons for making this appeal. Major Millsaps is now at Waynesville, N. C., and has forwarded Bishop Lambuth's letter to the Daily News.

Major Millsaps has made a contribution to Bishop Lambuth's fund and states that he will receive and forward any other contributions that may be sent him. This movement, of course, is not in conflict with the relief work of the Red Cross Society, of which Major Millsaps is treasurer for this State.

Bishop Lambuth's letter follows:

Oakdale, Cal., Aug. 8, 1914.

Major R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss.

My Dear Brother: A war has broken out in Europe unparalleled in the history of man. It is a life and death grapple between opposing forces and is involving in its direful consequences the nations of the earth and their civilization. Not only is the awful tragedy being enacted on land, but the sea, in every quarter of the globe, is claiming its grim share, and the air itself is not exempt from the fratricidal strife.

I need not call upon you and every true Christian for sympathy and prayer. But prayer is of little avail with God, and sympathy is a mere mockery in the ears of dying men, if we fail to back up prayer and sympathy with deeds. If ever there was a time in our lives, yours and mine, when supreme obligation demanded immediate action, that hour has struck. We will not discuss the merits of the conflict now raging. That is out of place. The other powers are strong, but little Belgium is struggling against over-mastering odds. Hundreds on both sides have fallen in the three days' fight before Llege, and thousands more will go their way before the terrible conflict has ended.

King Albert has gone to the front. His palace has been turned into a Red Cross hospital. The Queen has taken her place among the nurses. It is this king who reversed the policies of "red rubber" in the Congo, checked the atrocities, and refused the revenues of the Royal African domain; thus making amends for the acts of his predecessor. It is this Queen who, out of her own purse met the expense of travel of scores of wives of Belgian officers to the Congo, that they might make homes for their husbands and advance Christian civilization in that benighted land. It is these officers who extended protection and kindness to me in the remote interior of Africa and to our missionaries at Wembo Niama. It is to Belgium that we are indebted, as a Church, for large grants of land which have made our Congo mission possible.

I desire to raise at least $1,000 at once and to have it presented to her Majesty, the Queen of Belgium, to be applied by her to the care of sick and wounded soldiers. I pledge $25 to start this fund. May I not count on you for $10, or more if you feel able, to be sent me by return mail at Oakdale, Stanislaus County, California?

These gifts, while through our Church, are not missionary. Yours in the interest of humanity.

W. R. LAMBUTH.

THE EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE AT JUNALUSKA.

The Educational Conference which met at Junaluska, August 4-7, pursuant to the call of the Secretary of Education and the Superintendent of the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training, was in every way a delightful and profitable gathering.

Representatives of schools and educational boards from almost every Conference in the South were in attendance, and for three days the one theme—Developing a Ministry—was the subject of their most earnest thought and consideration.

The first day, Tuesday, was devoted to a consideration of The Need of Men—the number and kind of men needed, and the sources from which the men must be obtained.

The fact of a divine call to the ministry—heard in the heart of the man, and specific—was recognized as a cardinal fact; but the environment surrounding the man, in the home, the church, the school, was recognized as also of tremendous significance in enabling him to hear and respond to the call, or deafening his ear to such concerns.

That the Church should, through all her agencies and ministries, contribute to the effectiveness of the call of God to men, was affirmed to be her part in the bringing of the needed men into the field.

The second day's sessions, Wednesday, were devoted to a consideration of the subject, The Need for Training in Developing a Ministry. The present educational status of the ministry and the demands of our day for trained men were discussed. And then the parts which the conference examining committees, the Correspondence School, the Church college, and the theological seminary should play in training effectively the ministry were emphasized.

Attention was called to the new standards of admission to Conference, and upon the examining committee on admissions it was recognized, will rest largely the duty of enforcing these standards, with due regard to the general welfare of the Church and of the men considered.

It was urged that, as never before, the Committees, Conference Boards of Education, and Presiding Elders, should assist young men in obtaining the needed preparation; and that for lack of training no young man should be turned away; but rather, assistance in meeting the requirements should be freely provided.

On Thursday, the last day of the Conference, the discussion centered around the subject, The Need of Financial Assistance in the developing of an efficient ministry; the extent and need of this assistance; how to help without hurting; what other Churches are doing; the importance of a general loan fund; and how to build up and administer a loan fund, were all considered.

The need of financial assistance was abundantly shown; but the danger and injustice of burdening our young men with debts, even to the Church, which they have scant prospects of paying on account of inadequate salaries, was recognized. The plan of providing the needed assistance, subject to cancellation of the obligation, provided so many years service be rendered the Church, or provided the salary is beneath a specified limit, and in case of death, was generally felt to be more just as well as generous, than to require iron-clad notes, payable regardless of circumstances. The policy of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., met, it appeared, with most general approval. In view of modern demands, advanced standards, and what other Churches are doing, a decided movement in the way of more general and generous assistance rendered to men preparing for the ministry, was recognized as imperative. Southern Methodism, it appears, is far behind in this.

As to the personnel of the Conference, most of those on the program were present and handled effectively the subjects assigned. The new man at the Conference was Rev. H. C. Howard, D.D., professor-elect of Systematic Theology in our theological seminary at Atlanta. Thoughtful in mind and vigorous in speech, he made a most favorable impression. The absence of Rev. J. L. Cuninggim, on account of illness, who had shared jointly with Dr. Anderson in the preparation of the program, was deplored.

As to Junaluska, all that has been said of it is true. The grandeur and beauty of the lake and mountains surpass anything that we have seen.

Surely no other Chataqua Assembly is so fortunate as to location, and the possibilities at Junaluska for Methodism are great.

THOS. H. LIPSCOMB, Secretary.

Church News

The General Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South, will meet in Atlanta, Ga., on Sept. 16, 1914.

The Canadian Methodists raised for missions during the past ecclesiastical year $68,190.94, a gain over the contributions of the preceding year of $2,162.29.

Bishop E. E. Hogg was recently in New York to attend a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Western Section of the Methodist Episcopal Conference.

The old Bascom Chapel near Annapolis, Md., has been moved into the town and rebuilt upon a well-located lot, giving the Southern Methodists a neat house of worship at that widely known place.

Rev. S. P. Collier, the retiring president of the British Wesleyan Conference, was elected to bear fraternal greetings from his Church to the Australian Methodists when they celebrate their centenary in August, 1915.

Bishop A. W. Wilson has lately been spending some time in Canada. His daughter, Miss Nina Wilson, states that the report that he was some weeks ago contemplating a trip to Europe was without foundation.

An episcopal residence is being constructed in Charlotte, N. C., for Bishop J. C. Kilgo. This is right. The Church should take good care of a servant who toils as faithfully to extend her borders as this brilliant chief pastor does.

At the recent session of the British Wesleyan Conference (which was the 171st session), at Leeds, England, a whole day was devoted to considering the state of the Church. The next session of the Conference will be held in the great Central (Methodist) Hall in Birmingham.

Batesville, Ark., will have the honor of entertaining in the splendid new Methodist Church just erected there the first session of the North Arkansas Conference. The host of the Conference will be Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, who spent a considerable portion of his ministry in North Mississippi.

It has been arranged by the English National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association to have Dr. G. Campbell Morgan to make a tour of India in the interest of religious work among educated young men. He will leave London on this mission, which will cover a period of several months, next October.

Sixteen Roman Catholic priests and seven brothers of a missionary order of that denomination who had been banished from Mexico, arrived in New Orleans last week. All the priests in the party were Spaniards, and none of them could speak English. It seems to be the purpose of the Constitutionals to destroy the power of the Romish Church in Mexico.

Pope Pius X died at the Vatican in Rome, Italy, on August 20. He was born at Riese, in the Venetian provinces, on June 2, 1835. He was elected a Cardinal in 1893, and to the Papacy in 1903. He seems to have been a man of kindly disposition, but did not possess commanding ability. It has been announced that a conclave to elect his successor will probably be held in Rome on Sept. 3.

The Educational Association of Japan recently conferred upon Miss Nannie B. Gains, principal of the Hiroshima Girls' School, and one of the best known of our missionaries in the Far East, its medal and certificate of honor, in recognition of her long and meritorious work as an educator in that country. This is said to be a distinction that has been awarded to very few foreigners.

Rev. A. D. Betts, D.D., of the North Carolina Conference, celebrated his 82d birthday on Aug. 25. He is yet a frequent contributor to the church press, and, what is more worth noting, his communications are brief and to the point. This shows that longevity and prolixity are not necessarily "one and inseparable." On the eve of his birthday Dr. Betts, in writing the Raleigh Christian Advocate, said: "I want to make a new start to try to help souls toward heaven."

According to the Raleigh Christian Advocate, Mr. H. A. Hayes, formerly Superintendent of the Children's Home at Winston-Salem, N. C., after being arrested in the Northwest and brought back, pleaded guilty to the charge of embezzling $5500 from that institution, and has been sentenced to ten years in the State prison. Mr. Hayes was at one time principal of the city schools at West Point, Miss., and was widely known as an Epworth League worker. We regret very much to learn of this phase of his career. He was a man of uncommon gifts who might have exerted a wide influence for good.

THE NAME FOR OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

Mr. Editor:

I believe, with Dr. John L. Weber, that honors should not be delayed, therefore I suggest that Candler University be the name given our new school in Atlanta, and that some hall of the buildings be named for Bishop Coke. A splendid statue and fountain on the grounds would be a suitable memorial to him.

The fact that Bishop Candler has done such long and efficient service for Christian education, and the fact that his brother, Mr. Asa G. Candler, has given so munificently to the same cause, should be considered in selecting a name for our new school. JOHN SIEBE JOHNSON.

TO WHITWORTH GIRLS.

Whitworth College, August 20, 1914.

Dear Whitworth Girls: How delightful it is to find one's self on the dear old campus, where once in the days gone by I, as a merry school girl, lived and played and worked! I am sitting in a swing within the compound and the sunlight filtering through the trees makes such lacy patterns on my paper that I can scarce restrain from stopping this scribble and tracing the lovely designs. But I must not, for I want the Whitworth girls of the past, present, and future to know what glorious changes have taken place and are being wrought in this, my beloved Alma Mater.

First, the old Calisthenics Hall is gone, and the President's Home, a dignified house of a conservative type, is in its place. Don't you remember, classmates, how we used to decorate and decorate for public affairs? It was hard to make the stage pretty, and I have no regrets, but I know mother will be sorry to hear that the hall was torn down two years ago, for in the seventies when their beloved Dr. Johnson was here, they actually had recitation rooms (and nice ones, too, I am told) in the basement. In lieu of this relic is a truly beautiful building, "The Mary Jane Lampton Auditorium." I wish each of you could see it. It is on the east campus, quite near the dreaded line of trees that we were told was the border line of danger and must not be passed in our evening strolls lest perchance something naughty might be done. The seating capacity of the hall is 800 and, girls, it is up-to-date in every detail, and so artistic!

Another surprise for you: The Brown House is no more. In its stead a magnificent brick dormitory is being built. As I write, I can see workmen scurrying to and fro like so many mice, and the noise they make is enough to send my poor wits wool-gathering. The basement is to be used for the gymnasium and the newly-established School of Domestic Science. (How glad I am that our girls are to be given training for home-making!) The other two floors will have dormitory rooms for fifty students, parlors, a Y. M. C. A. room, and offices for the President and Dean. Each room is to have its own lavatory, and of course there are commodious baths.

The other dormitories are getting their share, too. Margaret Hall is being re-calculated throughout, and heavy mats are being placed through the corridors and down the stairs. Whitworth Hall, you would hardly recognize. The old parlor and the rooms to the rear of it are being thrown into one big comfortable dining room. The kitchen is to be just back of it, while the infirmary comes out of its "Retreat" and occupies the rooms on the right of the hall as one enters. Nicest of all, a perfect heating system is being installed throughout, including the new dining room and infirmary, and the College has its own sewerage system.

I am told that these improvements will approximate a cost of $50,000. There are many things I haven't mentioned: The new covered walk for the protection of the girls in the mad rush to breakfast, two attractive pavillions, and the elegant pianos, all new and in good condition (twenty Haynes practice pianos, two Knabe Grands, and one or two of other makes, such as Mason and Hamlin's).

I do hope that all the old girls will talk of this Greater Whitworth and swell the number of Whitworth-bound girls on September 23. The opening has been postponed on account of the improvements from September 16 to September 24, but this means the home-coming must take place on September 23, so that each girl will be in time for work the next day. This is a fine school, with the scholarly atmosphere which only age gives, yet with the alertness which comes only from modern improvement.

"Here's to old Whitworth! Drink it down."

Lovingly yours for Whitworth,

AN ALUMNA.

EMORY COLLEGE AND THE NEW UNIVERSITY.

(The relation of Emory College to the new Methodist university in Atlanta is a matter of general interest. We take the following authoritative statement from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate.)

It seems some people do not quite understand the relation of Emory College to the University, which has been recently established by the Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Emory College, with its high standards and inspiring traditions is to be preserved intact and will be the collegiate department of the university. It will not do less work or different work than it has done in all its glorious past; but its courses will be enriched and its work greatly improved. Its relation to the university will be just as Harvard College is related to Harvard University. It will help the new university and the new university will help it.

Emory College has an able faculty and is well equipped with libraries, apparatus, etc., to do all the work of a first-class college. Its plant and endowment are together worth about $700,000. It is in easy reach of Atlanta by convenient railway schedules of the Georgia Railroad, and at an early day it is quite probable there will be also connection by interurban trolley lines. Between Atlanta and Oxford there are also finely graded roads, over which an automobile can go in a little more than an hour. It is evident that all these things will make the connection of Emory College with the university most advantageous to the work in both Atlanta and Oxford. The organization of the faculty in Oxford, under the presidency of Dr. James E. Dickey, will go on with its work just as heretofore; and students looking to future work in the university will find there the best possible preparation for professional and post-graduate courses in the university at Atlanta. When the work at Emory College is described as "The Academic Department of the University," it is not meant that Emory College is reduced to an academy; but what is implied is that all the work leading to the bachelor degrees will be done by Emory College.

Recently there has been completed a magnificent dormitory at Oxford, equipped with the best modern equipment, and capable of housing more than one hundred students. My own son has occupied a room in this building during the past year, and he will return to Oxford and occupy the same room during the coming year. I know of no better place for him, or for the son of any other man, to do purely collegiate work.

In making this statement I may add further, that every day brings me additional subscriptions for the founding and equipment of the university. In my morning mail I have a letter from a generous friend, sending me his check for one thousand dollars and his note for fifteen hundred dollars more. On the day before, I received other subscriptions from liberal men in Georgia, Florida and South Carolina.

This is as it should be. All our people, rich and poor alike, must have a part in this great work.

I believe our Church is entering upon a new and nobler era in its educational history. If all our people will unite at once in carrying to success this movement, the entire South and our whole country will be blessed by it. Let none of us fall short of doing our duty with the utmost zeal and fidelity.

W. A. CANDLER.

TO OUR PREACHERS

The management of this Advocate has decided to let our preachers and agents offer six months trial subscriptions at 50 cents during August, September and October. This offer will be withdrawn on the 10th of November, 1914. Subscriptions must be sent in in clubs and money orders used in making remittances so as to save expense.

In soliciting new subscribers, please explain to them that the six months' subscriptions are taken with the understanding that, after their expiration, the regular rate of $1.50 will be charged for annual subscriptions unless they are ordered canceled.

We are making this offer for a three-fold purpose:

First—To build up our subscription list before the annual meeting of the Publishing Committee.

Second—To get funds to help tide us over the summer and fall months.

Third—To induce our Methodist people to take the Conference Organ and read it.

The floating of loans in the United States for the warring European nations will not be allowed.

The final figures show that the estate of Mrs. Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, amounts to $2,709,214.

The council of the Bad River tribe of the Chipewewa Indians, which assembled in Wisconsin last week, unanimously voted in favor of woman suffrage.

Field Marshal Kitchener, who has been made Great Britain's Secretary of State for War, is regarded as perhaps the most efficient man in the world in the work of organizing troops.

The Panama Canal was officially opened on Saturday, August 15, and a dispatch from there on the 17th inst. announced that the collection of tolls up to that time had amounted to $100,000.

Mrs. Henry Newman, of New Orleans, has given $25,000 to the Board of Managers of the Touro Infirmary to be used for the construction of a maternity hospital. It will be named for her deceased husband.

It is claimed that in the police courts of London last year more than 6000 persons were identified by their finger prints. Thus it seems that as the facilities for criminals to escape multiply, as the airship and automobile, for instance, the means of detecting them likewise improve.

The Hon. Hoke Smith was last week nominated by the Georgians for another term in the United States Senate, and Col. N. E. Harris was nominated for Governor. Col. Harris was one of the attorneys for the Church in the Vanderbilt litigation and was a member of our last General Conference.

On August 18 President Woodrow Wilson issued a formal address to the people of the United States, advising them against partisanship and extreme expressions concerning the European war. In view of the fact that our population has been drawn very largely from the nations involved in the present great conflict, Mr. Wilson's admonition was needed and timely.

In the State Democratic primary held in Mississippi on August 18, six of the present Congressmen were renominated, the other two, having no opposition, had already been declared the Democratic nominees in their districts. This means, of course, that there will be no change in the delegation, since to be nominated by the Democratic party is equivalent to election in Mississippi.

The aggregate net incomes of the railroads of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, was $643,600,000, against $729,300,000 for the year preceding, a decrease of about 12 per cent. The gross earnings of the two years were much nearer together than these figures would seem to indicate, but the expense of operating the roads was considerably larger during the latter twelve months.

At the first meeting of the American Women's War Relief Society in London, $80,000 was subscribed. Among those present were the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Churchill, Lady Paget, Mrs. John Astor, Mrs. Lewis Harcourt, the Duchess of Roxburghe, the Countess of Granard, and the Countess of Essex. One of the addresses of the occasion was delivered by the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, of New York.

Up to the present there have been in New Orleans about 20 cases of the huponic plague, and between 50 and 60 infected rats have been discovered. Rats are still being trapped at the rate of approximately a thousand a day, and altogether, between 70,000 and 80,000 have been killed. The work of making the buildings of the city rat proof is steadily going forward and the outlook for speedily stamping out the plague is considered encouraging.

The President has nominated Attorney General McReynolds for the place on the Supreme Bench of the United States made vacant by the death of Judge H. H. Lurton. There has prevailed to some extent a feeling that Mr. McReynolds was not a brilliant success as the chief legal adviser of the government, and this sentiment has found expression in some of the leading dailies that are supporting the present administration, notably in the New York World. It is possible that Mr. Wilson's cabinet will be more favorably regarded by the country at large with Mr. McReynolds out of it. Mr. T. W.

Gregory, of Austin, Texas, has been named as the new Attorney General. He was born in East Mississippi in 1861, and was reared at West Point, being a son of Dr. F. R. Gregory, who was captain of the 35th Mississippi Regiment during the Civil War. Mr. Gregory is said to have quite a fine record as a prosecutor of trusts and illegal corporations.

A press dispatch from Baton Rouge states that the entire $50,000 appropriated by the last legislature to aid in the consolidation of rural schools will be applied to the erection and improvement of school buildings, the State giving about one-third of the amount invested in these structures for the use of united schools, provided they do not cost over $3000 each. The committee directing this work is composed of Mr. Harris, the State Superintendent of Education, Gov. Hall, Mr. T. J. Butler and Mr. C. A. Ives.

RUSTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

Haughton, July 28-30.

The three notable features of the Ruston District Conference were:

1. The large attendance. One of the "Connectional officers" said in his address that it nearly gave him stage-fright to speak to such a large Conference. He said he had attended several Conferences this year and that there were more people present at the Ruston District Conference than at two or three of the others combined. There was a large number of delegates present, and the good people of Haughton not only entertained the Conference in a most splendid way, but attended the sessions.

2. The report of many additions to the Church. More than 400 were reported as having been received into the Church this year, and far the larger part the revivals have not yet been held. At the present rate of increase, the District will probably be able to report a thousand added to the Church this year. The presiding elder, Rev. C. B. Carter, has sounded the evangelistic note throughout the bounds of the district. He puts tremendous emphasis on "good living, good bookkeeping and hard work" with reference to his preachers.

3. The beginning of a gracious revival. The sermons during the Conference were preached by A. G. Shankle, R. W. Vaughan, J. O. Bennett, and T. J. Warlick. The meeting was continued with Brother Warlick doing the preaching. Twenty-one were added to the Church on profession of faith, and the whole town was deeply stirred.

The Conference committees were as follows: License to Preach—J. O. Bennett, T. J. Warlick, S. S. Bogan, R. Roberts, and W. C. Barnett. License to Preach in Interim of Annual Conference—J. W. Faulk, J. O. Bennett, J. M. Brown, and W. W. Holmes.

Quarterly Conference Records—J. G. Sloane, W. C. Barnett, W. J. Johnston, H. L. Nohle, and L. G. Smith. Willis Fordham was licensed to preach. The names of local preachers, in orders, were called: W. L. Hamill, J. M. Manley, H. M. Banks, E. C. Bott, T. M. Wafer, W. W. Nicholson, and their characters were passed.

The Conference voted a passage of character and renewal of license to J. L. Lay, M. W. Moncrief, J. E. Napper, and S. P. Moss.

The following were elected as delegates to the Annual Conference: W. C. Barnett, C. H. Henry, W. J. Johnston, and J. L. Lay. Alternates: R. T. McClendon, R. Roberts, J. W. Caldwell, and L. G. Smith.

Plain Dealing triumphed over Bernice in the contest for the District Conference next year. The vote for Plain Dealing was made unanimous. Our connectional interests were well represented: Centenary College by R. H. Wynn and P. M. Brown; Mansfield College by R. E. Bobbitt; our Orphanage by R. W. Vaughan, and the Laymen's Movement in the district by R. T. McClendon.

A few days prior to the meeting of the Conference one of the delegates, a man of God, a true friend to the Church, passed to his eternal reward. He was missed in the Conference. R. W. Vaughan, T. J. Warlick, and R. T. McClendon introduced the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, in the Providence of our all-wise Heavenly Father, he has called to his reward our beloved brother, James T. Otts, of the Homer Charge, be it resolved by the Ruston District Conference:

1. That we hereby express our keen sense of the loss of a most devoted, loyal, and consecrated member of the Methodist Church, a delegate to this Conference, a faithful attendant on all the services of the Church, and a loyal supporter of all its institutions.

2. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the Homer congregation and to the members of his bereft family.

3. That we are grateful to God for the noble life and splendid service of Brother Otts."

After adopting unanimously a vote of thanks to J. M. Brown, the "young old man" of the Conference, the pastor of the Haughton Church, and to the people for their generous hospitality, the Conference adjourned—the revival continuing.

WESLEY'S SERMONS.

From 53 to 44.

A curious historical question has been occupying the attention of the Committee on Methodist Law and will form the subject of a recommendation to the Conference at Leeds. As is well-known, the Model Deed prescribes, as the condition of ministry in Wesleyan Churches under the deed, the acceptance of the doctrine and practice "contained in certain Notes on the New Testament, commonly reputed to be the Notes of the said John Wesley, and in the first four volumes of sermons commonly reputed to be written and published by him." For many years it has been held that the first four volumes of Wesley's Sermons comprehended the fifty-three sermons contained in the first four volumes of the edition generally accepted as the standard edition. Recent historical investigation, however, has brought to light the fact that in John Wesley's lifetime several editions of his sermons were published, the first four volumes in some cases containing only forty-four sermons. The Committee on Methodist Law, after carefully examining the evidence, has come to the conclusion that the edition to which the Model Deed makes reference is that containing only forty-four sermons. Counsel's opinion has been obtained, and in a detailed opinion Mr. Owen Thompson, of Lincoln's Inn, pronounces for the eight-volume edition of 1787-8, the first four volumes of which contain only forty-four sermons.

The Conference is recommended to place on record an interpretation of the historic phrase in accordance with this opinion. It should be added, that no modification of doctrinal standards is involved by the omission of the nine sermons.—The Methodist Times.

IN VACATION TIME.

Sometimes in my vacation days,
Before it is September,
I peep into my books to see
How much I can remember.
To me it is astonishing
How I've forgotten everything.
The maps are full of foreign lands,
The copy-book seems crazy,
The grammar's Greek no tongue can speak,
The history is hazy.
It even seems absurd to me
That nine times seven are sixty-three.
The holidays do surely change
Old things from what they were,
And make familiar people strange—
Why, now, if Christopher Columbus met me at the door
I'd hardly know him any more!

A CHILD'S QUESTION.

Two little girls were coming home from Sunday school, and during their walk they talked of what their teacher had said. It was about "coming to Jesus." The more they talked the more perplexed they became, but on reaching their home they at once went to their mother, and this is a part of the conversation which took place:

"Mamma, our teacher told us to-day that we must come to Jesus if we want to be saved. But how can I come to him if I cannot see him?"

"Did you ask me to get you a drink of water last night?" replied the mother.

"Yes, mamma."

"Did you see me when you asked me?"

"No; but I knew that you would hear me and get it for me."

"Well, that is just the way to come to Jesus. We cannot see him, but we know that he is near us and hears every word we say, and that he will get us what we need."—United Presbyterian.

THE RAIN FAIRIES.

Around the corner of the house Willy Wind came whistling a merry tune and the lively little rain-drops began to dance and chatter and patter on the window pane.

"Whew-ew-ew!" whistled Willy.

"Patter, patter, patter," sang the rain-drops as they joined hands and ran down the glass so fast that you could not tell one from another. They were having a fine, jolly dance on the outside of the window, but inside, a little girl sat with her head buried in the sofa cushions and cried.

"Oh, dear!" she sobbed. "Mother won't let me go out and play in the rain, and I wish it would never, never, rain again!"

And just as she said this she heard a soft, whispering sound and looking up she saw a row of tiny fairies hopping about on the window sill.

"Isn't that too bad!" said the first little fairy with a great big sigh.

"Isn't that too bad!" said the second little fairy with a still bigger sigh.

"Isn't that too bad!" said the third fairy, and then they all sighed at once.

"What is too bad?" asked the little girl.

"It is too bad that you do not like us," answered the fairies.

"But I never saw you before," said the child. "so of course I don't dislike you."

"Never saw us before! Why, we are the rain-drops and you were just wishing that you might never see us again." The tiny creatures looked very sad as they said this.

"I am sorry if I have hurt your feelings," returned the child, "but you see, you always come just when I want to go out to play."

"That is what all the children say!" cried the rain-drops, shaking their round glittering heads. "None of them like us in spite of the good things we do."

"What good things do you do?" asked the little girl.

"We give drink to all of the flowers and plants and trees," said the first fairy.

"And we wash their faces, too," said the second little rain-drop.

"And in the cities where the streets are paved the rain cools them in the hot summer time," cried the third fairy.

"And we—"

"Hush!" whispered the first fairy. "We haven't time to tell her any more; she must find out the rest for herself. We must go now and dance for Willy Wind. Just hear how hard he is whistling!"

So off skipped the rain fairies with a lively gurgling and splashing and the little girl sprang up and ran to the window to watch them.

Out in the garden path they had made a puddle and seemed to think it great fun to jump in and out of it again to the tune the wind was whistling. And as she watched them dance the flowers in the two long beds beside the path all bent their heads and leaned to one side just the way brother Tom did when mother washed his face.

"Oh, they are having their faces washed by the rain!" she cried. "And here come the sunbeams to dry them off."

Willy Wind gave one last whistle when he saw the sunbeams coming and blew away to another town carrying the fairies with him. But on every plant and tree and flower they had left little trembling raindrops and as the sunbeams crept through the garden and kissed each one they turned into sparkling jewels, and the modest mignonette, the tall and stately golden-rod and the leaves of the sturdy apple tree all wore diamonds more beautiful than a queen's.

Now a robin came and took a drink from the puddle in the path, hopped in and had a bath and then flew up to the rosebush by the window and chirped a happy song.

"I love the rain," he seemed to say.

"And so do I," said the little girl.—Elizabeth Gale in The Child's Hour.

PRAYER THAT MADE A BISHOP.

Dr. Louis Albert Banks tells us that "when Frank W. Warne, Bishop, was about fourteen years of age he was given some special work one evening by his father. It happened that just then some boys came to play, and instead of doing what he was told Frank went off to play with them. A little later he met his father, who inquired, 'Have you done what I told you?' The boy answered, 'Yes.' The father knew that he had told an untruth, but said nothing. The boy felt rather badly about it, but nevertheless soon fell asleep, on going to bed, and slept soundly.

"Next afternoon his mother said to him, 'Your father slept none last night.' Frank knew that his father was well, and said, 'Why didn't he sleep?' His mother said, 'He spent the whole night praying for you.'

"The last sentence was like a bell ringing in Frank Warne's ears, and like an arrow in his heart. He was convicted of sin, and knew no rest until he knew it in the consciousness of pardoned sin.

"Bishop Warne attributed his decision to become a Christian to that night in which his father kept vigil all night, praying for his boy who had proved untrue; and he said, 'I can never be sufficiently grateful to him for that night of prayer.' Surely," said Dr. Banks, "there is in that sentence a suggestion for many an anxious parent, and a fact many a young fellow might lay to heart."—Central Christian Advocate.

A GREAT MAN'S ADVICE.

Governor Charles E. Hughes, when chief executive of New York, gave this advice to the boys of Troy one Sabbath afternoon: "Put a little more into the measure than you need to. Give a good basketful of fruit and don't simply have a little display on top. Give a little more work than you are asked to give, and it will show on the one hand that you are unpurchasable, and on the other hand that you esteem it an honor to give more than is required at your hands." Boys, try the above advice.—Methodist Recorder.

LET CHILDREN WRITE.

Perhaps many a poor penman would have written a more creditable hand if in childhood he had had a desk of his own, in a suitable place, provided with materials for writing at such times as he chose. It would have seemed an art more worth cultivating under such conditions than when he had to write on his knees or on a littered table.

Every child's room should have a private desk or table where he may write. Here he should have a stock of pens, penholders, pencils, pads and writing paper, and he should be trained to use these materials frequently, says The Mother's Magazine.

Such a bit of property helps him to cultivate neatness and order. If he evidences slovenliness at first, the mother should urge him to orderliness and inspect his desk until he has attained neatness.

It should be impressed upon him that this is part of his training, that as a man he will always need to keep his papers in place and in order, and that if he is to be in the employ of others, it will be to his advantage to have formed good habits in such matters.

The child will take pride in possessing his own desk and pens, and this will lead him to the cultivation of the use of pen and ink.

DR. WATKINSON ON PUBLIC PRAYER.

Of all the British Wesleyan preachers, Dr. W. L. Watkinson is perhaps the most widely read and admired on this side of the Atlantic; therefore, what he has to say on any subject is a matter of general interest in this part of the Methodist world. For this reason we give our readers the following reference to a recent article from his pen on public prayer, which we take from the Methodist Times (London):

"That public prayer is largely a gift is the opinion expressed by Dr. Watkinson in an interview reported in the Homiletic Review by Denis Crane. The veteran preacher declared to his interviewer that a sense of music is in all of us, but there is a wide difference between the great composer and the tom-tom beater. So in prayer some men have a genius for it. 'Simplicity,' added Dr. Watkinson, 'is the first law of public prayer—simplicity combined with brevity. We do not need to go into particulars with Heaven.... nor should we spin fine phrases in adoration of the Deity. This is nauseous.' Dr. Watkinson also expresses the view that the liturgy in public worship is often of untold value."

"AN ANCIENT PARALLEL."

With Japan having joined her enemies and Italy apparently about to do so, we can see no prospect for the success of German arms in the great war now raging. With England controlling the seas, it would seem that the German troops must ultimately be starved out, if they can be conquered in no other way. But while this is true, it is not likely that the Kaiser's forces will be easily subdued, or that they will fail to win many victories and to inflict terrible punishment upon their foes. The numerous dispatches appearing in the public prints announcing their invariable defeat and wholesale losses at this stage of the war may well be viewed with some incredulity. Discussing this question in its issue of August 19, the Nashville Banner makes the following interesting comment:

"The Roman historian Tacitus after recounting the valor of the Germans through a long period of time, says:

"Then followed peace; until profiting by our factions and by our Civil War, they stormed the winter quarters of our troops, put Gaul in jeopardy, and although they were repulsed in that undertaking, lose, to this day, more battles in our dispatches than in the field."

"As to putting 'Gaul in jeopardy,' history is assuredly repeating itself and there are very good reasons to believe that the Germans of to-day, like their ancient forbears, lose more battles in the dispatches than in the field."

"The New York Herald reported in 1870 a victory for the French at Sedan, when the truth was the French had surrendered and their Emperor, Napoleon III, was a prisoner. It was not the Herald's fault. The dispatches then, as now, came from French sources."

"Without regard to how our sympathies may be in the pending conflict, it is well to take the news now received as possibly of the kind that Rome got from the front in the days of Tacitus. The Germans are good soldiers and their army is the most compact and efficient fighting machine the world ever knew."

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

While passing up the Illinois Central Railroad some days ago, we were pleased to see the new Main Building at Millsaps College taking on proportions and giving evidence of steady progress toward completion. This new structure will be much superior in every way to the old edifice which it will replace, and we are informed that the work of construction will have gone sufficiently forward by the opening of the college on September 16 to relieve the crowding and inconveniences under which the work had to be done for several months before the last term closed.

In Durant, Miss., it was our pleasure to meet Dr. M. W. Swartz, Professor of Ancient Languages at Millsaps, who was out canvassing for pupils, and we were highly gratified to hear him say that the outlook is propitious for a good attendance upon this excellent institution this fall. President Watkins, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, and others have also kept quite busy during the vacation season visiting various communities and presenting to the public the claims of the college for patronage. They are to be highly commended for their activity in the field, and should have the hearty co-operation of our pastors and people in this important and urgently needed work of securing pupils.

The next session will be the twenty-third in the history of this splendid educational institution. Its work from the start has been of a most superior order and no school in Mississippi now surpasses it in the modernness and thoroughness of the courses of study which it offers. It is surrounded by wholesome moral and religious influences, and the students who have gone forth from its halls have taken high rank in all the walks of life. We have no hesitancy in commending it to the Methodists of the Magnolia State as pre-eminently the place for the instruction and training of their sons. The Preparatory Department, the College proper, and Law School may all be depended upon to render a grade of service that measures up to a high standard. Nothing shoddy in the way of tutorage is tolerated.

It should be gratifying to the Methodists of Mississippi to know that the equipment and endowment of Millsaps College continue steadily to increase. The statistics given in the August number of the Bulletin of the Board of Education show that it now has an endowment of $472,297 (of this $173,000 is yet unproductive), an equipment worth $20,000, and a campus and buildings valued at $152,500, making the total resources of the institution, at a low valuation, nearly $700,000. The day is not far distant when, with proper management, the holdings of the college will amount to a round million; indeed, it already stands next to Trinity College (North Carolina) in the amount of endowment that it has actually in hand—this, too, when it is one of the youngest institutions in the Church.

And, best of all, Millsaps College is owned and controlled by the Methodists of Mississippi. Our two Conferences in that State elect all of the trustees without even having them nominated by the Board of Trust. Bishop Galloway, Major Millsaps, and the other worthy men who laid the foundations of this institution were obviously not afraid to trust the rank and file of our people in the commonwealth in which it is situated to manage, foster, and maintain it. The school is ours—ours to govern, to patronize, and to enlarge and make greater. Let us see that we do not fail in the execution of this sacred trust. Every member of our Church in Mississippi should lend a helping hand in this great undertaking. The future of our denomination in the State is largely bound up in Millsaps College. It is our largest asset, and when we strengthen it, we make stronger every other department of our work.

We can render our youth no better service than to influence them to attend their own college. When its doors shall open next month, there ought to be on hand at least three hundred students waiting to matriculate. Let every Methodist preacher and layman (including also the women) in Mississippi do what he can to have it so. There is no telling what united and aggressive effort in this direction might accomplish.

WEALTH OF THE NATIONS.

The World Almanac of 1914 estimates the wealth of the leading nations as follows: United States, $130,000,000,000; Great Britain, $80,000,000,000; France, $65,000,000,000; Germany, $60,000,000,000; Russia, $40,000,000,000; Austria-Hungary, $25,000,000,000; Italy, $20,000,000,000; Belgium, $9,000,000,000; Spain, $5,400,000,000; the Netherlands, $5,000,000,000; Portugal, $2,500,000,000; Switzerland, $2,400,000,000. The figures for the Oriental nations and countries other than our own in the western hemisphere are not given.

Somewhat different in some particulars are recent estimates made by the Editor of the London Statist, who places the wealth of the United States at $150,000,000,000, against $1,750,000,000 a hundred years ago. He sets down the annual income of our people at $35,000,000,000, and the yearly increase of the nation's wealth at $7,000,000,000, and calls attention to the fact that within the last century our population has grown from 8,000,000 to 98,000,000. He affirms that the citizenship of the United States has an income greater than that of Great Britain, Germany, and France combined.

He declares that during the same period the wealth of Great Britain has increased from $12,500,000,000 to $85,000,000,000, and the annual income of her people from $1,500,000,000 to $12,000,000,000. In France within the last century he affirms that the wealth of the population has advanced from $10,000,000,000 to more than $55,000,000,000, and their yearly income from $1,250,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. He gives Germany third place among the nations in the amount of her material possessions, lifting her above France. He says: "One hundred years ago Germany's wealth—Germany then consisted of a lot of little States and Principalities—was probably less than that of France, but to-day it is placed at nearly $50,000,000,000, with an income of $10,000,000,000." In view of the fact that a number of these nations are now engaged in a death struggle with one another, the question of their financial resources is one of not a little interest.

OUR ATLANTA SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

As will be noted by our readers, we are carrying an advertisement of the Theological School of our new University at Atlanta, which will open on Wednesday, September 23, 1914. We desire to call special attention to the fact that Chancellor Candler has announced that "scholarships are now available for worthy men who need such assistance." There is no necessity for our young preachers who may need help going elsewhere to obtain it; and if they have partially completed their courses of study at other institutions and now desire to enter our own Theological School, we feel sure that full credit will be given them for the work that they have done. Board in Atlanta will doubtless be found to be quite as reasonable as it is in the other cities of the South.

In this connection, we wish to say that if there are young ministers with the requisite qualifications in this section of the Church who would like to enter our new School of Theology this fall and who need more assistance than the scholarships offered will furnish them, we should be pleased to hear from them on the subject. We wish also to urge our readers not to overlook what Bishop Kilgo has to say about the advantages offered by our Atlanta seminary in this issue of the Advocate.

FROM THE AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

The statement appearing below is of such importance that we give it a place on our editorial page. President Woodrow Wilson is the official head of this organization, and Miss Mabel Boardman, from whom this appeal comes, is a member of its Executive Committee. It will be remembered that she was a special friend of President Taft's family, and that for a number of years she has been widely known for her good works. The Advocate will gladly report in its columns and forward any funds that may be sent to it for this worthy cause.)

To the Editor: The American Red Cross is greatly in need of funds for the war relief work. It is planning to send a ship to Europe with some of its corps of surgeons and trained nurses and surgical equipment and hospital supplies. We have appeals coming to us from there for all this aid, that is so greatly needed. There are thousands of sick and wounded men and there soon will be tens of thousands—perhaps hundreds of thousands—in this terrible war. The part that America will play in it will be the part of human brotherhood—to save, and not to destroy.

I hope your readers may aid in this great work for humanity. All contributions may be sent to the American Red Cross, Washington, D. C., or to local Red Cross Treasurers. Donors may designate, if they so desire, the country for which they wish their contributions used. The Red Cross appeals for the aid of all. Every dollar will mitigate the suffering of some poor man.

Yours sincerely,

MABEL T. BOARDMAN.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 18, 1914.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. C. A. Battle is in Plaquemine, La., this week, assisting Rev. George P. White, our pastor at that place, in a series of revival services.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, presiding elder of the Sardis District, in sending in his appointments for the fourth round, says: "Matters are going along smoothly in these parts. I hope that we shall have a good rounding out of the year's work."

The pulpit of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Shreveport, was ably filled on August 23 by Dr. R. H. Wynn, who preached both at the morning and evening hours. Dr. George S. Sexton is away on his annual vacation.

The Rapides (La.) Camp Meeting began on Saturday night, August 23. Rev. A. S. J. Neil, under whose supervision it is being held, has our thanks for an invitation to attend, of which we would gladly avail ourselves if it were possible.

Now is the time to push the circulation of the Advocate. With new trial subscriptions of six months offered for 50 cents, it ought to be placed in thousands of Methodist homes in Louisiana and Mississippi. Why not give us a club from your charge, brother pastor?

We are informed that Rev. W. W. Drake, pastor of our First Church in Baton Rouge, La., will in the near future be assisted in a revival meeting by Evangelist Price, of Arkansas. Mr. Price conducted quite a successful meeting in our Capital City about three years ago.

Rev. Hilary Westbrook, of Waynesboro, Miss., writes as follows: "On the morning of Tuesday, August 18, 1914, a fine boy was born to Rev. and Mrs. J. Loyd Decell. The little one and his mother are getting along nicely." We extend hearty congratulations to the happy parents.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Ruston, La., has lately returned from Lake Junaluska, North Carolina, where he attended the Missionary Conference recently held there. We are pleased to state to our readers that he has promised us for the Advocate in the near future some notes concerning that interesting gathering.

Fellow-pastors, have you read the "General Rules" to each of your congregations, as the law of the Church requires? According to the Discipline, it is expected that this shall be done before the third quarterly conference, but if you have neglected this duty, it is well to remember that "it is better late than never."

Dr. I. W. Cooper, the President, requests us to state that the opening of Whitworth College has been changed from September 16 to September 24. The sermon on this interesting occasion will be preached by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss. We are gratified to know that this historic institution has the promise of a fine attendance at the next session.

Some time ago Rev. J. O. Bennett, the faithful pastor of the Gibbsland (La.) charge, had the misfortune to lose his horse. But the brethren were determined that he should not buy another; so they made him a present of a splendid young harness horse. This was indeed a generous and kindly act, and we dare say that throughout all the years of his ministry Brother Bennett will keep it in grateful recollection.

Rev. E. L. Whiddon, writing from Walker, La., says: "I have recently been in a week's meeting on the Denham Springs (La.) charge with Brother J. W. Harper. The congregations were very large and there were 12 additions to our Church. I have some spare time at my disposal, and I should be glad to preach or lecture for any of the Louisiana brethren who may desire my services."

The Young Men's Bible Class of the First Methodist Church of Corinth, Miss., of which Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick is the efficient teacher, had an interesting social meeting on the evening of August 21, when delightful refreshments were served. Each gentleman was accorded the privilege of bringing a lady with him. The invitation cards to this gathering were unique and very suggestive.

We understand that Rev. W. W. Holmes, the pastor of Trinity Church, at Ruston, La., is soon to begin a series of meetings. We have not learned whether or not Brother Holmes will do his own preaching, but if he should do so, it will be well done. This pastor preaches to one of the largest congregations in Louisiana.

A letter from Bishop Hoss, written from Nashville, a few days since, contained the following statement: "Next Sunday, August 23, I am to dedicate a church at Franklin, Ky., after which I hope to go to Galbraith Springs and take the rest that I ought to have taken this summer." With the constant demands that the brethren are making upon him, it is exceedingly difficult for this willing worker to put off the harness even for a brief season.

A card received from Rev. C. C. Selecman, of Los Angeles, Calif., informs us that the magnificent institutional church which our Trinity congregation of that city (of which he is pastor) is erecting at a cost of more than half a million dollars, will be opened on September 20. Brother Selecman also states that Bishops Mouzon and Waterhouse were guests of honor at a banquet of the Trinity official board on August 4.

We are informed that Bishop Murrell expects soon to change the place of his residence to Memphis, Tenn. We shall regret to see him leave Mississippi, but we are pleased to know that he is not going far away and that he will continue to be in touch with Millsaps College and our work in that State. The Bluff City should count itself most fortunate in securing two such additions to its citizenship as Bishop and Mrs. Murrell.

Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., is spending his summer vacation at Waynesville, N. C.

In forwarding some subscriptions to the Advocate, Rev. W. W. Perry, of Haynesville, who is one of the most efficient young ministers in the Louisiana Conference, adds a footnote which shows that he is having his usual success in the work. He says: "We are in the midst of our meetings, which have been helpful and fruitful. About 46 have been received into the Church on this charge this year, and we yet have two revivals to hold."

A correspondent informs us that Dr. R. H. Wynn, the popular President of Centenary College, has lately been doing some strenuous campaigning for pupils in North Louisiana, and that his efforts have been rewarded by the promise of a number of students. To accomplish the largest results in the way of influencing our young people to attend our institutions of learning, it is best to have both the local pastor and the school-man to touch them.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate of August 14 stated that Dr. W. H. LaPrade, our pastor at Hazlehurst, Miss., who for some weeks has been in a poor state of health and who some time since underwent a surgical operation at Jackson, Miss., was in Atlanta as a guest of his son, Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., and that he was doing well physically. We sincerely hope that Dr. LaPrade will soon entirely recover from his afflictions and be able to resume the work of his pastorate.

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. A. R. Beasley, pastor of the Lexington (Miss.) Circuit, for several subscriptions sent in from his charge a few days since. In his letter to our office, Brother Beasley adds the following note: "My work is moving along nicely. Three of my protracted meetings have been held and I am glad to state that our labors have not been in vain. I am doing what I can for the Advocate, which is not as generally read by our people as it should be."

Under date of August 18, Rev. Robert Randle, of Eros, La., says: "We have just closed a successful meeting at Indian Village, an appointment on the Eros charge. Twelve persons were received into the Church, and there are some others to be taken in at a future appointment. Great good was done in the church and community. Rev. C. M. Morris did most of the preaching and the greater part of the leading in the singing. Brother Bamburg preached two sermons. My daughter, Mrs. Root, led the music at the organ."

From a recent issue of The South (Holly Springs, Miss.), we take the following: "Mrs. Mary Megginson Stone, a former Marshall County girl, now of Belen, Miss., recently won a Delineator prize for an article in a contest for the best answer to the question, 'If you found your marriage headed wrong, what would you do to make it successful?' She received a check and a complimentary letter from the Editor. Mrs. Stone is to be congratulated upon her success in contributing to the fame of Marshall County as a literary center."

On the Sunday School page of this issue of the Advocate there is printed a clipping from the Shreveport Times which tells of the furnishing of the rooms used by the lower grades of the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church, South, by Mr. Blair of that city. We are indebted for this item to Mrs. S. L. Williams, of Shreveport, who in forwarding it, says: "I am the successor of Mrs. G. E. Cameron in the department referred to in the article. I wish that you could see the home of this department since it has been so beautifully furnished by Mr. Blair."

A Gulfport (Miss.) dispatch to the New Orleans States on August 20 reads as follows: "Fifty boys from the Destitute Boys' Orphans' Home of New Orleans are spending a month's vacation at Mississippi City, under the supervision of Rev. J. L. Sutton, manager of the Home and pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church. The boys hold a religious service every night at the Mississippi City Methodist Church and their singing is attracting crowds. Several days ago five owners of automobiles from Gulfport delighted the boys with a long ride along the coast."

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Field Agent for the Memphis Methodist Hospital, in referring to the magnificent property recently acquired by the trustees of that projected institution, says: "Nothing that we have yet done has so inspired and assured our people. Congratulations are coming from all quarters. At least a dozen of our subscribers have sent me felicitations along with authority to double their subscriptions, and three of these had subscribed $500 each. That is eloquent." So it is. Brother Ellis had a right to be hopeful and happy. He has certainly wrought well. We confidently expect to see this long and urgently needed institution open its doors for service next January.

Rev. W. E. Thomas, pastor of the Second Methodist Church of New Orleans, is at Baker, La., this week, assisting Rev. S. D. Howard in a revival meeting.

We acknowledge ourselves greatly indebted to Rev. J. J. Smylie, our pastor at Louisville, Miss., for a club of 33 subscribers, forwarded on August 17. Brother Smylie, in referring to his charge, says: "Our work is moving along nicely. We hope to build a new church before Conference." Mrs. W. S. Shipman, of Durant, whom the Master so suddenly called home a few days since, was a sister of Brother Smylie, and he is in deep sorrow over her unexpected departure. May the Heavenly Father continue to have him, along with the other stricken loved ones of this ascended worker, in his gracious keeping!

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, Columbia, Miss., 10; Rev. R. E. Rutledge, Florence, Miss., 5; Rev. J. L. Decell, Waynesboro, Miss., 7; Rev. M. L. White, Flora, Miss., 5; Rev. E. S. Lewis, Oxford, Miss., 5; Rev. J. H. Jolly, Meridian, Miss. (Suquena charge), 5; Brother J. J. Davidson, Lafayette, La., 3; Rev. B. F. Lewis, Crystal Springs, Miss., 4; Rev. H. N. Brown, Lake Arthur, La., 5; Rev. S. H. Frazier, Bernice, La., 6; Rev. J. H. Grice, Glancy, Miss., 27.

Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, after 13 months of work in other sections of the State, expects to spend some time in New Orleans during the month of September in the interest of the important cause committed to his hands. He should have the hearty co-operation of all our pastors and people, as well as of the Christian people generally, while he is in the city. The moral people of the State have devolving upon them no more imperative duty than that of suppressing the liquor traffic and they need to get their minds and hearts firmly set upon this difficult task.

Rev. T. H. Morris, of Mansfield, La., who has been resting for a brief season at Auxvasse, Mo., but who expects to return home in a few days, has issued to his congregation at Mansfield the following letter: "On Sunday, September 6, the pastor will have returned from his vacation, ready to take up all departments of the work of the Church. He hopes to meet every member at the 11 o'clock service when, in addition to the holy communion, he will discuss the 'Junior Congregation,' outlining a new phase of work for the children of the church. Let all parents come, and also see that their children are present at that service."

The opening sermon of Mansfield College will be preached in the Methodist Church at Mansfield, La., on Sunday, Sept. 13, at 11 a. m., by Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of Rayville. On the same day at the evening hour Brother Townsley will deliver a sermon to the Young People's Societies of the Church and College. We are especially pleased to know that all the indications point to a record-breaking attendance at Mansfield this fall. As the head of this historic school, President Bobbitt has demonstrated beyond question that he is the right man in the right place, and parents sending their daughters to this splendidly conducted institution may feel assured that they will have the best of care and instruction.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Memphis, Tenn., writes: "My wife is just home from a ten days' stay in the Baptist Hospital of this city, where she underwent a serious operation to remove a tumor from the left side of her neck. The operation was apparently a success, and, though she is still unable to talk with comfort, we believe that she is on the way to a satisfactory recovery. One day while Mrs. Ellis was in the Baptist Hospital four of our preachers met in the office of that institution, each being on the way to see his wife who was undergoing treatment there. Rev. Burke Culpepper, the evangelist, was also there for treatment at the same time. Last month 67 Methodist and but 61 Baptist patients were treated at this institution."

OUR HIGH CALLING.

The Apostle Paul wrote the Christians at Rome that they were "called to be saints." So is every disciple. The noblest feeling that ever stirred a human breast is the aspiration for purity and holiness. But the pathway to perfection is not a smooth and easy one. It requires intelligent, patient, and persistent personal effort, reinforced by the power of God, for one to climb the spiritual heights and stand serene upon their glory-wreathed summits. "Ever upward," is the only fitting motto for the followers of the sinless Christ who ascended into the heavens and who now sits at the right hand of the eternal Father.

YOUR BOY'S TRAINING.

A man to whom you may trust your boy with absolute confidence is Mr.
 Robert K. Morgan, principal of the Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee.

During the past twenty-five years,
 Mr. Morgan has built up this training school for boys, around his own long experience, and his study of boy nature and of the problems of giving the boy the mental preparation, physical well-being, and spiritual strength for an honorable, manly, successful life. He has chosen his faculty, equipped his school, and ordered its conduct, with this one purpose in view.

Mr. Morgan is a graduate of the Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tenn., and of Vanderbilt University. He is a man of strong, wholesome personality and deep Christian character—an inspiration to every boy who come under his care. His close, personal relation with his boy students, his attention to their work, their talents, their special needs, have given his school a position of high distinction. The citizens of Fayetteville have recently presented him with a $15,000 building as an addition to his school.

A request to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary of Morgan School, Tenn., will bring a catalogue and full information of this school.

DAVID NEEDHAM MORROW was born on March 21, 1844 and died on June 24, 1914. Brother Morrow was converted ten years ago and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Brother J. D. Hargens, who at that time was presiding elder of the Alexander District. Brother Morrow lived the most of his life here in Allen Parish, the place of his birth. He was a model young man and after his conversion he was a consistent Christian and died rejoicing in the fact that he was saved and ready to go. He leaves a father, a mother, and a large number of other relatives to mourn his untimely death. His remains were interred in Hopewell cemetery in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, after funeral services conducted by his pastor. We pray God's blessings on the bereaved.

P. A. SWANN.

Mr. C. L. WHITTEN was born on Nov. 23, 1849, and died on Aug. 17, 1914. His death was caused by a kick from a mule, the result of which was so serious that he was carried to Shreveport, La., for the necessary operation, which was performed on the night of July 17, but without avail, and on that night his spirit went home to God. He was a loving husband and father. He asked his children to meet him in heaven, and said he knew that his wife would meet him there as she had given herself entirely into the hands of the Lord to do as seemeth best to Him.
 He was buried in the old home cemetery at Ruston, La. He leaves a sorrowing wife, two sons and two daughters, besides a host of friends to mourn their loss. May the time speedily come when we shall meet him and the other loved ones gone on before, within the beautiful gates of heaven. His loving wife.

Mrs. C. L. WHITTEN.

Little PAULINE MARLAR, daughter of Brother R. J. and Sister Josie Marlar, was born in Eros, La., on March 7, and died on July 31, 1914, aged 4 months and 24 days. I had an especial tie for the little transient bud, just coming into life to pass into eternal glory—only to kiss us and to depart. Sister Marlar had known my wife several years ago and had a warm tie for and a very high application of her, and had named the little angel for her. The babe was a very frail little flower, and the short time that she stayed with us demanded special attention and care, and thus increased the ties growing out of natural claims. May God's smile and care attend the bereft parents, sisters and brother till we meet her again.
 What a comfort: Meet again! Though with us but a few days, she will be with Jesus forever and we shall be gathered with her at the throne of God. She is not too small to claim his attention and his salvation. Her loving pastor, ROBERT RANDLE.

Near Forrest, La., on Aug. 8, 1914,
 Mrs. M. O. LAY was called to her heavenly home. After reading her Bible, she retired in perfect health; went to sleep on earth, and awoke in glory. She was born in Jackson County, Georgia, March 19, 1845. She married Mr. W. H. Lay, who preceded her to the better world about thirty years ago. After his departure, she lived solely for her Lord and her children, and was successful in rearing a large family who are highly respected, and are true Christians.
 One son, Rev. J. L. Lay is a local preacher, supplying a work in the Louisiana Conference. She was happily converted when a girl, joined the
 M. E. Church, South, and for more than fifty years lived a consecrated Christian life. From her life has gone out an influence that is a benediction not only to her family, but to all with whom she was associated.

 Her body was laid to rest in the Land
 Cemetery near Forrest, La., on Aug.
 8, in the presence of a host of friends and loved ones, who sorrow not as those without hope, knowing that she waits for them in the home prepared for the blessed.

FROM BROTHER MORRIS.

Dear Advocate: Through the generosity of the Mansfield congregation,
 I have been at this place since August 1, recuperating. I will return in a short time now, as I expect to reach Mansfield about Sept. 1.

I am at the home of my daughter, who was reared and educated in Kentucky and Texas, having graduated at "Kidd-Key" and taught in Texas a couple of years before her marriage.
 This, geographically, is Callaway County, in Central Missouri, just north of the Missouri River; politically, it is in Champ Clark's Congressional empire—the 4th Missouri; ecclesiastically, it is within the bounds of the Missouri Conference. I have preached a few times at Aurvasse:
 once in our church, and once at a union service, and twice on the adjoining circuit. The brethren and people have been very kind, and seem to like the Southern way of doing things. The Annual Conference is but two weeks off. The reports, so far as I can learn, will be in full, notwithstanding the fact that a considerable drouth has prevailed over this part of the State.

I like Missouri and her people, and am enjoying and profiting by my stay; but I shall be glad when the time comes to resume my work where the magnolias bloom, the cotton grows, and the cool, gulf breezes fan the cheek. I am very sorry that my situation was such that I could not help the brethren in their battles among the pines, as it has been my custom to do. Fraternally.

THOMAS H. MORRIS.

SUGGESTIONS.

Turn boiling water over apples and they will peel much quicker.

All fish except salmon should be placed in warm (not hot) water when put on to boil.

Put a thimble over the end of the curtain rod and the curtain can be easily run on to it.

Yellow dock, root or leaves, steeped in vinegar, will cure the worst case of ring-worm.

Rub the kitchen faucets with lemon peel. Polish with soft cloth and they will be beautifully bright.

Chops and steaks should be seasoned with pepper, salt and a little olive oil one hour before being cooked.

Where screws are driven into soft wood and subjected to considerable strain, they are very likely to work loose, and it is often very difficult to make them hold. In such cases the use of glue is profitable. Make the glue thick: immerse a stick about half the size of the screw, and put into the hole; then put in the screw and drive it home as quickly as possible.

To ascertain the freshness of an egg without breaking, hold it before a strong light and look directly through the shell. If the yolk appears round, and the white surrounding it clear, the chances are that the egg is fresh. Or drop it into water; if the egg sinks quickly and remains at the bottom it is in all probability fresh, but if it stands on end it is doubtful, and quite bad if it floats.
 The shell of a fresh egg looks dull, while that of a stale one is glossy.

Tidings From the Field

Konawa, Okla.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a successful meeting at our Church at Konawa. Rev. J. H. Ingram, of Schlater, Miss., did the preaching. His sermons were messages of love, spoken with the power and demonstration of the Spirit. We had 10 additions to the church and the church was greatly revived. We have a very pleasant charge and everything goes well with us in our new field of labor.—W. L. Broome.

Homewood, Miss.

We have held two of our protracted meetings, which we think resulted in great good. Rev. J. S. Purcell, president of Montrose College, did the preaching, and he did it well. Brother Purcell is a fine, unique, original, logical, Biblical, expository preacher. While he is fearless in his manner of preaching, he is persuasive and enthusiastic, having zeal as well as knowledge. Perhaps knowledge without zeal is worse than zeal without knowledge. If he puts the zeal and knowledge into Montrose College that he puts into his preaching, I feel confident that he will succeed admirably.—J. C. Ellis.

Tylertown, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our regular annual "protracted meeting" began at the old historic China Grove Church, on the fourth Sunday in July, and ran five days. Brother J. A. Wells, of the Topisaw circuit, did the preaching, and did it well, too. My people were all pleased with his work, and he endeared himself to the people of all faiths. The Church was revived spiritually, and we had 8 members added to the membership. The work on the Tylertown charge is in good condition, and we are expecting to go to Conference with a full report, notwithstanding the awful war and the ravages of the boll weevil. The interests of the Advocate are receiving our attention. You are giving us a good paper, and all the preachers in the patronizing Conferences should feel under obligation to increase its circulation.—T. B. Cottrell.

Cockrum, Miss.

Dear Editor: Please allow me space to tell of the glorious meeting just closed at Green Leaf Church. Our pastor, Rev. R. I. Collins, did some good preaching and earnest praying. He had the very efficient help of Brother Miller in his work. Many souls were made happy. Great crowds attended and the Holy Spirit was there in power. It was good to be there and see both the old and young stand up and testify for Christ. Pray that we, the members of dear old Green Leaf Church, may be faithful unto the end; then what a gathering there will be!—Now let me say a few words in behalf of our good pastor. This is his fourth year on this charge, and through his patient labor and earnest prayers much good has been accomplished, for he is truly a good man, and faithful in visiting the poor, the sick, and the suffering. We would like to keep him always but we have to abide by the law of the Church. We feel, however, that our loss will be the gain of others. May God's richest blessings rest upon him wherever he may go, and I trust that He may see fit to send him back to us some day. Long live the dear old Advocate, and may God's blessings rest upon it.—Mrs. Sam D. Powers.

Baker, La.

My third quarterly conference was held on July 18 and 19 at Blackwater. We had a very good conference, and our presiding elder, Brother H. W. Bowman, not only presided with ability, but preached three fine sermons at Blackwater and one at Baker. The kind women of Blackwater spread a fine dinner on the day of the quarterly conference, and it was highly appreciated by all present.—On Monday, July 20, I left Baker to go to North Louisiana to assist Rev. G. D. Anders in a revival meeting. I reached Campti on July 21, where I was met by Brother Boyd and conducted to the church at Davis Springs. There I preached day and night until Sunday night, when the meeting came to a close. We had a splendid meeting with quite a number of conversions and 13 additions to the Church. It was my pleasure to meet many of my old friends, including some who were converted and joined the Church under my ministry years ago. Brother Anders is the same big-hearted, congenial preacher that he was in the years gone by. He is doing a good work on his circuit.—We have had sadness in Baker recently. Mr. C. A. Williams was killed instantly while driving cattle to the dipping vat. His horse fell on him. He was a member of my church and it was my sad duty to attend his funeral. His death was a great shock to the whole community. Just about a week later, Miss Em Carney, one of my leading members, passed away after two months of illness. I also attended her funeral. Just after her death, Brother N. B. Brown, one of my members and stewards, was caused to mourn the death of his only brother, so you see that our town and church have been made to mourn. On August 8, my meeting began at Deerford. Rev. C. A. Battle, of New Orleans, did the preaching and did it well. We had a splendid meeting. There were several conversions and 10 accessions to the Church.—Our meeting will begin here on Thursday, August 20. Rev. W. E. Thomas, of New Orleans, will do the preaching.—S. D. Howard.

A BUSY YEAR.

Rev. Walt Holcomb, the Nashville evangelist, closed his spring and summer engagements last Sunday (August 16), preaching at the Great Bay View Assembly in Michigan. This was Mr. Holcomb's sixth appearance there, and he was engaged again for next year. Mr. Holcomb says this has been one of his busiest and best years. He has held successful meetings in Virginia, Mississippi, Missouri, Georgia, and appeared at Chautauquas in Florida and the Central West.

Mr. Holcomb is now taking a two weeks' vacation at Catoosa Springs, Ga., and while there will conduct a union tent meeting for the pastors at Ringgold. He is already making up his slate for the fall and may be addressed at Nashville, Tenn.

CAMP MEETINGS AND ELSE

spent four days at the Berean Camp near Crystal Springs during the morning but there the year the campground is about forty years old. The preaching was done especially by Dr. Andrews, and was fine. The attendance was large.

I have been going to the camp meeting for nearly forty years. The Berean is the leading establishment of the camp meeting. Methodist families as in the Berean. I am all the time moving out and go home when the camp meeting opens in the fall.

From Crystal Springs I went to the Berean, six miles east of Summit, and stayed five days. The camp was organized more than seventy years ago. John Feltner, John Huffman, Christian Hoover, George Thompson, Harvey Whitaker, Arch McEwen, M. McKee, and others were the original ones. Others among the early ones included were Frank Bridges, Amy Fanny Bridges, James Johnson, Rev. Harvey Whitaker, Walter Leland, Dr. J. O. Magee, and others.

As old men, we should be proud to tell you we had been at every camp meeting that has been there for the past 60 years. His business has been to look after the preachers and their families. He said Brother John Feltner had a place at the rear of a certain tree, where he was nearly every day seventy years ago or more, and sometimes visited with God in prayer for an hour or more at a time, praying for his descendants and others. Brother Feltner's family is one of the largest, most religious, well-behaved families in all that region. Fourteen families of Feltners lived there this year, and four others who married Feltners.

Uncle Robert Feltner, now in his 85th year, can work all day (I was told could plow all day) and rest well at night.

Agnes Kistiah Eakin, who died near Gainesville some years ago in her 85th year, was a sister of Brother John Feltner. Just before she died she told her pastor that she joined the Church when she was five years old, and had never knowingly broken one of the Church's rules.

This is indeed a remarkable family. I have been acquainted with the family for sixty years. Most of them are farmers, and manage "to pay as they go"—keep out of debt.

REVIVAL AT SHARON, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed one of the best meetings we have ever had at Sharon, so say our people. Some of the visible results were seven additions to the Church on profession of faith, and the church was quickened into a deeper spiritual life. The preaching was done by Rev. T. J. Norworthy, the evangelist. He was to have held a meeting for me at Lone Pine, beginning on the 9th inst.; he came, but was called home the next day because of the extreme illness of his father. He came to Sharon on the 10th inst. and began our meeting there closed on the following Thursday night. His preaching is practical and convincing. He makes an acquaintance with all, and is intensely sincere. He has every particle of the energy of his being in his preaching.

We gladly recommend Brother Norworthy to our people. He is a native of the South and is a true friend to the people. The result of his visit will be what we feel that the pastor and his family received two severe soundings which will not soon be forgotten. One of them came from our good people of Lone Pine, the other came from Sharon. Our hearts overflow in gratitude to the great God of every soul and perfect all for these blessings and our constant prayer is that he may use us in his glory.

CLEVELAND (WIS.) HOLINESS CAMP MEETING.

The week Holiness camp meeting near Cleveland closed Sunday night, Aug. 16. The weather was kept away the crowd until Sunday, when great throngs of people attended all three services. Twenty cars full of people were present at the afternoon service, besides in buggies, wagons, or on horseback many came on foot. Brothers McBride and Clark did not fail to declare the whole counsel of God; men and women were made to tremble with conviction for sin. About seventy came to the altar and found pardon or purity; some were saved at home between services.

We had good singing. Brother Clark not only preaches the gospel but sings it as well. His solos were very effective; the Christians were encouraged and sinners' hearts were stirred under the power of song. Miss Cynthia Lagrone presided at the organ and played to the glory of God. Uncle Doe exhorted, prayed, and shouted in the same old way, with his glowing testimony and shining face. Many hearts were brought under conviction.

Cade Williams looked after the camp, being assisted by Paul Howell, Homer O'Brien and others. Many other workers were present to help in the work. Brother W. I. Davis, Fred Williams, R. L. Bevers and wife, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Howell, Mrs. Tucker and others, too numer-

THE EBENEZER (LA.) CAMP MEETING.

Mr. Editor: Doubtless a brief report of the Ebenezer Camp Meeting (near Montgomery, La.) will be of some interest to your readers. Brother Sam Harrison was in charge of the camp, and Brother Sam Holcomb, of Oklahoma, and Brother C. R. Crowe, of Louisville, Ky., were the leaders in dispensing the Word. Bro. S. H. Prather, also of Louisville, was the director of the song services. Under God's good providence I have been privileged to attend many holiness camp meetings (I attended those at dear old Scottsville for 22 years), but I have never witnessed better services or a deeper and more thorough work than which took place at Ebenezer under the direction of these courageous and consecrated workers. The Lord greatly blessed us in the first service and the meetings grew continuously better until they reached such a height of spirituality that we felt that God was wonderfully near us. Men and women testified that their Christian experiences were better established than ever before. There was no fanaticism or shallow work. There were five services a day, one of them being a Bible reading conducted at nine o'clock by Brother Holcomb, which was exceedingly helpful to the Christian people. He also conducted during the meeting a very impressive service for the men and also one for the women. The visitors in attendance were numerous, and it was remarked that more unconverted young people were present than had ever been at the Camp ground before. As no record was kept, I can not report definitely as to the number of conversions and sanctifications; but I feel perfectly safe in saying that on the whole, the meeting this year was above the average in point of success. Everybody interested was delighted with the outcome and with the fine service rendered by our leaders, whom we shall not soon forget. JAMES H. WALKER.

FROM BROTHER CURRIE.

I am at Piedmont, S. C., holding a meeting, and God is with us in much power. Last night the whole audience was moved to tears and some shouted. I preached from the last clause of the 3d verse of the fifth chapter of 1st Thessalonians. Oh, how the Lord did bless us! Some people over here still have the old-time religion. The crops in this State are fine.

W. T. CURRIE.

SLUMP IN WHISKY CONSUMPTION.

The American people drank less whisky during the past twelve months than they did the year before. Reports to the Internal Revenue Commissioner just made public show that in the first eleven months of the fiscal year there was a decrease of $3,734,857 in the income from the manufacture and sale of distilled liquors. Estimates on the June receipts indicate that the total decline in distilled liquor tax for the twelve months will probably be $4,250,000. The gain in receipts from fermented liquor, beer, ale, and the like was only about $860,000, so the net slump in receipts from all kinds of liquors will be nearly $3,500,000.—Religious Telescope.

NO DANGER OF TOO MUCH LOVE.

When Jesus comes between true friends he does not separate, but he unites them. Some tell us that we must not love our dear ones too much, lest we make God jealous and he take them away. This is only pagan teaching. The man who had the best right to speak on this subject had a very different idea. He said if you can not love your fellows on earth, how can you love your Father in heaven? The Master always stands between real friends, but ever to bring them closer. Formerly the ocean separated the continents; now it connects them. As we get to know more of the purpose of the Lord in our lives, we see that he alone makes great and abiding affection possible.—Sunday School Times.

PAST THE DEAD-LINE.

John Wesley, the preacher, lived to be eighty-eight years old. Arnauld, the theologian and sage, translated Josephus in his eightieth year. Dryden, in his sixty-eighth year, commenced the translation of the Iliad. Dr. Carey, the founder of missions, acquired many of the dialects of India after he was quite advanced in life. Michael Angelo was still painting his giant canvasses at eighty-nine years of age; Titian, at ninety, painted with the vigor of youth, and kept on painting until he was ninety-nine. Franklin did not commence his philosophical pursuits until he was fifty. Newton, at eighty-three, worked as hard as he did in middle life. Verily, it would seem that there is now no age at which a man—or woman—may retire!—The Presbyterian.

OBSERVATIONS.

"True Christianity is enthusiasm for the living Christ. Enthusiasm is the spiritual test of the individual's interest in eternal things as they are in Christ Jesus, our Lord."

Every minister of the gospel ought to oppose the liquor traffic, because the liquor traffic interferes with his business.—Methodist Recorder.

When we try to understand what has been the secret of unusual success in the men and women who have been conspicuous as the instruments and channels of a strength and a goodness greater than their own, we invariably discover that the explanation is to be found in the fact of their single-minded, whole-hearted devotion. They have given themselves and consecrated their lives.—Arthur W. Robinson.

HALF THE WORLD.

Remember that half the world has never yet heard of Christ. That is the half that is poor to-day. The average income through India, China, and the poorer nations of Asia is not over ten cents per day per capita. Half the world is without any medical knowledge worthy of the name. Roughly speaking, about half the world to-day is without education and cannot read or write in any language. Half the world is without the social rights of manhood, womanhood, or childhood. Compare your life with the life of this other half.

MESSAGE FROM THE THIRD VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

I am writing this little message just after having sent in my report for the second quarter of the year. Just one year ago this month I came to the work of the third vice president. As I look back over the year's work, I realize that while we have much for which to be thankful, on the other hand, there is yet much to be done. Of course, the summer months are upon us now, and many of the circles are disbanded. Yet now is the time to begin to plan the work for the fall. Let us begin to get ready for the mission study campaign in October. Let every woman who reads this remember that we cannot, we must not, rest satisfied until every auxiliary has its study circle. Then, too, we need more women who are doing systematic Bible study. We can never be truly "workmen fit for the Master's use" until we have a thorough knowledge of his will concerning us. This we can find in no other place save in his revealed will—the Bible. If time cannot be found to come together as a circle much good study can be done as individuals.

Just a word, now, in regard to the Prayer Circles. This does not necessarily mean a coming together of the women for prayer, but rather each woman pledging herself to pray daily in her own home for some special phase of the work. Surely we can all do this. Yet I report only six prayer circles in the Conference. Let us study and give and pray earnestly, and may God bless the work this year.

Mrs. W. D. DAVIS.

MISSIONS: A DEBT.

The following extracts are taken from a leaflet published by permission of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians. . . . So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also. (Rom. I. 14, 15). In these forceful words, the apostle expressed his own personal conviction and resolve. He confessed himself the heathen's debtor. He owed them the gospel. Although he had already done more along this line than any dozen other men of his time, he laid no claim to merit, nor considered that he was conferring any favor on the Romans in making an added effort to take them the gospel. It was his duty, his debt, and he was only seeking as an honest man to discharge it. But if it was for Paul a debt, can it be something less for the rest of us? Yet the majority of professing Christians regard missions with utter indifference, a missionary as an enigma, and his task as self-imposed. They wonder by what strange freak of nature certain pious people choose to go and live among yellow or black folks rather than stay at home. Has your conscience been convicted of a debt you owe the heathen, or have only your emotions been stirred at times with a feeling of pity?

We OWE the heathen the gospel. We are their DEBTORS—

Out of gratitude for our own salvation, since only "by the grace of God I am what I am."

Out of loyalty to Christ, who commissioned us to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

Out of compassion for heathen suffering and sorrow, and, finally

Out of the realization that in the gospel we have the remedy for their temporal ills and the only answer to their souls' eternal needs.

May God convict his children of their debts and make them "ready as much as in them is" to meet them!

Then at last there will be no lack of missionaries to go, or intercessors to pray, or money to send. May this conviction begin with YOU!

A DELAYED MARRIAGE.

Under the above caption we read a delightful little story in one of our religious papers quite recently, and we repeat it here, hoping that some of our young people may see it and profit thereby:

A young Korean woman came to this country in company with a returning missionary and his wife. Her purpose in coming was to wed a Korean man who had preceded her some months before. Upon the arrival of the vessel, the young man, true to his promise, met her. Miss Inul had a long talk with her fiancé that day and then announced to the missionary that she would not marry him, at least not just then. This placed the missionary in quite an embarrassing position, for in Korea, if a Christian woman breaks her engagement she is suspended from Church membership. Their laws are more stringent than ours along such lines. The missionary and young man entreated Miss Inul to reconsider her decision, but to no avail.

She continued to remain firm. Some days later the young man returned again, and the missionary, going to call Miss Inul found her praying to God, and asking him to help the missionary to see that she was acting as she thought right. The missionary, who had been rather impatient previous to this time, dealt more gently with her and finally prevailed upon her to tell him and his wife the whole situation. The sum and substance of it was that in her first conversation with her fiancé she found that he was not placing God first in his thoughts. Since coming to America his energies had been spent in making money, and she felt that to marry him until he changed would be disastrous to their future happiness. She was carrying out to the letter the Bible injunction, "Be ye not unequally yoked." Would it not be refreshing if our young women insisted upon God being first in the minds and hearts of the young men into whose hands they give the keeping of their lives? Needless to say that this young Korean took the money which he had saved up to pay dower for his bride and entered a Bible school, where he is to remain a year, at the end of which time, if he has learned his Bible and become a better Christian, he will win the hand of this staunch little Christian from over the seas.

The myriads of parasitic germs which cause Tetters, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc., cannot be killed internally. They live and feed on the surface and must there be treated. Tetterine is the common sense treatment that has scientific principles to back it up. E. A. Kennedy, dermatologist of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "Tetterine has cured quickly and permanently several stubborn cases of Tetters that came under my personal knowledge. One of 15 years standing. We at dermatologists are by mail from Shapirine Co., Savannah, Ga."

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Mr. W. W. Williams.

At the request of Brother A. A. Phillips, a number of the workers of the Pineville school have planned to go with him on a visit to his congregation of Indians near Forest Hill and organize a Sunday school, and also go to another tribe near Oakdale and do the same three or four weeks later. This work has long been in readiness, ripe and waiting for us. Great difficulty will possibly be experienced in organizing this work on account of most of these Indians being unable to read or write; but a plan is being arranged to overcome this. In one place an Indian will have to superintend the school, but he is a little better educated than the others. It is intended to organize them in such a way that they will stay organized.

Several other schools have been organized and the efficiency of many schools in Rapides Parish is greatly improved. Statistics from all over the parish show this. Several new Teacher-training classes have been organized and are doing fine work. A Teacher-training class is being organized and conducted by the Epworth League of First Church, Alexandria. They are also studying "Day-break in Darkest Africa," a volume in the Mission Study Course. The League interest seems to have reached its maximum. They are also giving liberally to Sunday school work and have pledged $120 to Africa. There is a good Teacher-training class at Boyce. A number of schools are to begin to use the graded literature on October 1. The school at Tioga is said to be improving. Several workers from Pineville are practically acting as voluntary field workers in this parish, visiting schools at Ball, Tioga, and other places nearly every week.

Mrs. A. C. Lyons of Meeker and several teachers from other parts of the parish visited the Chicago Convention, at which Dr. Hamill was elected President.

The Parish Interdenominational Sunday School Convention was held at Cheneyville on August 13 and 14. A large number of preachers were present and took quite a lively interest in the proceedings. The whole religious sentiment of this parish seems to have been wonderfully toned up within the last two years or more. One earnest worker was heard to say that the most talented field secretary and all the money needed could carry the work as far as the pastor and superintendent of the local school desire it to go, but no further.

Rev. J. F. Dring, of the Pineville-Tioga charge, who is serving his first year is insisting upon having Teacher-training classes in all his schools and is taking an active interest in Sunday school work, although he has been away much of the time on account of sickness.

Presiding Elder H. W. May is insisting on Children's Day being observed everywhere in his district. Alexandria, La.

SOME SPARKS FROM THE CONFERENCE OF PASTORS AND SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS AT JUNALUSKA.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

At Elan, Fla., during a portion of the Sunday school hour, the pastor is in his study at the church. All boys and girls under sixteen years of age who do not belong to the Church, are sent to the pastor for special instruction. They go by classes.

In Atlanta, Georgia, at one Church, the pastor preaches to the children each second Sabbath.

In Asheville, N. C., each third Sabbath is "Children's Day," during which the children of the Sunday school have the right of way, the pastor preaching to them.

In Memphis, Tenn., one Church devotes from fifteen to twenty minutes of each Sunday school hour to a short sermon to the children.

In Mississippi, one pastor, with the co-operation of the elementary force of the Sunday school, devotes from ten to fifteen minutes of each eleven o'clock hour to the children.

FURNISHES SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The elementary department of the First Methodist Sunday school has recently been equipped with the necessary, and, at the same time very beautiful furnishings, all the gift of Mr. C. W. Blair.

In this department there are four divisions—Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary and Junior classes—each now having its full complement of tables, chairs, charts, maps, and other supplies. Mr. Blair, in making the gift, said that his first interest in the work began when he witnessed a program planned by Mrs. G. E. Cameron, who was in charge of this department of the Sunday school prior to Rev. G. E. Cameron's transfer to Alexandria, and that he made the gift in recognition of the splendid work done by Rev. and Mrs. Cameron during their three years' residence in Shreveport.

The new furniture has greatly stimulated the work of the Sunday school, and plans are already under way for the rally day celebration to be held in October.—Shreveport Times.

ERUPTIONS CAN BE STOPPED

by internal blood purifiers because they are caused by blood disorders. However, Eczema, Tetter, Ringworm, Itch, Scaly Patches, etc., cannot because they are parasitic skin diseases. It takes a positive skin remedy like Tetterine to destroy the germs and heal the surface. Dr. W. S. Fielder, Electric, Ala., says: "I never use anything else but Tetterine in all skin troubles." 50c at druggist or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

GREATLY IMPORTANT.

"Every man is needed—but only a little," said some thoughtful individual. But by all the indications it must be true that the office of the Methodist steward is exceedingly important, and that he is a much needed man. The Bishops pass for a large item and should do so, the same is true of connectional men and others. But when you eliminate the Steward the Church enterprises go slowly; revivals decline to flourish; mission claims so badly, and the angels of Church prosperity takes his flight. The Holy Spirit even must cease to support in the great work of advancing the Kingdom of Christ, and failure must be written upon the altars of the greatest institution that is known to the world.

Bishop McTear, in visiting a cemetery, came upon a marble shaft at the bottom of which were the words: "A Methodist steward for 40 years." The distinguished churchman took off his hat and bowed low before the inscription in recognition of the fact that the dust of a great character slept in that tomb—a Christian hero had been crowned in heaven.

The work of a steward is vital. The whole land was cursed of God in the time of the Prophet Malachi, and all for the reason that the contributions had been withdrawn from the Church. The collectors had declined the service expected at their hands.

In a sermon by Dr. James A. Anderson from the text, "What is man?" he proceeded to say, as he approached the climax of his quarterly meeting discourse: "By all these indications man is evidently great, and grades as first among the intelligences of universal creation. Suns may perish and constellations may fade from the heavens, but man in the image of God must exist forever. But amazement takes the form of profoundest astonishment when we discover the smallness to which some specimens of the human race may descend, when they have paid the pastor in spoil't hams and sour sorghum." This steward of 40 years reported 100 per cent once per quarter and no "sorghum."

The membership of the Church is educated in Christian giving principally by the stewards. The pastor may preach on the subject of ministerial pay when he is prepared to "move on," and so may the presiding elder; and they should do so if the conditions appear to demand it. However, the steward is the "key man" in handling the Church's expenses and many times must travel his thankless beat, "doing service unto God and not to men." Happy is the membership and the pastor who appreciate his important office, and the infinite value of the work which he is doing as the years go by! "Collections full," says the pastor at the Conference, "and 40 additions to the Church," but without the promptness and fidelity of his "official board" these fine results must have failed to appear. Preachers, from the smallest even unto the Bishops, are supposed to "lift up the voice like a trumpet," as the prophet suggests and as duty may indicate. Proper sowing is in order, without special temerity as to the reaping. The sowing of a church also bears fruit many times, just the same as the sowing of the minister. Short pay from the church when spelled out to its last analysis results frequently in a short preacher for the pulpit. A 25-cent salary and a 25-cent preacher have an affinity one for the other, and sooner or later, must appear at the same place and more often sooner than later.

The Methodist pastors are most carefully selected and sent up to the Conferences by the laymen of the Church, but they differ very much and should do so. A precise duplicate of even a great preacher would be difficult to use and the same might be said of a distinguished church. Imitations are never at a premium. The power of the Wesleyan movement was much in the fact that it declined to "conform." Mutual admiration and sentimental suggestions are nice enough things, but when the Captain of our salvation appeared, he rebuked the Pharisees and proceeded by methods peculiar to himself. Great churches, however, develop many times from smallest beginnings, and the novice of the pulpit to-day may find it possible to be a "son of thunder" tomorrow. Grundy Mission and the coming Bishop Marvin found each other for the reason that each was counted ordinary at the time; but the man and the opportunity had met. The future Bishop was greater for all the years to come as a consequence of his experience at Grundy; and the secluded pastoral charge became known among the angels, for there was "joy in heaven" because of the many who were brought to Christ. A good church is the world's greatest benediction, and the fact remains true that "no nation survives the loss of its religion." The real philanthropist and man of true greatness is always a supporter and friend of the Church.

At the final day great surprises must constantly astonish the multitudes of the assembled universe as they witness proceedings at the judgment seat. Lazarus assumes a throne and Dives takes his place in the domain of darkness; and "according as his works shall be," so also shall be the reward of every member of the militant kingdom of the Divine Christ. At such a time must appear in royal splendor the finer specimens of the Methodist steward, and it shall be said of him, "Be thou over ten cities." Shannon, Miss. A. H. WILLIAMS.

AGAINST A HIGHER LIQUOR TAX.

The Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church is strongly opposed to increasing the Federal tax on liquors. In a recent public appeal issued against such a movement, the officers of the Society made the following declaration: "Any extension of this iniquitous participation by the Government in a vicious and inherently criminal trade will be fought to the last ditch by church members who realize its shameful nature." It was also asserted "that doubling the tax on liquors would quadruple the difficulties now facing the Hobson-Shepherd prohibition amendment pending before Congress"; and the opinion was expressed that but for the Federal liquor act of 1863 authorizing the liquor traffic, it would have been abolished long ago.

"Enlarge my heart to make Thee room;
Enter and ever in me stay;
The crooked then shall straight become,
The darkness shall be lost in day."

All men make mistakes, but a wise man does not keep on falling into the same errors. There is such a thing as rising upon the steps of previous failures to worthier work and loftier achievements.

***

Build your library around the Word of God. The Bible is a lifetime study, and even if you do your best to master it, death is sure to find you with the task far from finished. For aught we know, this glorious Volume may be one of the text-books of the Christian in eternity.

***

We hold to the Biblical and Wesleyan doctrine of "sin in believers." Oh, the pride, the selfishness, the envy, the unbelief, the uncharitableness, and the love of the world that exist even among persons that are regenerate! To say that this is not true, is to say that there are scarcely any Christians on earth. Here is largely the explanation of the weakness and meager spiritual achievements of Zion in this day. Regardless of how it is to be attained, are we as ministers holding up before our congregations the standard of a pure and holy life as we should? This is a question well worth prayerfully considering.

***

The New York World stated a few days ago that the United States Senate had dispensed with daily prayers in order to expedite trust legislation. We think that the Senate is to be commended for getting in a hurry, but we are of the opinion that if the Senators were really to try, they could find some better way of gaining time than this. We have heard of some great Christian workers who when they realized that a strenuous time was ahead tarried longer than usual at the throne of grace. But doubtless they had a more profound conviction as to the efficacy and value of prayer than most of the Solons at Washington.

***

There is an old saying that men engaged in a calling seldom invoke their skill in behalf of themselves; that carpenters generally live in inferior houses; that cobblers usually wear poor shoes; that tailors, as a rule, dress shabbily; that lawyers rarely litigate, and that physicians do not often take their own medicines. This may do very well for men engaged in secular vocations, but it will not do for ministers and other Christian workers. They must practice what they preach and feed upon Christ themselves before they can feed others upon him. Perhaps the reason that our labors as servants of the Master have been so fruitless is that in our concern for those about us we have forgotten to deepen by meditation and prayer our own spiritual lives. "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ," was Paul's exhortation to the people to whom he ministered.

"HOISTED ON THEIR OWN PETARD."

One of the proud boasts of the present-day new school of theologians is that they are keeping step with the march of progress—that they are up-to-date. They have a way of sneering at persons who do not agree with them and styling them mossbacks and old fogies. We have heard some of them even charge some of our ablest Bishops who do not take to higher criticism as having ceased to read the latest books and as not keeping up theologically with the times. A point upon which many of these fancied pioneers in the field of religious thought particularly delight to dwell is the extent to which the Copernican system of astronomy has played havoc with the cosmogony of Moses and the teachings of the Scriptures generally as to the Universe.

But are these scholarly gentlemen as progressive as they imagine themselves to be? There are some students and writers of no mean order of ability who do not think so. In the July number of The Contemporary Review, in a most interesting article entitled, "Theology—Ptolemaic or Copernican?" Mr. E. Griffith-Jones, after calling attention to the fact that Paul anticipated Copernicus and placed the center of his theology in the heavenly world and not within any earthly circle, openly charges the present modern theologians with adopting the contrary view and of making the earth and man the center of their teachings, thus going back to the old Ptolemaic system. He says:

"This old antithesis in Astronomy—whether the earth is the center of the cosmos, or that the center is away in the 'illimitable Universe'—is one which has re-appeared in theology throughout the ages; and it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that it is the burning question for all religious thinkers to-day. The liberal movement of thought during the last century in many of its aspects was a movement backward from the Copernican to the Ptolemaic point of view—from Ontology to psychology, from Supernaturalism to Naturalism, from Theism to Pantheism, from an objective religion to a subjective religiosity. In striking contrast to the immense enlargement of the Physical Universe to our vision, has been the steady contraction of the spiritual Universe to our faith. The center of emphasis has been removed from God as the source of religion, to man as its subject, and the world-wide manifestations of the spiritual instinct have been found more interesting than the vast background of mystery out of which it has emerged, and of which it is the expression. This concentration of attention on what is around, beneath, and within us, has had beneficent results for science, but it has evolved serious issues for faith. It has not only contracted its scope, but it has lessened its intensity. By making man the measure of all things, it has dethroned God from his central place in human thought, emptied the Universe of its divinest meanings, and tended to inhibit at their source the spiritual forces that periodically renew the race. The splendid impulses and revivals of faith which have periodically revitalized Christianity have always flowed from a renewed realization of its heavenly origins; and the theology which finds its center in any conception of the Godhead other than as free, personal, and transcendent, is barren of converting power whether over individuals or communities."

Having made this impressive general statement, Mr. Griffith-Jones proceeds to particulars. First, he shows that these modernists have carried the Ptolemaic view into religious philosophy. He points out that they stress God's Immanence in his material works about them, to the obscuration of his transcendence over nature; that the center about which they would have all their philosophizing revolve is God in nature, while they revolt at the truth that he also is above nature; and that he antedated it, created it, and may vary it at will. The latter he declares was Christ's view. Upon this point he says: "Thus it is that Christianity, while affirming the immanence of God, subordinates that aspect of him to his transcendence. If we go back to the fountain-head we shall find that Jesus, though delicately sensitive to the immanent aspect of the divine activity, habitually speaks of God as his 'Father' who is 'in heaven,' and is immeasurably more interested in the spiritual, super-sensual, 'heavenly' order, than in the physical, or even the human. His interest in men is as possible citizens of this heavenly order; his one aim and passion is to bring the earthly disorder into harmony with that heavenly (transcendent) order, and so to influence and inspire them, that his Father's will may be done on earth as it is 'in heaven.'"

Following this, the writer shows that the Ptolemaic view is carried by the new school of thinkers into Christology, turning away, as they do, from the Eternal, Divine Son as the chief factor in the great work of redemption, to Christ the man, dwelling and operating upon earth; and from his atonement as finding its basis "in the ethical necessities of a spiritual Universe and a holy God," to a sort of subjective influence designed to appeal to the human mind and conscience here on earth—in other words, that there was no necessity for it outside of its effect upon man himself. And so in the conversion of the soul, the divine agent of the Holy Spirit, coming from above, is pushed aside to make way for cultural theories and the development of innate potentialities.

The lack of space will not permit us to give more of the reasoning of this remarkably brilliant writer. The fragmentary quotations that we have made can give no adequate conception of the impressive manner in which he points us how Ptolemaic in their theological processes these gentlemen who prate so loudly of the influence of the teachings of Copernicus upon the Bible really are. Instead of being forward-looking theologians, according to Mr. Griffith-Jones, they have turned their faces backward, and while chanting of progress, are merely re-treading error's well-beaten and long-forsaken paths. A more striking instance of a school of intellectual boasters being "hoisted on their own petard" we do not remember ever to have seen.

THE BATTLE OF BLENHEIM.

(This fine old poem is so pertinent in its suggestions that, following the example of the Western Christian Advocate, of Cincinnati, we have decided to reprint it. It will doubtless recall the early school days of many of our readers.—Editor New Orleans Advocate.)

It was a summer evening—
Old Kaspar's work was done,
And he before his cottage door
Was sitting in the sun;
And by him sported on the green
His little grandchild, Wilhelmine.

She saw her brother Peterkin
Roll something large and round,
Which he beside the rivulet,
In playing there, had found;
He came to ask what he had found
That was so large and smooth and round.

Old Kaspar took it from the boy,
Who stood expectant by;
And then the old man shook his head,
And, with a natural sigh—
"Tis some poor fellow's skull," said he,
"Who fell in the great victory."

"I find them in the garden,
For there's many hereabout;
And often, when I go to plow,
The plowshare turns them out;
For many thousand men," said he,
"Were slain in the great victory."

"Now tell us what 'twas all about,"
Young Peterkin he cries;
And little Wilhelmine looks up
With wonder-waiting eyes—
"Now tell us all about the war,
And what they fought each other for."

"It was the English," Kaspar cried,
"Who put the French to rout;
But what they fought each other for
I could not well make out;
But everybody said," quoth he,
"That 'twas a famous victory."

"My father lived at Blenheim then,
Yon little stream hard by;
They burnt his dwellings to the ground,
And he was forced to fly;
So with his wife and child he fled,
Nor had he where to rest his head."

"With fire and sword the country round
Was wasted far and wide;
And many a childing mother there
And new-born baby died;
But things like that you know, must be
At every famous victory."

"They say it was a shocking sight
After the field was won—
For many thousand bodies here
Lay rotting in the sun;
But things like that you know must be
After a famous victory."

"Great praise the Duke of Marlborough won,
And our good Prince Eugene."
"Why, 'twas a very wicked thing!"
Said little Wilhelmine.
"Nay, nay, my little girl!" quoth he,
"It was a famous victory."

"And everybody praised the Duke
Who this great fight did win."
"But what good came of it at last?"
Quoth little Peterkin.
"Why, that I cannot tell," said he;
"But 'twas a famous victory."

—Robert Southey.

WELL-SPENT SABBATHS.

Who can compute the wealth of the well-spent Sabbaths, fifty-two golden opportunities right from the hand of God, each year? What shall we do with them? Can we be trusted with them? Can we be trusted with such untold wealth? Would we spoil, or waste, or mar them? Both in the house of God and in the quiet of our families, or rooms, we may learn of God, may build up the physical, mental, and spiritual, and go forth into the new week, girded anew for the task, the trial, and the temptation. These heavenly gifts are ours to lift us up toward that which is holiest and best. Dare we seek less for ourselves than God would in his love and wisdom plan for us? Best of all, each well-spent Sabbath, as well as every well-spent day, strengthens our love and taste both for the sacred day and for the things that are lovely, true and inspiring. Such a day is an invigorating mental and moral bath.

"Smiles and kisses are all I remember," said a Christian mother yesterday, as she spoke of her children, now grown. What a blessing that no scars were left upon the memory. Too often the memories of home are preserved only in family jars that were never known to preserve anything good, which are never able to keep anything worth while.—W. H. Jordan, in Christian Intelligencer.

A DANGEROUS COMBINATION IF NOT A DESIGNED CONSPIRACY.

It is a cheering sign of the times that many thoughtful people are awakening to the danger to our institutions arising from the methods of the Rockefeller and Carnegie boards, which are deliberately undertaking to determine the character of education in America.

At the meeting of the National Educational Association held recently in St. Paul, Minn., the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"Resolved, That we view with alarm the activity of the Carnegie and Rockefeller foundations, agencies not in any way responsible to the people, in their efforts to control the policies of our State educational institutions; to fashion them after their own conceptions; to standardize our courses of study; and to surround the institutions with conditions which menace true academic freedom and defeat the primary purpose inviolable in our common schools, normal schools, and universities."

The danger which these educators perceive so clearly was pointed out several years ago by that ably conducted newspaper, the New Orleans Times-Democrat, in these words:

"Every college which shares in the largesse poses as a suppliant, in a sense. Not only is its policy partially directed by the board, but it is additionally influenced, wittingly or unwittingly, by the desires of the benefactors. The atmosphere of class room and campus is dangerously subject to taint; the habits of thought of its students may with comparative ease be given a twist not easily corrected. Whether the powerful engine thus created is now put to sinister uses or not, the temptation to employ it is ever present, and must inevitably grow stronger as the system gathers strength and force."

"Here in the South the temptation of the colleges to seek these conditional gratuities is great because the funds available for education are small, and the need of more abundant educational facilities is pressing. In struggling schools, where the problem of maintenance is difficult, the offer of aid in philanthropic guise is naturally attractive. But no college that is worthy to live can afford to surrender its independence nor submit its policies to the guidance of any oligarchy which draws its authority and owes its existence to a few excessively rich men who have, after all, a very heavy and very practical stake in the venture. If through this agency the American Colleges, or the Southern Colleges can be drawn under the control or rendered subject to the influence of the rich men who support the General Education Board, it will be only a question of time when that influence will be exerted to the deep and lasting injury of the American people."

The time which the "Times-Democrat" predicted has now come, and the members of the National Educational Association, who adopted the resolutions at St. Paul, Minn., show what deep and lasting injury has already been done by the Carnegie and Rockefeller boards.

Both these boards are injurious, but "the Carnegie Foundation" is especially injurious. It is seeking to fix the terms of admission to American Colleges and to determine all educational standards in America. No one objects to proper standards in collegiate work; but it is a grave assumption of power when the agents of the Carnegie Foundation undertake to dictate the educational standards of a continent. They do not undertake this supreme task by any legal authorization, but by the imperious power of money. The Committees of the Federal Congress, who deal with college, weights and measures, do not begin to affect the country by their conclusions so seriously as do these self-constituted standardizers of the educational institutions of the United States.

They have been directing their attention especially to medical colleges in recent years, and have black-listed and put out of business a number of worthy institutions. That there were medical schools of an unworthy character among the number destroyed is beyond question; but the agents of the Carnegie Foundation can not be trusted to kill and make alive medical colleges or any other educational institutions. That they have been able to draw very skillfully the American Medical Association into their scheme does not make the matter less serious, but rather more dangerous.

In a recent address the dean of the Medical Department of the University of Vermont affirms that there is nothing less than a conspiracy against the smaller colleges. He says:

"I am very much inclined to believe that there is a conspiracy, and I say it advisedly after much thought that there is conspiracy on the part of several organizations and on the part of schools, to put the smaller medical colleges out of business. It stands to reason that if the smaller colleges close, the students will have to go to Columbia, Yale, New York colleges, or elsewhere. Dartmouth has gone through this same experience and the octopus has practically squeezed out the existence of the Hanover Medical School in the past two years. I believe that this organization, the fundamental principle of which is the Carnegie Foundation, is trying to put the University of Vermont out of business. When they release stories to the Sunday papers of New York, and, as I have learned, Springfield and other cities, and furnish them with identical cuts, there must be something behind it. When they sent out the cuts of the University of Vermont, they sent a picture of the old medical building, now used as a lodging house, and the worst building connected with the University. They felt they ought to have two buildings and they chose the next smallest, a good one and a new one, but small—the agricultural building. I should like to know what noble-minded spirit must have inspired somebody to send out these cuts when we have such good buildings as you know there are on the campus."

Whether there is, or is not, a conspiracy formed to crush out the small colleges in the interest of a few larger institutions, it is certainly true that this whole system of "Carnegie Units" is a pernicious scheme which must work evil. This fact was conclusively shown by President Lawrence of Harvard University in an address delivered in Chicago last February. With reference to these procrustean methods of requiring an applicant for admission to a medical college to have swallowed so many "Carnegie Units," President Lowell said:

"We are to ask not what a man knows, but whether he has at any time taken a course with a fixed number of hours of lectures and laboratory work. In short you are requiring not a result but a process: you are ascertaining not whether a man has a proper preparation for the study of medicine, but whether he has gone through a regime of training which may in ordinary cases secure the result desired, but which is sometimes not necessary for the purpose, and often inadequate. You are using a rough mechanical test which is inaccurate on both sides, instead of a personal test which would be far more accurate."

But if the personal test for which President Lowell contends were used on applicants for entrance into medical colleges instead of the "rough mechanical test," the machine power of the "Carnegie Units" would be at an end, and these machine men of the "Carnegie Foundation" could no longer be able to say who shall and who shall not enter upon the study of medicine in the United States.

Inevitably this whole scheme will exclude some of the brightest men in the country from becoming physicians. It will in the end put almost insuperable barriers before young men of small means, who may desire to enter the profession; for it will shut them up to acquiring medical education at distant and expensive schools after long and costly courses of study. It will close many colleges, and put in the hands of an oligarchy the control of the medical education in the United States. It will not improve the quality of the medical profession, or raise the standard of medical practice.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

AN OPEN LETTER TO DR. GROSS ALEXANDER, EDITOR OF THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

My Dear Doctor: I address you this open letter because I look upon you as chief of the staff of editors, whose duty it is to mold and guide the thought of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and especially of its ministry in Biblical, theological and literary study. Then, too, I am not unmindful of the accuracy of your scholarship and your influence among the men in our Church who claim scholarship, whatever their real acquirements may be. You are aware, no doubt, that it is no uncommon thing to hear the charge made that many who pose as higher critics are simply parroting out in America the thought of the Rationalists of Germany. However this may be, I am emboldened to call your attention to, and ask information of you concerning a certain article which appeared in the July number of the Quarterly Review.

The statement, which I confess was a surprise to me, occurred in a critique of a book by Dr. Arthur S. Peake. The critic was no less a person than Dr. J. H. Stevenson of Vanderbilt University. The first assertion that arrested my attention was a quotation from Dr. Peake's book—"The Bible, its Origin, Significance, and Abiding Worth." A presumptuous assertion is embraced in quotation marks, and I think therefore is quoted and given as the purpose of Dr. Peake's book. Here is the statement: "THE BIBLE HAS IRRETRIEVABLY LOST THE PLACE ONCE ACCORDED TO IT BY THE CONSENT OF CHRISTENDOM, AND THIS IS COMING TO BE REALIZED BY AN INCREASING NUMBER." The enemies mentioned by the critic as leading the rebellion for the dethronement of the Bible are "The Copernican Theory, Geology, Higher Criticism, Fragmentary Systems Found in the Old Testament, the Moabite Stone; the Tell El Amarna; the Hammurabi Code, History, Geography, Anthropology," etc. In my humble judgment, the Doctor failed to mention the chief enemy in the rebellion against the infallibility of the Word of God, namely, the presumed infallibility of modern scholarship. Homer may sometimes nod, the Word of God may be fallible, but modern scholarship, if the Doctor shall be believed, is always infallible. The word of God may fail, but not the word of the university professors. Dr. Stevenson says: "We can no longer defend the view which found the Gospel throughout the Old Testament." May I remind you, Dr. Alexander, that the Sixth Article of our Church reads: "The Old Testament is not contrary to the New, for both in the Old and the New Testament everlasting life is offered to mankind by Christ, who is the only Mediator between God and man, being both God and man. Wherefore they are not to be heard who feign that the old Fathers did look only for transitory promises."

Will Dr. Alexander kindly inform the young ministers of the Church whether this Sixth Article of the Church is still the expression of the Church's teaching concerning the Old Testament? Another statement, which borders on (well, shall I say it?) blasphemy, at least thrusts one from the school of the Trinitarians into that of the Deists, is as follows: "Sometimes it is said that Christ's references to the Old Testament determined the question of authorship. They were not intended to do so. His knowledge probably did not embrace these matters. The incarnation was in itself a limitation of knowledge, and some of his temptations were impossible to Omniscience." Here we have at last reached the mecca toward which the eyes of modern scholars of the higher critical school are ever turning—a fallible Christ, but infallible scholarship. Christ's quotations of Old Testament writers did not settle the question of authorship; they were not intended to do so, says the presumed infallible scholar. His knowledge probably did not embrace these matters. That can mean nothing less than a fallible Christ. Will Dr. Alexander tell the young ministers of the Church if the Second Article of our Faith is still in force? The older ministers still believe, higher critics to the contrary notwithstanding, "that Christ was very God and very man." Dr. Stevenson says again: "We must be prepared to admit the well established findings of criticism."

I am appalled at the disloyalty in high places to Methodism and the sympathy with and tolerance for any heresy that may be suggested. I trust that these infidelistic statements crept into the Review without your knowledge. However, I am forced to ask you that if such stuff is published with your consent, how you can harmonize this with your ordination vow, "To banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrine contrary to God's word?" May I further ask, Is not the Methodist Review published by the Church for the propagation and defense of her faith? In allowing thrusts at the inerrancy of the Scriptures, are you giving to the Review the character it was established to maintain? Some of us are really asking: "Has the Review been turned over to the enemy as a floodgate through which disintegrating heresies may pour in upon us?"

Now in all candor, Doctor, I inquire, do you allow these statements to define the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, toward the Holy Scriptures? You must know, Doctor, that if a Roman Catholic prelate or a minister of the Unitarian Church should seek to state the position of the Methodist Church, South, upon any question of doctrine, he would quote from the Quarterly Review, the official periodical of our Church, to establish any statement he might make concerning our teaching. Shall ministers of those denominations or anybody else quote the above statements as the authorized view of our Church concerning the Holy Bible?

If they or anybody else might do so, then am I not correct in saying that such statements ought not to appear in our official journal? If you reply that you allow it only that our young ministers shall be able to know something of the vagaries of modern university infidelistic scholarship, my answer is, the sooner you change your purpose the better for our young ministers. You cannot feed them upon poisonous heresies without destroying their faith in the truth.

In the absence of a disclaimer from you, I feel that I have the right as one of the rank and file of the ministry to earnestly request of you certain things:

1. That you publish fully and clearly to the Church the tenets of the school of higher critics that are well established. I had not heard that they had established anything definitely among themselves, save the pride of their own reason and egotism.
2. That you give the names of the books of the Canon whose authorship is unauthentic and the names of the authentic authors who are to displace those "about which there has never been any doubt in the Church." I ask this, because you have allowed Dr. Stevenson to say: "Higher criticism has swept away traditional views of authorship."

3. I request again that you collate for us the doubtful history of the Bible. This I ask because Dr. Stevenson is permitted to say: "Historical criticism has thrown doubt on many historical statements of the Bible."

4. Again, I shall request you to point out definitely and distinctly the scientific statements that are false in the Word of God. This I ask because you have allowed Dr. Stevenson to say: "The Copernican theory has exploded views of the stability and flatness of the earth which were accepted by the Old Testament writers." The time has passed for unauthorized assertion and if requests like these which I now make shall go unheeded, will not the ministers of our Church have a right to believe that the admission of such statements into the Review allies your sympathy with the men whose flagrant disloyalty to the authority of the Church and whose disintegrating heresies are bringing such sore distress to our beloved Zion?

Yazoo City, Miss. . . . . NOLAN B. HARMON.

"METHODISTS RUINING THIS COUNTRY."

Rev. Martin T. Haw, of St. Louis, in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, says:

The treasurer of my board of stewards went to the Northwest the other day as the representative of a syndicate to buy orchards to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars. When he got into the city which was the center of the orchard region a banquet was given him by the Commercial Club of that city. He sat by a man who said:

"Do you know the Methodists are ruining this country? They are doing more harm here than the Mormons."

"How is that?"

"They are driving the saloons out of this country."

My friend said: "My dear sir, I am a Methodist myself, and while I am a German and therefore am inclined to be conservative, I cannot help rejoicing in the fact that when the Methodists take hold of anything it has to go."

CONCERNING MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

Dear Advocate: I have at last succeeded in getting the necessary amount subscribed to secure the old Methodist church property in Mansfield for Mansfield Female College, and the money is now being collected. Already more than half the money has been paid in. I hope all the subscribers to the fund will promptly remit.

I am delighted at the result, as it increases the property holdings of the College by at least $2500, and makes it forever impossible to mutilate the beautiful campus. The old church has already been removed, and President Bobbitt is pushing the work of beautifying the campus.

The outlook for the opening of the College was never so bright as it is to-day. Indications point to an attendance fully equal to the capacity of the institution. And, if the boarding department is full this year, by next year we will double the capacity. THOMAS H. MORRIS.

Church News

According to report, during the year 1913 the Roman Catholics of the United States gave Pope Pius X $400,000 for church work.

Bishop W. B. Murrah will dedicate a new church at Goshen, Tenn., one of the appointments on the West Murray Circuit, on October 4.

It is stated that by order of the Holy Synod priests all over Russia are preaching a holy war against Germany, and that their efforts are thoroughly arousing the people.

Bishop Collins Denny recently spent some time at the White Oak Camp Meeting in Georgia, where he preached to the delight and profit of large congregations.

Sunday, Sept. 6, will be "Labor Sunday" this year. Scarcely any Sabbath designated for a special purpose is so generally observed by the churches of the United States as this.

The Florida Christian Advocate has begun the publication of a series of "Gospel Talks" by Bishop H. C. Morrison. The one which has appeared was certainly stimulating and helpful.

A campaign is under way in Texas to raise $300,000 for the Southwestern University at Georgetown. Bishop J. H. McCoy will devote a week, beginning on Sept. 21, to campaigning in the interest of this cause.

The Chicago Y. M. C. A. has recently received a bequest of $813,000 in the will of the late Mr. Thomas Murdock. This Association is said to be the richest in the world, having property holdings valued at between three and four million dollars.

Bishop McIntyre, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, whose episcopal residence is at Oklahoma City, is at the Wesley Memorial Hospital of Chicago, where he is suffering from a severe attack of carbuncles. Bishop Henderson will hold the Nebraska and Northwest-Nebraska Conferences, so that his stricken colleague may have several weeks for rest and recuperation.

Bishop John C. Kilgo has lately been making some vigorous and telling speeches in behalf of the State-wide prohibition cause in Virginia. Our North Carolina Bishop is a man of remarkable versatility and there is no kind of Christian or reformatory work in which he does not give a good account of himself. The people of the Old Dominion will vote on the saloon question on Sept. 22.

Dr. Hugh H. Harris has been elected to the Chair of Psychology and Sunday School Pedagogy in the new School of Theology of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. Harris has been in charge of the institutional work of the Wesley Memorial Church of Atlanta for several months. He is a graduate of Wesleyan University (Middletown, Conn.), and is reported to be admirably qualified for the professorship to which he has been chosen.

A Persian church is about to be organized in San Francisco under the leadership of a Persian graduate of Shedd College in Urumia, Persia. The Mizpah Presbyterian Church has been conducting mission work in a community composed of about 700 Syrians, 200 Armenians, and 100 Persians. The latter in particular have responded most cordially to the Gospel message. The new church will have about 50 adherents.—Central Christian Advocate.

We glean the following from the British Weekly: The Wesleyan Methodists are doing their share in the war. At many places church buildings have been given up for hospitals or other uses by soldiers. Sir R. W. Perks has loaned his home at Kensington Palace-gardens as a hospital, and the men of the East Ham Brotherhood are giving their rooms to the war office for any use that may be best. Four chaplains have gone to the front and twenty-eight others are preparing to go.

WORK AMONG LEPERS.

Situated at Carville, La., about 75 miles from New Orleans is a State institution for the care and treatment of lepers. It is one of two such institutions in all the eastern part of the United States, the other being located near Boston.

There are in the Louisiana Home some 93 inmates, and the number has been increasing year by year, as patients from all over the country are admitted.

Only recently, through the co-operation of W. M. Danner, secretary of the American branch of the Mission to Lepers, the Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans has begun holding religious services for the Protestant inmates. The institution is in charge of the Roman Catholic Sisters, in contract with the State, who faithfully minister to these suffering ones.

There is a beautifully equipped Roman Catholic Chapel, and a resident priest on the ground, but there is no adequate place for the Protestant services; the little room for visiting friends being entirely too small and unsuitable.

The Protestant Ministers' Association has charged its committee on the Leper Home Work to agitate the matter and seek to secure funds for the erection of a Protestant Chapel, where those of this belief may be the recipients of the comfort and strength and consolation of their faith.

It would indeed soften the heart if we could make you see how eagerly these neglected people look for the coming of the preacher with his message.

It is estimated that the proposed chapel will cost between $3000 and $3500. Will you help us build it? How much will you give?

Remember how Jesus Christ our Master ministered to the lepers.

Think of these sufferers, and then realize your blessings!

This Committee solicits your help in this undertaking.

Send your gifts to Rev. W. H. Brengle, Treasurer, 438 Hillary Street, New Orleans, La.

Signed: W. E. Thomas, W. H. Brengle, J. W. Caldwell, Jr., Committee Protestant Ministers' Association.

GRENADA COLLEGE.

Grenada College is owned, controlled and operated by the North Mississippi Conference in the interest of both education and religion. The property is now easily worth more than $100,000. There are five substantial buildings, the three which are used for dormitory purposes having steam heat, hot and cold water on every floor, with baths and every modern convenience. Few homes have as many comforts as are provided here for pupils. Expenditures of $17,000 have been made on the property in the past year, much of it this summer.

The faculty is larger and better equipped than ever. The interest and enthusiasm of the teachers is shown by the fact that three of their number spent the summer in graduate study in Chicago, one in the University of Wisconsin, two in Peabody College, while one has just returned from a year in the University of Leipzig, where she specialized in German and French, which she teaches. No teacher is accepted here unless it is believed that her influence and example will be soundly Christian, nor is one retained in the faculty when it is found that she is not positively religious.

The glory of a college, however, is neither in its property nor yet in its faculty. A university is not "Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and a boy on the other," nor is it a million dollars at one end of a string and a scheming wire-puller at the other. The glory and joy of a school is found in the character and ability of its students. All things scholastic—buildings, books, endowment, equipment, faculty—exist for them. If they are drones—idle, vicious, or unworthy—Socrates may teach and Croesus endow, but no glory can come of the output of the school. Of the character, the conduct, the fidelity and loyalty of Grenada College girls, I cannot speak too highly. They speak of the school as being ours, and take personal interest in its progress and prosperity. Every full graduate for the past four years has been an earnest Christian, ready for church work. Such has been the care and oversight given that the most frequent compliment paid by visitors is this: "I did not know that school could be so much like home." I confidently believe that no girl has left these halls since I have known them without improvement in mind and heart, stronger and better than when she came.

We confidently expect to open with a full attendance on Tuesday, September 16. Let all our friends help us to secure two girls for every room in the college. The school needs the girls and the girls need the school. Send them on that we may have a Greater Grenada College.

Cordially and fraternally,

J. R. COUNTISS.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE IN LOUISIANA.

Dear Friends: I am taking the liberty of addressing you in reference to the work and prospects of the Anti-Saloon League in this State, assuming that you are interested in the purposes of the organization.

Having been more or less actively identified with the work of the League since its organization, and having had special opportunities for observing its work during the recent session of the Legislature, and the possibilities of advance that are indicated by the result of that work, I desire, acting on my own responsibility but not without consultation with the Headquarters' Committee, to lay before friends of the organization in this State the present situation as it appears to me.

The legislation secured by the League at the recent session of the General Assembly, while not all that was desired, was an advance toward better law enforcement in dry territory.

The securing of this legislation also showed two things. In the first place, it proved the efficiency of the present organization of the League and the ability of its Superintendent, who was able to secure definite advance legislation from a rather unfriendly body, and in the face of a powerful liquor lobby who fought every inch of the ground. I am not depending on my own observation and judgment alone in saying that Mr. Turner accomplished a really remarkable work in getting this legislation through. I have taken the pains to talk personally and candidly with a number of leading men in both houses of the Legislature, and the general consensus of opinion, as voiced by several of the most eminent leaders of both houses, is that his work could not have been surpassed, and that, as a result of it, the League occupies a stronger position in the State than it ever did in its history. One prominent member of the Senate, who knows the sentiment on both sides of the liquor question told me that the liquor interests recognize the fact that they are now facing the most formidable opposition they have ever had to face.

The work done in this Legislature also tested the sentiment of the body, and to a certain extent, put every man on record as to his attitude toward temperance legislation, thus opening the way for further advance in the immediate future. It showed that if any further advance is to be made, a majority of the next Legislature must be committed, before election, to wise temperance legislation. In other words, the Anti-Saloon League MUST plan a more aggressive campaign in the next two years than ever before in its history. This will mean, in addition to promoting local option campaigns in a number of parishes which are now ripe for it, a determined effort to secure the election of Senators and Representatives from at least the dry sections of the State who will rightly represent their constituency on this question—a condition which does not now exist. Thus both the opportunity and necessity of definite advance is confronting the League at this time. This means that it is very important to maintain the League, without interruption, at the highest point of efficiency.

In the face of these facts, the League is at present pressed for funds to carry on the work that is demanded if it to go forward, or even maintain itself. It seems to me that the minimum requirement demands that there should be a fund of $5000 a year for the next two years, definitely pledged by individuals, and whatever amounts might be secured by the Superintendent in the course of his work should supplement this fund, so that the work would be unhampered by lack of money.

Are there not among the friends of the League in the State, ten men who will contribute $100 a year for two years; twenty men who will give $50; forty men who will give $25; one hundred men who will give $10, and two hundred men who will give $5, to assure the continuance of the work at this most critical time? The contributions mentioned above would amount to $5000 and by putting the League on a going basis, would go far toward putting Louisiana in the dry column.

With the above facts and suggestions before you, will you not seriously consider what you can do to forward this important cause, both by your own personal contribution and by securing help from others whom you know to be in sympathy with it? NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT.

Very respectfully,

W. WINANS DRAKE,

Pastor First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La.
August 25, 1914.

A GREAT GAIN FOR THE METHODIST HOSPITAL.

The Methodists of Memphis are rejoicing and our Hospital Board is being congratulated by all who know the property because of the magnificent new site secured for the Methodist hospital.

After months of negotiation the location committee, consisting of J. H. Sherard, J. R. Pepper, T. K. Riddick, L. M. Stratton, and H. M. Ellis, have just closed a deal with Mr. W. B. Mallory for his commodious grounds and handsome residence, thus securing for our Methodist hospital what is considered by those who know the city to be the most convenient and beautiful hospital location in Memphis.

sary to provide 75 or 80 beds with which to begin actual hospital service as soon as possible. The need is daily growing more pressing and distressing, and it is believed that the actual service of relief will rapidly increase the friends of the cause and greatly speed its success.

The purchase of this site is the assurance that those to whom this great church enterprise has been committed have ideas that are commensurate with the magnitude of the need in this vast territory, and it is the pledge that what they shall do will be adequate and worthy of the great Church they represent. There is no thought of stopping short of a half-million-dollar plant, built in sections, as the means is secured, to the plan of a unified whole.

A $5,000 payment must be made on this property nition of ministers who are under discipline or have been expelled without proper credentials.

It was voted as the sense of the Committee that no Methodist minister passing, or proposing to pass, from one Methodist Church to another should be allowed to do so without due authentication.

The Executive Committee approved of the arrangements that are being made for the centenary of the ratification of the Ghent treaty of peace on Sunday, February 14, 1915, and expressed the hope that all Methodist Churches, Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues would join in the proposed celebration.

Bishop Hoss called attention to the fact that in 1916 will occur the centenary of the death of Bishop Francis Asbury, the First American Methodist Bishop, and on his motion it was resolved that all Methodist Churches in the United States and Canada be requested to observe the anniversary in some suitable way.

The Executive Committee expressed its desire for a more intimate relation between the Churches of the Eastern Section and the Churches of the Western Section, and proposed an interchange of communications concerning Methodist problems, progress and events, as often as once a year at least.

It also took action in favor of securing a list of Methodist historical books, pamphlets and manuscripts, and also Methodist articles of antiquity indicating where they are to be found in the United States and Canada.

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Won't you make a special effort on your Conference claimants' assessment within the next few days? Many of our claimants are in actual need. Won't you help us?

Yours truly,

S. A. TOMLINSON,

Treasurer Joint Board of Finance.

A STRICKEN HOUSEHOLD.

Dear Dr. Meek: I write to say that Brother J. A. Wells and wife of Topisaw have been called upon to give up their precious baby, who passed away on the morning of Thursday, August 27. The little one was ill about two weeks, and his going makes the home very lonely. The remains were carried to Newton County for interment. I am sure that the preachers will greatly sympathize with the bereaved parents in this their sorrow.

Brother W. H. Lewis, pastor at Brookhaven, was called down to Topisaw that he might minister to the hearts of this home, and his ministry was a great benefit. Very sincerely, Brookhaven, Miss. ROBT. SELBY.

WANTED—BOYS OF GOOD CHARACTER

SESSION OPENS SEPT. 16.

Address

R. H. WYNN, President.

THE W. B. MALLORY HOME, MEMPHIS, TENN.

This property has been purchased by the Methodists of Arkansas, Mississippi, and West Tennessee for a hospital. It will be enlarged and made into one of the finest plants of its kind in the South. This picture does not show the beautiful  $8\frac{1}{2}$ -acre grove, adorned with native forest trees, in which this splendid structure of 22 rooms is situated.

The Mallory property consists of eight and a half acres of ground, fronting 535½ feet on Lamar Boulevard (on which is one of the best street car lines of the city), with a frontage eastward on South Camilla Street of 672 feet, and a like frontage westward on South Dudley Street. Pauline Street terminates on Lamar Boulevard just in front of the gateway, making the property about equal to four city blocks. It is as convenient to the office section of the city as any other hospital, and nearer the two Union depots by several blocks.

The residence was built by Capt. Mallory 20 years ago at a cost of $75,000, has always been kept in perfect repair, and is to-day considered one of the finest homes in Memphis. It is constructed of red brick and stone, is three stories in height, and contains 22 large rooms with lofty ceiling and high artistic finish. Great, airy halls, 12 or 14 feet wide, run the full length of the building. The house is 450 feet from the front street and occupies the crest of a beautiful woodland elevation which rises in amphitheatre form from the gateway. Stately native forest trees, in which many kinds of birds rear their young and numerous squirrels play unafraid, cover this ample front between the house and the street, and the rustic beauty and quiet retreat afforded make it unequalled by any other property in the city for the purpose it is to serve.

The lot previously purchased was turned to good account, for it was given at a handsome profit in part payment on the new site, so that several thousand dollars were saved by the former transaction.

The purpose of the Hospital Board now is to install an elevator and make such other alterations and additions to the house as shall be necessary.

A MEETING OF INTEREST.

The Executive Committee of the Ecumenical Methodist Commission of the Western Section held a meeting in New York in August, all the members of the committee being present except Bishop Hamilton, who was absent in Europe.

The General Conferences of the various Methodist bodies meeting in the United States since the Toronto Ecumenical Methodist Conference have all approved of the plan of the Ecumenical Methodist Commission and voted to give it necessary financial support. The General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada meets in September and will have before it for its action an official communication similar to those sent to the various Methodist bodies in the United States.

at once. Our reliance for this is in God and the good people of our Church, and we have no fear of disappointment. Our friends who have subscribed can help us greatly now by sending forward the amounts, if possible, at once, while those good people who have intended to help when there was real need have reached the very opportunity for which they were waiting. Please send remittances to H. M. Ellis, Field Secretary, 2086 Union Avenue, Memphis, Tenn.

APPRECIATION OF NEW HOSPITAL SITE BY MEMPHIS CONFERENCE PRESIDING ELDERS.

The following is the resolution adopted by the Presiding elders of the Memphis Conference at their meeting in Bells, Tenn., August 18, 1914:

We desire to express our great appreciation of the action of the Hospital Commission in the purchase of a superb site with ample room and buildings that may be used as a beginning as soon as we get possession of the property, on January 1, 1915.

We urge our people who have subscribed to promptly pay their subscriptions.

We call attention to the importance of putting at least a half-million dollars into this important institution.

Each person of our entire membership should make a subscription to this cause.

Signed: A. J. Meaders, Brownsville District; W. A. Freeman, Dyersburg District; W. J. McCoy, Jackson District; J. V. Freeman, Lexington District; H. B. Johnston, Memphis District; W. D. Jenkins, Paducah District; L. D. Hamilton, Paris District; W. C. Waters, Union City District.

The Executive Committee directed its Secretary to convey to the President of the United States its sympathy with him in his affliction, and also to express the hearty appreciation of the Executive Committee of his offer of mediation to the European nations engaged in war.

The Committee took up various matters communicated to it from the Ecumenical Methodist Commission of the Eastern Section and voted to join with the British brethren in making a protest against the exclusive use on all British passenger ships of the service of the Church of England, and to ask the Presbyterian Alliance, the Baptist World Alliance, and other similar organizations, to unite in such a protest. The co-operation of the Western Section was also requested by the British brethren in preventing the recog-

THE BRAZIL ANNUAL CONFERENCE, TRINIDAD, AND BARBADOS.

The twenty-eighth session of the Brazil Annual Conference was held in the city of Juiz de Fora, Minas Geraes, our educational center (where I attended my first Conference in Brazil in 1902), July 2-8, 1914. In the absence of Bishop Lambuth the Conference elected M. Dickie president, a choice justified by his wise and patient handling of the difficult problems solved at this session. Dr. J. W. Tarboux, just returned from the U. S. A., brought the modifications in our laws made by the last General Conference—all exactly translated by him on the voyage, which were printed, distributed and observed by the Conference.

Brazil is passing through one of the severest financial crises in her history, but notwithstanding this fact the reports were exceptionally good and the pledge for the support of our missionary in Africa ($1000) was paid in full.

Our ranks were strengthened by the return of several missionaries on furloughs and the Rev. J. W. Dawsey of South Carolina. A larger number of parochial schools was reported and more emphasis placed on personal evangelism.

The Board of Missions having given us a furlough this year, the Conference ratified this leave of absence and on July 14 we embarked on the Vandyck, Lampton and Holt Line, due to arrive in New York on the morning of July 31. Our cargo is Argentine beef in cold storage for America. The day has arrived when we as a nation must recognize South America not only as a mediator in our international quarrels, but also as a furnisher of our tables. Among the most gentlemanly passengers on the Vandyck is a group of Brazilian students en-route to American universities. Their chief is a Brazilian M. D., going to Europe via U. S. A. They do not spend their days in the smoke-room playing bridge and poker and drinking, nor their evenings in dancing tango on the deck, as do most of the representative men and women of Christian (?) America and England on board. Be it understood also that these young men do not profess to be even Protestants.

For the past three days the "Ocean Waves Wireless News" has been sold on deck, which gives us the principal news of the world, from the latest war reports from Europe and the East to the score made the day before in the professional baseball games played in America.

Trinidad.

Our first call after leaving the Brazilian coast was made at Trinidad, or Port of Spain, the principal port of this picturesque island, which was discovered by Columbus on July 31, 1498, and which was captured by the British under Sir Walter Raleigh in 1595. It is still a British possession although in its history it has been temporarily occupied by the Spaniards. It has an area of 1750 square miles and a population of about 400,000; about 10 per cent of these being East Indians imported by the Government to work on the sugar and cocoa plantations. Tall, fine-looking Hindus in their picturesque native dress; small, sad-eyed women with faces half-hidden by the veil or shawl worn by all women, ornaments in their ears and nose, bracelets on their arms, rings on fingers and toes, anklets on both legs, carrying heavy burdens on their heads or working in the rich fields or threading their way through the crowds of passengers from aboard our ship or sitting meditatively in the shade of the palms—everywhere and always they are interesting and seem at home in their rarely beautiful tropical setting.

Trinidad is only sixteen miles from Venezuela, the headlands of which we could plainly see. We were told that there are 14,000 Venezuelans in Trinidad and that the unhappy Castro, who has been in hiding in Trinidad, had recently appeared on the streets.

Trinidad has a famous pitch lake, a vast deposit of bituminous matter, 114 acres in extent, from which asphalt is shipped all over the world. There is a tradition that the site of the lake was originally occupied by a tribe of Chaima Indians. These Indians offended the Good Spirit by destroying the humming birds, in which were reincarnated the souls of their deceased relations, and were therefore engulfed, they and their village entirely disappearing. Hence also the native name of the island, Iere, which signifies Land of the Humming Bird. Besides asphalt, cocoa, sugar, cocoanuts, fruits, bitters and native woods are exported.

Barbados.

A day's sail brought us to Barbados, the natural port of call between North and South America, and sometimes called "Little England." This Island, 21 miles long by 14 wide, has a population of 172,000. It was visited by the Portuguese in 1536, who called it "Barbados" (which means bearded), from the festoons of Spanish moss that they found on the trees. The English took possession in 1605; the Government buildings are very creditable. Barbados is claimed to be the most healthful of the picturesque West India Islands with a summer temperature of 75 to 84 degrees Fahrenheit and a minimum mean temperature of 65 degrees in winter. It is a charming spot and an ideal winter resort. The completion of the Panama Canal has given a perceptible impulse to trade in all the West Indian group and a great commercial future is expected.

On Tuesday, July 28, the "Ocean Wireless News" published the first rumors of the European war now in progress and on the 31st we sailed into harbor just in time to escape the excitement of being chased by German cruisers, as we sailed under the Union Jack. After an absence of more than six years, we feel grateful to be on American soil again.

G. D. PARKER.

A GREAT WEEK AT PONTOTOC, MISS.

At last the hearts of our people have been made to rejoice because of the consummation of the great work started here about eight years ago—the erection and ownership of a beautiful and commodious temple of worship. No people ever worked more faithfully, and no town of this size in the State or anywhere has a more beautiful and more comfortable Methodist Church than the one which was dedicated here by Bishop Hoss on Sunday, August 16. The Bishop was at his best. His subject was the Church of Jesus Christ. Our most prominent people of all denominations do not hesitate to say that it was the greatest sermon ever delivered in the historic town of Pontotoc. The Bishop also preached a great sermon at the evening hour on the words of our Lord, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall inherit the Kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

We were glad to have with us Revs. J. A. Bowen, G. W. Bachman, J. E. Lockhart, R. A. Clark, R. P. Neblett, D. R. Wasson, and M. O. Beckham. Sitting right in front of the chancel were the entire Official Board of twelve men—these are among the most prominent men of the town. It was an inspiring sight to see these men who had worked for years for this great enterprise, as with bright faces they presented the church for dedication. Brother Bowen preached in the afternoon, and three times a day during the entire week following. He won the hearts of all the people of the church and the community, not only to himself, but also to his Lord, whose gospel he preaches with wonderful tenderness and power. The congregations of eight or nine hundred people, gathering from time to time, were melted under his unctuous messages from the first service to the last. My heart is happy over the conditions which prevail among us. We have an unusual town—nearly everybody belonging to the Churches. In the large congregations assembling there would be hardly more than a dozen persons not members of some Church. Practically the entire church membership, under the influence of the Spirit and in the most beautiful spirit, re-dedicated their lives to God. We have a great many people among us whose membership is in the country or somewhere else. We feel sure that we will receive a large increase in membership by certificate. Brother Bachman endeared himself to all of our people. He sang, prayed, and sold good books, the last service being appreciated, as well as his other work.

The pastor is glad to say that he is rapidly recovering his health and will push the work until Conference, feeling sure that we will make the best report the charge has ever made. God has been good to me. This year will finish twenty years in the active work. I have been out of my pulpit six months and yet how wonderfully the work has been carried on by a true and loyal people, the presiding elder and the brethren of the district. For nineteen years I have been in my pulpit every Sabbath with the exception of not over two Sundays a year when granted a leave of absence.

May God bless every preacher in the Conference, and help us all in the great work of nourishing the spiritual life of the Church and of saving sinners.

W. D. WENDEL.

MR. BRADFIELD ON AMERICA.

(The Methodist Times gives the following account of Rev. William Bradfield's report to the British-Wesleyan Conference of his late visit to the United States, whither he came as a fraternal messenger to the recent General Conference of the M. E. Church, South.)

Mr. Bradfield said he thought some of his brethren felt very considerable sympathy with him in having to speak after Chancellor Day, but they knew him. He was a plain, blunt man. When he was appointed he was interested in the differences between the Methodist Church in this country and the Methodist Episcopal Church of the States. John Wesley in England tried to raise up extraordinary agents to stir up the ordinary clergy "to jealousy." They did not begin as a Church, though they had had to organize as such since. In America John Wesley saw a great country without a Church, and there Methodism started as a Church. That was at the bottom of the curious difference there was. Hear them pray and preach and sing, they were the same people. And the Bishops were Methodist itinerants—"General Superintendents" was one of their names. But in organization and action there was considerable difference. Then he was interested to note the difference between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He realized the tremendous division which had come between those two Churches. The Negro question was one of the most tremendous God had given to the world. But what he was most struck with was, how real a unity of heart and reconciliation had come. It was one of the great things God had wrought that He had made that people one again in heart. Oklahoma City, where the Conference was held, was twenty-five years ago an Indian reservation. Now it was a smart, good and clean city of 35,000 people, as good as any American city he had seen, save one. The wonderful rise of it was what struck him. Oklahoma's constitution began by recognizing the full citizenship of the American Indian, and by barring liquor. It was a marvel for orderly settled government. He had been much impressed by the tremendous difficulties which their brethren in the States faced in the color problem. He was one of the late learners of the strength of that problem. He believed their brethren of the South, who felt the heavy judgment passed in the past of some who did not know any better, were settling themselves to face one of the greatest practical difficulties in the world with all the courage and wisdom possible. His own mission to the States had deeply convinced him that it was well worth the while of the Conference to keep up these fraternal visits. They were deeply interested in the old Church. In the South they were very largely of English blood, and their greeting was warm and cordial.

The stronger our faith the greater will be our happiness and safety, so that we can cheerfully do and suffer what God imposes upon us, and this because we know that He is merciful and full of love toward us.—Luther.

The Home Circle

NO LITTLE ONES.

Kathleen Kavanaugh.

You're glad you have no girls and boys
To fill your home with romp and noise?
Well, maybe what you say is true,
Yet, friend, somehow, I pity you.

No shoes to shine, no strings to find,
No bumps to bathe and gently bind;
No little dress nor shirt to mend,
No piles of darning to attend.

No muddy tracks across the floor,
No tiny handprints on the door;
No one to beg for tarts and pies,
To fondly tease with "whats" and "whys."

No one to hurry off to school
With tender chide to heed each rule;
No little willing wayward feet
To gladly run on errands fleet.

No pretty baby girl to get Out of some pout or fancied fret;
No boy to tell big sister's beau
Something unique he need not know.

No wee, wee ones at night to steal
Close, close to you—no arms to feel
Around your neck, to never hear
These words come lisping to your ear:

"Sweet mother, we, we love you so,
And not a boy or girl we know
In all this town, has mother quite
As good as you—good-night, good-night."

No little ones to grow each year
More fair and tall, more wondrous dear;
Your quiet keep—I want the noise,
I want my merry girls and boys.

Eve beautiful seems most to me,
With Cain and Abel at her knee;
And Mary, virgin purest, best,
With Christ, her baby, on her breast.

LED TO CHRIST BY A CHILD.

One evening my little boy was lying on the bed, partly undressed. My wife and I were seated by the fire. She had been telling me that Theodore had not been a good boy that day, and what he had been doing, and I had reproved him for it. All was quiet, when suddenly he broke into a loud sobbing and crying, which surprised us. I went to him and asked him what was the matter. "I don't want it there, father; I don't want it there."

"What, my child? What is it?"

"Why, father, I don't want the angels to write down in God's book all the bad I've done to-day. I don't want it; I wish he could wipe it out," and his distress greatly increased.

What could I do? I did not believe this; yet he had been taught the way. I had to console him, so I said: "Well, you need not cry. You can have it all wiped out in a minute, if you want to."

"How, father, how?"

"Why, get down on your knees and ask God, for Christ's sake, to wipe it out, and he will do it." I did not have to speak twice. He jumped out of bed, saying: "Father, won't you come and help me?"

Now came the trial. The boy's distress was so great, and he pleaded so earnestly, that the big man, who never bowed to God in spirit and in truth, got down on his knees and asked God to "wipe out his sin," and perhaps, although my lips did not speak it, I included my own sins, too.

We got up, and he lay down on the bed again. In a few moments he said: "Father, are you sure it is all wiped out now?"

Oh, the acknowledgement grated through my unbelieving heart as the words came from my mouth: "Why, yes, my son. The Bible says so, if you ask God for Christ's sake to do it, and if you are really sorry for what you have done."

A smile of pleasure passed over his face as he quietly asked: "What did the angels wipe it out with—a sponge?"

Again was my whole soul stirred within me as I answered: "No, with the precious blood of Christ."

The fountain had at last broken forth. It could not be checked and my whole heart melted within me. I felt like a poor, guilty, ignorant sinner, and turning away, I said: "My dear wife, we must find God, if we want to show him to our children. We cannot show them the way unless we know it ourselves."

After a little time, the boy, with heaven almost looking out of his eyes, came from his bed, and leaning upon my knee, turned his face to mine, and said: "Father, are you and mother both sinners?"

"Yes, my son, we are."

"Why," said he, "have you not a Savior? Don't you love God? Why are you sinners? God doesn't love sinners."

I answered as best I could, and in the silent hours of night I bent in prayer over that dear boy and prayed, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

My wife would not pray with me over our boy till blessed again by God; the Lord's prayer was put into my heart, and we said it together, and prayed jointly for ourselves and for our child. And God heard our prayers and received us, as he always does those who seek him with their whole heart, for he said unto such, "They shall surely find me."—Church Advocate.

FOR THE LOVE OF GOD.

On the evening of the battle of Chickamagna an Illinois regiment that had been engaged all day was falling back under orders. The men did not know that they were retreating; they supposed, on the contrary, that they were only withdrawing for the night behind the picket lines. They were in high spirits, ready for battle again in the morning. As a matter of fact, the flank of their division had been turned; Gen. Thomas found himself obliged to change the position of his right wing.

As they passed an old straw stack, one soldier called to his comrades that here was a better bed than he had in camp, and that he was tired enough to stop. Thinking himself well within the lines and close to his own regiment, he stayed and the others passed on.

He pulled straw from the stack, and made himself a good bed, when he heard groaning. It was not yet dark, and he made his way to the place whence the groans came. There lay a Confederate soldier—shot through both hips.

"For the love of God, cover me up!" the wounded man pleaded. He had lost much blood, and was faint and cold.

Bringing straw, the Union soldier laid it round him, covered him with his blanket, and laid straw upon that.

"Have you any water," asked the Southerner. The Union soldier's canteen was a third full; he put it to the lips of the wounded man.

"Are you a Yank?" the latter asked.

"Yes."

"And like as not the very Yank that shot me?" "I hope not. In any case, we are friends to-night."

"What a pity we weren't always friends, Yank, have you got any more of that water?"

The terrible gun shot thirst was upon him; he drank until not a drop was left in the canteen. Then he said:

"Hit don't seem hardly right—two men that know how to be kind to one another after sundown, tryin' all day to blow daylight through each other, does it, now?"

"No, comrade, it don't. And like as not both Christians, too."

"Yes, that's so. Like as not both Christians. Well, you've done your best by me. Good night."

Returning to his straw bed, the Yankee was soon fast asleep. He was awakened some hours later by voices and a light. In sudden fear he heard his wounded acquaintance call out, excitedly:

"He's right over thar! He's right over thar!"

The next moment the light approached and he saw a man in a uniform of gray standing over him.

"Are you a Federal soldier?" he asked.

"Yes."

"I am a Confederate surgeon. We have the field, and are caring for the wounded. We are removing a wounded man to the hospital, but he refuses to go till you are safe. The picket lines are forming, and you are within them. Your camp lies over in that direction. I should advise you to move fast."

The Union soldier did move fast, but he stopped a moment to take the hand of the wounded man.

"You've saved me from capture," he said. "I want to thank you."

"Hit don't seem hardly right to let you be taken," said the Confederate. "Don't the Bible say that if you give a cup of cold water you shall not lose your reward? Good-night, Yank. Now you skedaddle."

"Good-night. God bless you!" And the Union soldier disappeared in the darkness.—The Lutheran.

GOD'S HEROES.

To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Dean Farrar.

A NEW PHASE OF THE VANDERBILT REBELLION.

We have regretted to learn that the Vanderbilt rebellion against the authority of the Church has assumed a new phase. At first it was an effort to destroy the charter rights of the Church in the institution and to eject her from any participation of consequence in its management. This initial movement, conducted by the most unworthy and indefensible methods, has completely triumphed unless the case can be re-opened and reversed in the Federal courts. But the Church refused to accept the merely nominal role in the operation of the University that was mapped out for her, being unwilling to shelter with her name and reputation a school which has an administration wholly beyond her control. Apparently, however, the Vanderbilt men realize that they can ill afford to lose the patronage of the Church, which has chiefly supplied them with students in the past; so they are resorting to new but not less reprehensible tactics to maintain, as far as may be possible, a hold upon their former Methodist constituency.

For one thing, they are trying to run the Vanderbilt Biblical Department as a METHODIST institution and are making various presumptuous and unwarranted statements concerning it. Letters are being written and advertisements published to the effect that this school will be conducted during the coming year for the whole and sole purpose of educating young ministers for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. But they are not stopping with this. They are going further and seeking to create the impression that there is yet a probability of the Church entering into some sort of official relation with the Vanderbilt seminary. They are declaring that there is little likelihood of further litigation for the control of the University, and that the Board of Trust will be open to negotiations concerning the management of this department. They are also quietly giving it out that they will come to the former patronizing Conferences with a proposition that they would have them make to the Vanderbilt trustees, to take over the Theological School; and they are, furthermore, suggesting the possibility of drawing other Annual Conferences than the original eight into this arrangement. This propaganda is apparently designed to lead our people to believe that there yet remains a nexus between the Church and the Biblical School such as will justify them to continue to patronize it, pending further developments.

Nor is this the whole story. There is yet another string to this fiddle. Advertisements concerning the other departments of the University breathing out sentiments of love and good-will toward the dear Methodist people are being scattered broadcast over the land. As an illustration of this, note the following extract from a statement (that was paid for) appearing in the Memphis Commercial Appeal of Sunday, August 16:

"Notwithstanding the recent controversy that has existed between the University and some of the leaders of the Church, the Board of Trust has declared that no change of FORMAL or TECHNICAL TIES shall destroy the friendly attitude of the University toward the Methodist Church, or cause them to forget the history of former years. 'As we have labored, so shall we continue to labor; as we have served, so shall we continue to seek opportunity for service.'"

(Italics ours.) Having briefly set forth the scheme of these gentlemen, there are a few affirmations concerning it that we desire as briefly as possible to make:

1. There is no connection whatever between the Church and any department of Vanderbilt University as it is now held and controlled, and any statement to the contrary is utterly without foundation in fact. The Board of Trust has officially and formally declared that the Church now has no rights of any kind left in the institution, and the Church has clearly shown that she desires to have nothing to do with the University unless the present status can be changed by legal process. So far as the Theological School is concerned, she withdrew all appropriations to it, virtually pronounced it an unfit place for the training of her ministry, and ordered other schools established to do this work. This was not a strange conclusion in view of the famous parade led by the doughty Chancellor, the brilliant performance of the students in dancing "the Bishops' squirm," and the hilarious burning of "Hoss' bones" on the campus. What could the Church expect from young ministers taught in such an atmosphere and by instructors who had no word of rebuke for such conduct?

2. No man, or set of men, has a right to run an institution for Southern Methodism without her consent. Our educational work is in no such state of anarchy as that. Our Church has safeguarded herself at this very point by the enactment of wholesome laws. Unless the General Conference, our supreme law-making body, shall so order, an institution has no right to open and operate as a Methodist school without the consent of some Annual Conference and the endorsement of the Conference and General Boards of Education. To try so to run a school in advance of any permission and seek the necessary endorsement afterwards is something new under the sun. It is high-handed, illegal, and revolutionary.

3. It is a thing worth noting that the men who are doing this are the mere employees of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, who can do nothing without their sanction. So, while these gentlemen, who are undertaking without the consent of the Church to operate a Methodist Biblical School, do not announce that they are acting for the Vanderbilt trustees, what they are attempting is manifestly by their permission. Here, then, we have the striking anomaly of the same Board of Trust which has robbed the Church and declared that she is absolutely down-and-out of the University, essaying through agents to conduct a seminary for the education of her preachers. This is what this movement is tantamount to when it is properly analyzed. Will our people give their patronage to a Biblical school which is in reality run by Dr. James H. Kirkland?

4. No one is authorized to speak for all of the eight original patronizing Conferences as to whether there will be further litigation. We are President of the Board of Education of one of them, and make this statement advisedly. The future course of our Conference will, in all probability, be determined by the legal advice that is given by the lawyers with whom we shall confer. It is a bit amusing how some of the gentlemen who at Oklahoma City were laying predicates and outlining plans for further lawsuits when that seemed the best way to influence the Church to hang on to Vanderbilt under the humiliating conditions now existing, have, since losing out there, transformed themselves into emissaries of peace and are talking in tones as gentle as those of a cooling dove.

5. It is a brilliant scheme which these gentlemen have developed, after the Church has been robbed of the whole University, to offer back to her the NOMINAL control of a single department; for let it be noted that no matter in what veiled and dressed-up form it may come, no control can be given to the Church which is not ultimately subordinate to that of the Board of Trust. They will be able to change it at will and discontinue it at their pleasure. The Board cannot, under the decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee, divert any portion of its funds to a Board that is in any true sense independent.

6. We desire to call attention to the suggestion that Annual Conferences other than the original eight may be drawn into this arrangement. The General Conference ordered the transference of any and all remaining rights that the Church may have in Vanderbilt back to eight specific Conferences, and provided for the establishment of two new universities to serve the Church at large. But these gentlemen are suggesting that it is possible for Vanderbilt to reach out and take in other Conferences. If this is not proposing to set at defiance the authority of the Church, then what is it? Let the statement also be noted that the Biblical School will for THE COMING YEAR be run for the whole and sole purpose of educating young ministers for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Is there not here an intimation that if this venture does not succeed, the school may be run for some other purpose? Is this not an implied admission that the Church has no grip upon it that amounts to anything?

7. There are two other facts that our preachers and people need to get in their minds and keep them there: One is that at the meeting of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust last June a minority of that body submitted resolutions proposing to relate the entire University to the original eight patronizing Conferences, and that they received scant recognition, not even coming to a vote; the other is, that to maintain a theological school in connection with Vanderbilt is in effect to endorse the University as a whole—Mr. Carnegie's money and all. Does anybody think that the Vanderbilt trustees who, after kicking us out of the institution, are proposing to run a theological seminary for us, are so obtuse that they cannot see this? In our opinion, the realization of this fact is what is furnishing the chief inspiration for this movement.

8. The statement of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust that their controversy was with some of the leaders of the Church is quite enough to make one laugh. Why, at Asheville, where the General Conference conditionally ordered the suit, the vote was practically unanimous. One lone, shrill voice was heard against it. Not within our knowledge has the Church done anything with such remarkable unanimity as she condemned the course of the Vanderbilt trustees in this contest and sought to thwart their efforts to spoliolate her property. No, no; the fight which these men had was not "with some of its leaders," but with the solidly united Southern Methodist Church.

9. It is to be hoped that no young man who is preparing for our ministry will be disloyal enough to attend the Vanderbilt Biblical School under these circumstances. The methods that are now being used to try to maintain it should alone be enough to make all our theological students go elsewhere, to say nothing of the deliberate judgment of the Church as to the unfitness of the Vanderbilt atmosphere as a training place for our young preachers. It is being claimed that there are few young ministers who are receiving help who will not return. This certainly does not look well. Can it be possible that a little assistance is sufficient to swerve the young men who are preparing to fill our pulpits from the path of loyalty and duty? We do not believe it. A bid is also being made for the patronage of persons who are training for work in our foreign mission fields. The Board of Missions ought strongly to exercise its influence against this effort. Should it not do so, it is liable to hear from the Annual Conferences and the Church press on this subject, and thus imperil by controversy the important and sacred interests committed to its hands.

THE SUPREMACY OF THE CHURCH.

We are inclined to think that the weakest point in Methodism is our failure rightly to honor and exalt the Church. If there has ever been a Christian denomination that stood the test of time and profoundly influenced the world in which the Church itself did not command the highest regard and the unshakable loyalty of the people connected with it, we do not know when and where it existed. Greater than the Sunday School, the Epworth League, the Missionary Society, or any other organization or institution known among men is the CHURCH that our Lord established, giving to it the promise that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." These other agencies may come and go, but the Church, as the custodian and dispenser of the Divine Word and aflame with a power not of earth, will abide until the end of time. Therefore, let us place her first in our affections, allegiance, and service, and duly recognize the weight of her authority when she speaks. A loose religious organization with every man claiming the right to talk and act as he pleases is no Church at all; it is simply a state of religious anarchy. Do we not need to begin to emphasize anew among our people the important truth that the Church with her holy and helpful ministries is indispensable to the sons of men?

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

Gratifying news continues to reach us concerning the outlook for a great opening at Mansfield College on Wednesday, September 9. This is not at all surprising in view of the character of work that this historic institution is doing under the direction of President R. E. Bobbitt, who easily ranks as one of the most capable educators in the State. If the Methodist pastors and people of Louisiana will only give this resourceful leader their hearty co-operation, there is scarcely a doubt that this excellent school will move steadily forward to larger things and become one of the foremost colleges for the education of young women in this section of the South. There is no need of our Methodist girls in Louisiana going out of the State to be educated when such advantages are offered them at Mansfield. Read President Bobbitt's advertisement concerning the work of this institution which appears on page 12. It would be a fitting thing if every pastor in Louisiana would call attention to the Mansfield opening and set forth the opportunities which the college offers from his pulpit next Sunday. Let our slogan everywhere be, "A GREATER MANSFIELD."

AN APPEALING CAUSE.

We are carrying on another page in this issue of the Advocate a statement concerning the work among lepers at Carville, La., which we hope will not escape the eye of a single reader. Surely the Protestants of this section will quickly supply the modest little chapel which is asked for in order to make it possible to minister efficiently in spiritual things to these needy sufferers. Not to do so would be a lasting reproach to us. In a personal letter to the Editor, Brother W. E. Thomas, the pastor of the Second Methodist Church of this city, who is taking a deep interest in this work, says:

"Until the beginning of this year there had never been a Protestant service held in the Leper Home, which is situated 75 miles above this city. Since then, Protestant ministers have been going there regularly once a month. The little room, 8x12, in which we hold services is too small to seat more than a dozen persons at a time; besides the close contact that we are subjected to makes it almost dangerous."

Let every person who reads this appeal send Brother Thomas at once a remittance for this worthy cause. His address is 815 St. Charles Street, New Orleans, La. There is no objection to people outside of Louisiana lending a helping hand to this enterprise. Indeed, they ought to do so.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, agent for the Memphis Methodist Hospital, assisted Rev. J. G. Johnson in a meeting at Acona, Miss., last week.

The Bluff Creek (La.) Camp Meeting began on August 28. The preaching will be principally done by Evangelist T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss.

Mrs. Senie Philips, of Coffeeville, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, takes time to express her appreciation of it. She states that she especially enjoyed the recent Woman's Missionary Edition.

We take the following from the St. Helena Echo (Greensburg, La.) of August 28: "Rev. R. V. Fulton left Monday for St. Francisville, La., to assist his brother, Rev. J. B. Fulton, in a series of revival services."

Rev. S. H. Frazier says: "We have just closed a successful meeting at Vienna, La. The Lord greatly blessed us." We are grateful to Brother Frazier for a club of six subscribers from his charge, with a check to correspond.

Mrs. W. N. Duncan, the accomplished wife of the pastor of our Church at Holly Springs, Miss., entertained the Woman's Missionary Society of that city in a social meeting, on Tuesday, Aug. 25. The occasion was a most interesting and enjoyable one.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. C. A. Battle, who was in Plaquemine, La., conducting a meeting, it was the Editor's pleasure to preach at Felicity Street Church last Sunday at the morning hour. He was greeted by a good hot-weather congregation.

A correspondent says: "Rev. J. F. Dring will hold a meeting at Pineville, La., early in September. The last revival that he conducted here about doubled the number of workers in the Sunday school." Manifestly that was a meeting in which the Lord had a hand.

Rev. P. A. Sowell, our pastor at Jeanerette, La., was in New Orleans last Thursday on his way home after a visit to the Mississippi Gulf coast. He did us the kindness to brighten our sanctum with his genial presence and we greatly enjoyed our brief season of fellowship with him.

Rev. Albert S. Lutz, our pastor at New Iberia, La., says: "Mary Eleonor, a fine 8-pound baby, arrived in our parsonage home on Tuesday, Aug. 25." We extend congratulations to the happy parents, and pray that a favoring Providence may watch over the mother and little one.

Dr. S. H. Werlein delivered a most thoughtful and suggestive sermon on the significance of the European war at the First Methodist Church of this city last Sunday. As a thinker and preacher, Dr. Werlein deservedly ranks high, and, best of all, his discourses are vibrant with a deeply spiritual note.

We are pleased to state that Rev. J. V. Bennett, who has recently been ill, has sufficiently recovered to be in his pulpit again. He continues to remember the claims of the Advocate in his rounds, and our mailing files are bearing witness to the good results. Brother Bennett is one of the Conference organ's loyal and unfailing friends.

Rev. M. M. Black, of Hattiesburg, Miss., writes: "I had the pleasure recently of holding a revival meeting for Rev. T. A. Ferguson, of Williamsburg, which resulted in a goodly number of conversions and 22 additions to the Church—all except one being on profession of faith. It was good to be there. The people seemed to have the old-time religion."

We are happy to know that Mr. J. F. H. Barbee, of Memphis, Tenn., who went to Cleveland, Ohio, to consult medical specialists several weeks ago, and was there operated on for appendicitis, has returned home much improved. We trust that he will soon be entirely well in every respect, and wear again the genial air and walk with the spring of former days.

The following brethren, whose kindness has not been referred to elsewhere, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions to the Advocate, sent in within the last few days: "Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss., 3; Rev. F. B. Ormond, McComb, Miss., 5; Rev. Francis R. Power, Shreveport, La., 5; Rev. T. V. Peters, Waldheim, La., 4; Rev. J. F. Dring, Pineville, La., 4; Rev. J. A. Poe, Sidon, Miss., 6."

Rev. B. H. Sheppard, of Oakdale, La., writes as follows: "The carpenters are at work on our nice two-story parsonage at this place, and we hope to have it finished in the near future. Our new church has been completed and every dollar due on it has been paid. We shall then have a fine property here, where we have never owned any before. We are working to have everything in good shape by Conference."

The Southern Reporter (Sardis, Miss.) of August 28 contained the following note: "Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, who has been over in Union County all the week, writes us that he has been having a fine meeting, but that he will reach home to-morrow (Saturday) and fill his pulpit on Sunday." Brother Lipscomb is one of the ablest preachers in his Conference and has been much in demand for revival work this summer.

Rev. J. T. Abney, our faithful pastor at Morton, Miss., has our hearty thanks for a club of subscribers, forwarded on August 25. His business letter contained the following item of news: "We are now in the midst of an excellent revival at Pelahatchie. Rev. L. J. Miller is doing the preaching. The congregations are large, the interest is good, and we are expecting gracious results."

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., reports the death of Mrs. R. B. Neal, which occurred in that city on Sunday evening, Aug. 23. Sister Neal left a husband and eleven grown children to mourn her departure. She was a true and worthy woman. We extend sympathy to the bereaved, and pray that the Heavenly Father may have them in his gracious keeping in this trying hour.

Rev. H. T. Carley, of Centenary College, recently spent several days in New Orleans visiting former parishioners and friends. He occupied the pulpit of the Carrollton Church last Sunday at 11 a. m. and delivered a strong and impressive sermon to an appreciative congregation. While in the city Brother Carley paid the Advocate office a visit and we were delighted to look into his face and grip his hand again.

A pleasant caller at our office last week was Rev. G. D. Parker, one of our workers in Brazil. Brother Parker has been given a furlough and, together with his family, is visiting relatives in New Orleans. His address for some time will be 1036 Marengo Street, this city. On another page will be found a most interesting article from the facile pen of this highly-esteemed Louisiana missionary, whose friends are delighted to see him back home for a season.

Rev. B. W. Lewis, of Summit, Miss., passed through New Orleans last week on his way to assist Rev. J. M. Lewis, of Carriere, in a meeting, and while in the city favored the Advocate office with a brief visit. He stated that the work in the Summit charge is moving along very nicely, most of the people being in love with one another and kind to the pastor, while he and his family are happy in the Master's service.

Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, after meeting engagements at Epworth-by-the-Sea in Texas, and at Lake Geneva, Wn., is again at home at Corinth, Miss. Writing from there on August 28, she says: "These splendid Methodists deserve commendation for the work that they are doing. My health is much improved. The Texas Methodists are most excellent folk and are accomplishing large things for the Master. The Tent Older Girls' Conference at Lake Geneva will revolutionize and better our plans for Girls' Classes."

Mr. J. A. Gilliland, a highly-esteemed citizen of Kosciusko, Miss., died at his home at that place on August 25. Of him the Kosciusko Courier says: "Mr. Gilliland was indeed and in truth a gentleman in the best sense. As a husband and father his family had no wants that he did not satisfy; as a brother, neighbor, and friend he was as true as a needle to a magnet, and as a citizen he was honest, progressive, and loyal." We deeply sympathize with the bereaved loved ones, and earnestly pray that the Divine Arm may sustain them under the burden of their sorrow.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix, who went to Europe to attend the Peace Conference which met at Constance, Germany, on August 2, is again at home, having reached Kansas City on Wednesday, Aug. 19. Having credentials from both President Wilson and the Emperor of Germany, the Bishop had little difficulty in reaching England, where through his acquaintance with British officials he secured a second-class passage on a Canadian-Pacific liner. So many persons of wealth came over in the steerage of the same vessel that it was known on board as "Millionaires' Row."

Judge J. G. McGowan, of Water Valley, Miss., has been elected Chancellor of the Third Judicial District, over Judge I. T. Blount by a majority of 822 votes. Judge McGowan was appointed to this office by Governor Brewer before Mississippi had an elective judiciary, and the people have now recommissioned him to go on with his work. He is not only an able lawyer, but is also a Christian gentleman and an active Church worker. He was a delegate to the last General Conference, where he worthily represented North Mississippi Methodism.

Rev. B. P. Jacob, presiding elder of the Winona (Miss.) District, in sending in his appointments for the fourth round, says: "The work is moving on well in this part of the field. We are building new churches, and holding revival meetings in our houses of worship and gospel tent. I was so busy that I could not fill a recent engagement to make two addresses at Junaluska, North Carolina." It is nothing unusual for Brother Jacob to have his hands full of work. Ever since we have known him he has been distinguished for not sparing himself in the Master's service.

Truly, one never knows what one will say when he speaks through the public prints. For instance, last week we wrote: "A muzzled ministry, setting forth in public only a part of the faith that it cherished in private, would be nothing more nor less than a species of hypocrisy." When the paper appeared the word "puzzled" had been accidentally substituted for the word "muzzled." This substitute was about as far from the real meaning of the sentence as one could well be, for a "puzzled," befogged preacher is usually given to a large amount of high-sounding speculation; silence has no place in his catalogue of virtues.

Bishop W. B. Murrah writes: "I am going to Memphis for a year at least. It is the most convenient place for me at this time. I am obliged to be there a great deal trying to get somewhere else. And then our son is there. His mother needs him during my long absences from home. I have no thought of cutting loose from Mississippi. Memphis is practically a Mississippi town, anyway. Please announce that after September 1 my post office address will be 1099 Linden Avenue, Memphis, Tenn." It will be remembered by our readers that Bishop Murrah has charge of the Memphis, Tennessee, and the two Oklahoma Conferences.

Chaplain J. A. Randolph, of the United States Army, writing from El Paso, Texas, calls our attention to the fact that we were in error in surmising that, because Sister Randolph and her daughter, Mrs. McDonald, ordered their Advocate sent to Tutwiler, Miss., perhaps Dr. V. P. Randolph, who graduated at Tulane University in medicine last June, was contemplating locating in that community. Dr. Randolph holds the position of house surgeon in the Temple Sanitarium at Temple, Texas, where he is one of the assistants to Drs. Scott and White, the noted surgeons. Sister Randolph and Mrs. McDonald are spending a few weeks at Tutwiler as the guests of Mrs. Wright, another daughter of Brother and Sister J. A. Randolph, who resides there.

The corner-stone of the new Methodist Church at Moss Point, Miss., which is being erected by the Dantzler children as a memorial to their mother, Mrs. Eran Dantzler, was laid on Saturday, August 22, at 9 a. m., the exercises of the occasion being impressively conducted by the pastor, Dr. B. F. Jones. His remarks were brief, but eloquent and strikingly appropriate. The stone is of white marble, and bears the following inscription: Moss Point M. E. Church, South—Erected in Honor of Mrs. Sarah Eran Dantzler by Her Children, A. D., 1914." On one face of the stone the following names are chiseled: "Rev. B. F. Jones, D. D., pastor. Building Committee: C. M. Fairley, J. N. Rape, M. D., Fritz Colmer; Wm. Drago, architect. Among the objects placed in the box in the corner-stone were a Bible, a Hymn Book, the letter of the L. N. Dantzler Company informing the trustees and stewards of their purpose to erect a new brick church, a list of the members of the Church, and copies of the Nashville and New Orleans Christian Advocates, and a copy of the Moss Point Advertiser printed on paper made at that place. This church, when completed, will be one of the most substantial and attractive in South Mississippi.

WHEN THE BOY GROWS UP.

Will he look back from the vantage point of thirty and feel that you were a wise parent in the selection of a school for him, or will he think that if you had given his case more careful attention, you would have placed him in a school where he would have received better training?

The thoughtful, considerate parent feels that the school to which he sends his son must be equipped and its faculty chosen with the primary end of training the boy to become a man—to teach true Christian faith, to develop manly independence and self-confidence, to inspire high ideals of life and service, to strengthen and develop mind and body alike.

Such an institution is the Morgan School, of Fayetteville, Tennessee, which has been built up around the Christian character and wholesome, inspiring personality of Mr. Robert K. Morgan, who has been principal for 25 years. Graduating from the Webb School, Bell Buckle, Tenn., and Vanderbilt University, Mr. Morgan has devoted his life to the training of boys. He is the man to train your boy. The close, personal instruction and association with clean, high-minded men will help him wonderfully. You can get a catalogue of this school upon request addressed to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Fayetteville, Tennessee.—Adv.

Mrs. A. K. DANDRIDGE (nee Miss Addie Wilburn) was born in Covington, Ga., in October, 1839, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. W. Baker, Senatobia, Miss., on Aug. 7, 1914. She was the daughter of Col. Sanford Wilburn and was next to the eldest of 14 children—11 brothers and 2 sisters—she being the last of this illustrious family. When quite a little girl she moved with her parents to Panola County where she had lived until 17 years ago, when she came to Senatobia to make her home with her daughter. She was happily married to Dr. H. B. Dandridge in 1868 and was the mother of seven children, three of whom survive her—Mrs. H. W. Baker of Senatobia, Miss.; Miss Nannie Dandridge, of Louisville, Ky., and Hal Dandridge who lives in Arkansas. She also left 3 grandchildren, Katie, Lutie and H. W. Baker, Jr. She was reared in a Methodist home and at the early age of 11 years, united herself with that Church Fredonia, of which she remained a consecrated member to the time of her death. In a sacred spot at old Fredonia, we laid her body away to await the resurrection morn.

A FRIEND.

Mrs. FANNIE JONES, wife of Mr. S. C. Jones, was born on April 5, 1874, and departed this life on April 15, 1914; she was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in her girlhood. We laid her form away in the Old White House Cemetery, surrounded by many weeping and grief-stricken relatives and friends. Sister Jones was the mother of one child, whom she loved dearly. The husband and the son both survive her. She loved her home, husband and son, with that love that makes labor sweet. She loved her Church and was punctual in attendance upon preaching days. Dear ones, weep not as those who have no hope. Your loved one is not gone forever. Though death comes as a foe and deprives us of physical life and happiness in this world, Christ comes as our friend and robs death of its sting and the grave of its victory, and He offers us eternal life; "for in His cardinal truths we have a message of hope from God to one in this life." You have only to take Christ for your personal Savior, and obey his teachings to meet your loved one in the home of the soul over there. Her pastor, HILARY S. WESTBROOK.

AUGUSTUS WATSON was born in what was then Itawamba, and is now Lee County, Miss., on Dec. 29, 1844, and was the son of Dr. William and Harriet Wilburn Watson. He served for 4 years in the Confederate Army, and was captured near the close of the war and carried to Fort Delaware, where he remained a prisoner till the end of the war. He professed faith in Christ in prison, and on his return home he joined the Spring Hill Cumberland Presbyterian Church and was a Sunday school superintendent for 27 years and an elder in that Church until 7 years ago, when he transferred his membership to the M. E. Church, South, at Pleasant Valley. In 1874 he was happily married to Miss Mary Griffin and their union was blessed with 7 children—2 boys and 5 girls. One son preceded him to the better world about two years ago. He departed this life on June 24, 1914 in his home at Guntown, Miss., and was 69 years 6 months and 4 days of age. He was a good man, a splendid citizen, an obliging neighbor, an affectionate husband and loving father. He leaves behind a lonely widow, 5 noble daughters, one manly son, with other relatives and many friends to cherish his memory. Weep not as those who have no hope. We cannot bring him back but we may go to him. We bow to the will of our blessed Lord and bid our brother adieu till the resurrection morn.

Signed: W. C. Carlisle, S. A. McCarley, W. I. White and W. B. Patton, Committee.

RULES FOR GUIDANCE.

"Do not let us forget that the first condition of securing real guidance in our daily life is to ask for it, and that the next is to look for it, and that the third is to be quite willing to accept it, no matter whether the finger points down the broad road we would like to go upon, or or to some tangled path through the brushwood, which we would fain avoid. And if we fulfill these conditions, the heavens will crumble and the earth will melt before God will leave his child untaught in the way he should go. Only let us be patient. When men precipitately press on the heels of half disclosed providences, they are uncommonly apt to mistake the road."

CHURCH MUSIC.

To become a member of a church choir is at once a responsibility and a privilege, and every such member does, or should do, his best to feel the words that he utters with his lips, and put his heart into them, and secondly, to express them with all the skill in harmony with which God has endowed him; for the aim and object of a choir, the very reason for its existence, is—not primarily that the music may be good, but that the service may be reverent. One has heard of churches where the choir is carefully trained and the singing exquisite, but where the congregation assemble and meet together to listen to the music, and not to worship God; in all such churches the choir is a failure, for music should be subordinate to worship and should never be allowed to occupy the first place in the minds of the choir or congregation.—Rev. A. E. P. Gray, in Southern Churchman.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

There are 100,000 factory hands in the city of Tokyo alone. Many of them live in close, squallid quarters that are easily productive of immorality. They are sadly in need of Christian influences.

When Dr. and Mrs. Yates, of the Southern Baptist board, went to China in 1877 they sailed from Boston in what was known as a fast sailing vessel on April 26 and reached Shanghai on August 17. It took nearly four months. Now, any one can go in about four weeks.

The income in cash, as reported by the Treasurer of the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, for the first five months of the year amounted to $148,193. This, compared with the same months for 1913, shows an increase of $25,153, or a little more than $5,000 a month on the average.

The Methodist Church press has recently contained many articles on Thomas Coke, the centenary of whose death was in May of this year. Having been ordained by Mr. Wesley, the first Methodist Bishop landed at New York City on November 3, 1774. His life was spent in carrying the gospel to people in needy fields. He died aboard a ship in the Indian Ocean on his way to India.

The last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church designated the year 1914 for the celebration of their Church extension work in view of its great service in aiding more than 16,500 of their churches by loans and donations. The bishops have recommended that this semi-centennial anniversary be observed by all the pastors and churches.

Tidings From the Field

Carpenter, Miss.

It has been said that the day of Pentecostal power has passed, but we thank our heavenly Father that we can testify that the Holy Spirit is still reigning and ruling in the hearts and lives of his people. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." For months our beloved pastor, Brother Strait and our little band of workers, have prayed that God would give us a revival at Carpenter. On the night of the first Sunday in August, when Brother Dan Kelley came to hold our meeting, we knew that through this humble, consecrated servant, God would give us the blessing we were seeking. From the first service a deep interest was manifested, which continued to grow until the close of the meeting. God is honoring Brother Kelley in making him a soul-winner. How he pleads, holding up a dying, living Savior, the best friend the aged, or the boys and girls ever had! It is so sweet to serve Jesus. One cannot long resist the Spirit's pleading to receive so dear a Friend. Seven precious souls united with our Church, 2 young men, 2 young ladies, and 3 little children. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." How we rejoiced to have these young people who had tasted of what the world calls pleasure, come out and take a stand for Christ. We are very grateful to Mr. Stevens, a gospel singer and a member of the Baptist Church, for leading the singing and assisting in Christian work. May God help him to be faithful in the work to which he has called him. We can not tell of all the good that was done, but we know when we shall meet around the great white throne, and see Jesus face to face, there will be some to tell of the blessing they received at Carpenter during this meeting. May God bless Brother Kelley and if it be his will send him to us again.—A Member.

Estabutchie, Miss.

We have held four of the six protracted meetings that we had planned to hold on the Estabutchie charge. While the success attendant upon these meetings has not been all that was desired or planned for, yet the results have been gratifying. In our first meeting at Pleasant Ridge, where we were assisted by Brother O'Bryant, we had five accessions to the Church. That is where I received one of the severest rebukes I ever received from the Holy Spirit during my ministry. All during the meeting I made different efforts to reach the adults and persuade them to receive Christ, but was unsuccessful. As the meeting progressed and neared the close, I began to think that we would not have any visible results from the meeting. But on the last day of the meeting five young people, three boys and two girls, offered themselves for membership; the oldest was about sixteen and the youngest eight or nine. The four youngest ranged from eight to ten years of age. As far as I know and made inquiry of the applicants themselves, not a living being approached the younger members of this class and asked them to unite with the Church. Since then I have been a little more careful along this line and I have decided that while the little folks may not fully appreciate what it means to assume the vows that all who come into our Church must assume, and though some parents will not allow their children to join the Church for fear they do not understand; and in view of the fact that many children refuse to enter the Church later in life on account of being denied membership while younger, I have concluded that it is better to make a mistake in the right direction than in the wrong direction and persuade the little folks to come into the Church. The rest of the membership was greatly helped in this meeting.

Next, we held a meeting at Estabuchie, Brother R. A. Allums doing the preaching. We had a good meeting. The people were aroused and since the meeting closed seem to take different views of things pertaining to the kingdom of God. We had but one accession, but may God grant that this may be the beginning of the realization of my prayers ever since our oldest boy, Louis Edward, Jr., came to bless our home: that he would live to be a great preacher and winner of souls. My prayer now is that I may be spared to hear him far exceed his father in preaching the gospel. He is only eight years old and not a preacher yet, but he has joined the Church and I believe after close questioning, that, in his own childish way, he knows what it is to be a member of the Church.

Brother Allums also helped us at Oak Bowery. We had only one accession, but we are hoping and believing that that one accession will be a means of reaching and saving others of the family. When I came to the work some of these people claimed to have been neglected to some extent and felt that they deserved more time from the pastors. We have given them all the time possible, but like many other congregations, the pastor can see room for improvement upon the part of the people.

At Lux we were assisted by Brother G. W. Huff. We had a good meeting, the Baptist brethren taking hold and doing what they could to help and encourage the meeting. There are not many at this place who are not members of some church, but we received two young men into the membership of our Church on the last night of the meeting. Brother Huff gave us some soul-stirring gospel messages that told on the congregation. Many members of both the Methodist and Baptist Churches promised to live closer to Christ and try to do more for the spreading of His kingdom. We had good preaching at all the four places, and all of the preachers were given cordial and pressing invitations to "come to see us and preach for us again."—L. E. Wicht, P. C.

A SUCCESSFUL MEETING.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a very successful meeting at our Church—Bethel. Our young pastor Rev. A. S. Raper had invited Dr. Dye to be with us and do the preaching, but because of a throat trouble he failed to get here. We would have been delighted to have him with us, but we have the sweet assurance that the Lord was with us. Our church membership was drawn closer together and to God. Brother Raper himself did the preaching. He is a most consecrated Christian and never wearies in well-doing. There were 22 additions to the Church and a number of others were converted who expect to join other Churches. It was with regret that we saw the meeting come to a close so soon. It lasted only from Sunday to Friday night as another church was calling Brother Raper. He serves seven congregations, and were he not so enthusiastic, he could not meet the many demands that are made upon him. SUSIE SIMS, Enid, Miss.

Mansfield Female College

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Founded in 1854.

This College offers a happy home to those who believe in regularity, promptness, honor, obedience to authority, work, play in season, loyalty, and reverence for the sacred institutions of life.

The Christian standards of womanhood are ever before our girls and the discipline necessary to growth and vigor of body and soul are constantly sought to be maintained.

Our faculty members are chosen for their special fitness to do a given task, and always with the knowledge, as far as is possible for us to learn, that each is the living embodiment of a Christian woman's grace and charm, and dignity and power. Girls learn much from books, but more from daily association with noble, consecrated women.

A Variety of Courses

English, leading to M.E.L. degree; Teachers, leading to the L.L.; Music (Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin, Voice, Harmony, History or Music, Sight Singing); Domestic Science and Art; Art (China, water color, pastel, oil, leather craft); Academy; Intermediate; Primary.

Our course for Teachers is similar to that of the best Normal and includes observation and practice teaching. Graduates exempt from examination except in Theory and Art of Teaching. Thirty enrolled last year.

Mansfield College has always boasted of its Music Department, and we still believe we offer superior advantages for the study of the Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin and Voice. Last year shows the largest enrollment ever known at M. F. C.

We call especial attention of mothers to our Domestic Science and Art course. This work has been offered for two years now. Ten were enrolled last year and two received certificates in June.

The College will have a large kiln for firing china. The teacher in charge of the Art Department is a lady of splendid Christian character and is an artist of rare ability and of large experience.

The College that expects honest work; requires obedience; demands loyalty; has discipline; boasts a strong, cultured, Christian faculty; gets a fine, appreciative and rapidly growing patronage, collects its bills and pays its debts.

Write, telephone, telegraph or call and see for yourself. If you have investigated and are not satisfied, send or go elsewhere. We expect every Louisianian to investigate before sending to some distant school.

Two thousand catalogs are being distributed. Write for one, and do it now.

R. E. BOBBITT, President.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Field Secretary has just returned from a visit to Ellisville, Moseley, and West End, Laurel. We had splendid success in the work at each place. The workers were greatly encouraged and much interest was awakened. At two of the places a Teacher-training class of young people was put on foot. The next charges visited will be Williamsburg, Estabatchie, and Homewood.

A Good Plan for Sunday School Finances.

Let the Church take care of the expense of the Sunday school and leave the Sunday school free to use its collections as a means of education. Say the expense of the Sunday school literature is $50 for the year; include this amount in the regular Church budget to be collected by the stewards, and then let each class in the Sunday school agree to pay so much each quarter for missions, education, the superannuate preachers, and on the pastor's salary. I think in this way the Sunday school collection would be more educative in its influence upon the pupils and would train them to support the enterprises of the Church and also the ministry. Think over it and try it in your Sunday school just once, and see if it will work.

One of the great lessons to be taught in the Sunday school is loyalty, especially to God and the Church. And we must be loyal ourselves before we can teach others that doctrine. So remember that the Mississippi Conference said take the Five-Cent Assessment. I feel sure that you will take this offering when you get your Sunday school together next Sunday, for I know that you want to be loyal.

If your Home Department or Teacher-training Class is not doing up-to-date work, get you a good book on the subject and read it. Maybe you are not putting enough effort and prayer into the work. A good book on the Home Department is "The Home Department of to-day." A good book on teacher training is "The Training of Teachers and Officers," by McElfresh.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Wilmer Williams.

The writer has accepted an invitation to speak on the "Standard of Efficiency" at Good Pine, in LaSalle Parish, at the Convention of all the schools in that ward on August 30.

It is stated that the church work at Holloway's Prairie, about 14 miles from Pineville, has revived. Brother Dring is preaching there regularly and the Sunday school is running again.

Mrs. S. F. Vaughan and family who have lived at Tioga and served in the school as secretary, teachers and in almost all capacities, have moved to Alexandria and their work will be a great addition to Pineville, but a greater loss to Tioga, as good officers and teachers are none too plentiful.

On Sunday Rev. J. F. Dring went to Tioga to visit the Sunday school. The rain came in torrents, but about 25 very small children, the superintendent and two ladies were present, and Brother Dring preached a very interesting sermonette to the little fellows and enjoyed their undivided attention.

Children's Day was observed in the Pineville Sunday school on the 23d, notwithstanding the very inclement weather. The attendance was good, though mostly composed of children. The collection however, was very small. The elementary superintendent who trained them came about ten miles twice a week, passing two towns between her home and the school.

It has at last been conceded that a thorough conversion is the first thing necessary for one who wishes to become a Sunday school worker. For what superintendent has not spent months and years training his workers and succeeded in giving them many advantages in an intellectual way, and has then seen them deliberately go and do those things which they knew they should not by souring on first one little trivial thing and another and working out of harmony with the school? The Teacher-training class is perhaps the most valuable one in the school, provided you have the proper material to begin with.

The Pineville school expects to hold a Re-organization Day on the first Sunday in October. In accordance with the plans of the Graded Lessons, it will naturally be Promotion Day; but the school will be regraded, re-organized and appointments made of all teachers and all officers not elected by the quarterly conference. The plan of the Annual Conference will be followed, the pastor being asked to act as Bishop, reading out all the appointments. This school is fortunate in having as a member young Brother Joe Milligan, a local Methodist preacher who plans to make a special study of Sunday school work. He also fills the pulpit when the pastor is forced to be absent.

In teaching Indians who cannot read or write, it is probable that the phonograph method will be used. The Indian superintendent who can read and write will teach the Bible class. For the lower classes the writer will dictate a whole lesson on a phonograph record, Bible matter and all. Records will be prepared for all classes for from one to three months. These will be sent to them the same as any other literature is sent to a school. The teachers of the classes will at their convenience place the records on the machine and have it repeat to them as many times as are necessary to become familiar with them from hearing them repeated over and over; then they will teach them practically from memory. Of course the superintendent will read the lesson from the Bible on opening and explain it as fully as he can before going to classes. Here is a work for those who are so bitter against foreign missions and claim to be so desperately in love with home missions, if their missionary impulses extend beyond the crowns of their hats.

HELP IN TIME OF TROUBLE.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

The American nation is wisely heeding the warning of Washington in keeping clear of entangling alliances with the nations of Europe now engaged in one of the mightiest struggles of all the centuries. While we occupy this sane and commanding position, under the wise leadership of President Wilson, ready to serve in any laudable way, our sympathy is enlisted for the suffering soldiers and peoples so suddenly smitten by war and the awful desolation and pestilence that follow in its wake.

The International Red Cross organization, with American headquarters in Washington, is ready to do its part in sending surgeons and nurses to the hospitals, and carrying food for free distribution to the needy and starving in the stricken lands. The people of America will not be slow in meeting their responsibility at this time.

Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer of our Board of Missions, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn., will receive contributions for this purpose and see that they speedily reach the appointed authorities.

IMAGINE THE MISERY

of a 7 years' case of persistent eczema and then the joy of its final disappearance. This is the experience of A. S. Giddens, Tampa, Fla.: "For 7 years I had eczema on my ankle. I tried many remedies and doctors. I decided to try Tetterine and after 8 weeks am entirely free from the terrible eczema." ### WHAT THE PRESBYTERIANS HAVE DONE FOR THE METH-ODISTS.

So much is being written nowadays about church unity and federation that a practical illustration of how one denomination may help another will be welcome as showing the extent to which denominations can work together.

The story of Bishop Lambuth's tour to the heart of Central Africa two years ago has become a matter of such wide-spread knowledge that repetition is not necessary. Its result is shown in the decision of the Board of Missions to open work in Africa and in the appointment of three missionaries, preacher, builder, and physician, for that field. On that tour the Presbyterians were of untold assistance; it was indeed the acquaintance of one of the native Christians, that came from the Church at Luebo and who accompanied Bishop Lambuth, with the chief of Wembo-Niama that formed an important reason for beginning work at this place. The establishment of our Church on this continent has been a matter of prayer among the Presbyterians of Luebo for over ten years; this of itself is worthy of our undying gratitude.

When the three missionaries and their wives left America in the summer of 1913 they carried with them the same list of suggestions that the Southern Presbyterians furnish their missionaries for African service. In London the same firm that acts as the representative of the Presbyterian Mission has been chosen as our representative also. The same Mr. Robert Whyte, of whom Samuel N. Lapsley speaks in his diary with such gratitude, welcomed us into his home, prayed with us, and bade us godspeed on our journey.

On the three weeks' sea voyage from Antwerp to Africa we formed a very close personal friendship with Rev. W. M. Morrison, then returning from his furlough in America to his work as leader of the Presbyterian Mission in Africa, who had spent almost a score of years in this work. He answered our unending and often irrelevant questions without impatience; he gave of his time and strength in a series of studies with us in missionary problems as applied to our field; he made out for us a short analysis of his grammar of the Buluba Language which has been of immense value to us in grasping the principles of the Batetela language.

At Stanley Pool, the beginning of navigation upstream of the Congo, we again fell into the hands of the Presbyterians. Their steamboat was awaiting us, the Samuel N. Lapsley, one of the best of the craft on the river. It carried us 1000 miles farther on our journey, saving us great expense, great discomfort, and much time. We were landed at Luebo, the center of the Presbyterian missionary work in Central Africa. Here again the Presbyterians fell upon us, captured us after no resistance, and took us to their homes.

For a whole week we had the pleasure of being entertained by this mission. They laid aside important duties of their own to help us with ours; they gave us the best rooms in their homes and slept we know not where. From their store we were supplied with necessary articles which we had failed to purchase or which were delayed in transport—salt, cloth, matches, saws, blankets, tent equipment, ammunition, and food supplies; from their dispensary we purchased medicine; from their printing office we obtained black boards, stationery, Batetela hymn books and catechisms (the Batetela being the tribe among whom we work), work books, and contracts. They gave us valuable suggestions as to the pay and management of our workmen, and cashed our check for 5000 francs without question. Not content with this, they did the best possible service in giving us as permanent possessions their two best native evangelists, men who were Batetelans and spoke the language perfectly, also eleven of their native church members, thus enabling us, before we had been at our new station two weeks, to organize a church and begin evangelistic services.

When they had finished with us there, they put us on the "Lapsley," giving us an encouraging and inspiring ovation as we left, and sent us on to another of their stations, Lusambo, several hundred miles closer to our work.

At Lusambo were Mr. and Mrs. A. C. McKinnon and Rev. R. D. Bedinger. The latter had already been appointed to receive and store our goods as they came up the river from Stanley Pool. Lusambo is the base of our overland travel; it is therefore an important point and entails much work on Mr. Bedinger. We were given the best rooms in the home of Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon; we were assisted in getting up a caravan of 200 men to carry us and our effects to Wembo-Niama an exceedingly difficult journey of 250 miles. Mr. Bedinger left important duties of his own to come with us, taking upon himself ungrudgingly a thousand duties and responsibilities rightfully belonging to us. He stayed at Wembo-Niama two weeks assisting us in the language, in the staking off of our concession, in settling "palavers" with the chief, and in organizing the first Methodist Church in Central Africa. Five weeks of his time he gave to us as freely as if we were of his own Church.

But we must stop here, though the half has not been told. Better than anything that has been spoken of is the promise of over 10,000 native church members to remember our mission daily in prayer, prayers which are already being richly answered. The relationship between these two missions is as beautiful as it is inspiring and must fill with joy the great heart of Jesus himself, who prayeth the matchless prayer "that they may all be one."—Dr. D. L. Mumpower in the Missionary Survey.

McCOMB CITY MISSIONARY AUXILIARY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of McComb City has made great progress during the past eighteen months. When the year 1913 started, we had no Juvenile or Young People's society, no Mission Study Class and no Superintendent of press work; and only paid about $20 on the pledges to both departments. Now we have a live Junior missionary society of 42 members and a Young People's society of 22 members with an active Mission Study Class in each society; also one in our Woman's Auxiliary, making three Mission Study Classes under the auspices of our Woman's Missionary society, with over 100 of our women, young people and juniors studying missions. As a result of all this our contributions have doubled themselves, and we have found that with information comes inspiration and greater activity. The local papers are supplied with notices of our work especially our Mission Study classes.

We have on hand an every-membership campaign and hope to induce each woman of our church to either join our society or contribute something toward our work. We are trying to impress our entire church with the fact that the missionary work is the greatest in existence by exemplifying these truths in our lives.

Mrs. T. B. CLIFFORD.

A STANDARD MISSIONARY CHURCH.

Every Church not only ought to be intensely missionary, but if it fulfils its mission it must be so. But there are missionary churches and missionary churches. Who will venture to define a standard missionary church? The following features have been suggested: "A missionary pastor, a missionary committee, a missionary Sunday school, a program of prayer for missions, systematic missionary education, an every-member canvass for missions, and the weekly offering for missions." Is your Church a standard missionary Church? If not, why not?—Biblical Recorder.

REVIVAL AT BROAD ST. CHURCH, HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We rejoice in that Broad Street Church has recently enjoyed and been uplifted by one of the most gracious revivals in its history. On the 14th of this month (August) we closed a twelve days' meeting which resulted in a large number of conversions and reclamations, and in 19 additions to the Church, 3 by letter and 16 on profession of faith. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present, and many hearts were made glad with new-found peace. Most of those received into the Church are young people, who give promise of great usefulness. The preaching was done by Brother W. B. Hogg, the beloved pastor at East End, Meridian, whose strong, searching, and tender messages were delivered with telling effect. Brother Hogg is a very attractive preacher and a man of deep consecration, and he greatly endeared himself to us during his stay among us. Interest in the meeting increased to such an extent that during the last three or four nights our church building was inadequate to accommodate all who came.

We have one of the largest and best Sunday schools in the city, the average attendance being nearly 200, and our Junior League is said to be the largest in the Conference. Our auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society is keeping up its record for great activity and large usefulness. Including those who joined during the recent meeting, 67 members have been received to date. Our finances are reasonably well up, and we hope to make a full report at Conference. This pastor has never served a more loyal or liberal-hearted people than the members of Broad Street Church.

Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK, Pastor.

REVIVAL AT ESTHERWOOD AND ELSE.

A two weeks' meeting closed last Wednesday night at Estherwood, La. Brother Bernard, the pastor, was assisted by Rev. F. J. McCoy, pastor of the Queensboro Church, at Shreveport; the writer preached twice. Notwithstanding the fact that Brother McCoy was among home folk, the Lord used him mightily, and honored the preached Word, which was in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, and the greatest revival in years in Estherwood was the result. The actual results eternity alone will tell. However, there were at least 25 or 30 conversions and reclamations, quite a number of additions to the Church and the membership was greatly revived. It was really a wonderful meeting; the old time altar calls were made, penitents came and were saved, and there was the old time shouting of the praises of God heard. Even a good Baptist sister shouted.

Your scribe, aside from his regular work as deputy for the Columbian Woodmen, has calls from the brethren that keep him busy. On a recent Sunday I filled the pulpit for Brother Bryson at Prudhomme on account of his assisting Brother Hebert at Mementau; a good congregation was present and we had a good service. Last Sunday my brother, the pastor at Jennings, being away assisting Brother McCoy at Shreveport in a revival meeting, I preached for him, and will also fill the pulpit next Sunday; at the evening hour the Federated churches will hold their closing service for the year, and the writer will preach the sermon. Yours in the work, ALADIN R. HOFFPAUIR.

A VISIT TO PONTOTOC.

I am just home from a delightful visit to the historic town of Pontotoc, Miss. The occasion, to which I was cordially invited by the pastor and other friends, was the dedication of the new Methodist Church by Bishop Hoss on Sunday, August, 16, and the evangelistic meeting which followed conducted by Rev. J. A. Bowen.

The Bishop was in a good state of body, mind, and spirit, and preached two great sermons to large and appreciative audiences. The subject of the morning discourse was "The Church, Its Foundation, Membership, and purpose" (Text Eph. 2:19:22), following which he dedicated the beautiful $20,000 church building to "the worship of Almighty God, the ministry of his holy Word and ordinances and for all other acts of religious worship."

By request of the preachers in attendance, of whom there were a number, Bishop Hoss met with them Sunday afternoon and gave a very wholesome talk. His wise and timely thoughts were inspirational. May he live long to bless the Church with the ministry of the Word and the administration of his bishopric! To this end prayers are being made for the full and permanent restoration of his health.

The revival work began in the Sunday school on Sunday morning when the superintendent, officers, teachers and classes one by one pledged their attendance and prayerful support of the meeting through the week, to which promise they were true. Brother Bowen preached at 4 p. m. Sunday, and thereafter three times each day during the week, closing Sunday night with a large and serious congregation. Every service was well attended by devout and well behaved people—men, women and children; the latter being more in evidence at the afternoon services. People of all the Churches took a hearty interest in the meeting and Dr. Daniels, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, rendered valuable aid, being present at nearly every service.

Brother Bowen acquitted himself well, both in and out of the pulpit showing himself a man of God, "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." The fruits of his presence and ministry will long abide for good and the memory of his name and work will long be cherished by old and young. There was great spiritual refreshing and quickening. Christian activities were revived and plans laid for more vigorous effort in the several departments of church work. There are in the town but few non-church members, but of those some are expected to unite with the church as a result of the meeting.

A fact worthy of note is that one chief contributing agency to the success of the meeting was the hearty congregational singing of the best hymns and songs, old and new, led by a devout and worshipful organist and choir who were reverent enough to bow their heads or kneel during prayers. Thus should it be in all the Churches.

The Methodists of Pontotoc are to be congratulated upon their beautiful, commodious, and well equipped church and for the good work being done by the Sunday school, Epworth League, Missionary societies, etc., under the leadership of true Christian men and women, for all of which all honor and praise are due to God and to faithful pastors in the past and present. The present incumbent is Rev. W. D. Wendel, a grandson of the lamented Bishop Paine. He is a worthy son of the gospel, a lover of souls, a faithful shepherd of the flock, and is in good favor with his people and the other Churches and those outside of any Church. We were glad to note great improvement in his health, and hope that it may prove to be permanent and that his valuable life and ministry may continue for many years to come. He is able to resume his work after some months of physical disability. During the two months past Brother D. R. Wasson has efficiently assisted him in the work.

The Methodist pioneer preachers found the new town of Pontotoc in its very beginning and began their work of gospel preaching. In 1836, it was an appointment on Chickasaw Mission, with J. P. Sneed as preacher in charge, and was in the Chickasaw District of which Robert Alexander was presiding elder. During this year, these, with S. W. Speer of Coffeeville, held a revival meeting in the town and organized a Methodist Church.

A deed (bearing the date Feb. 12, 1838) was given to a lot on which a Church was built during that and the following year. It was a creditable building for its day and remained until a few years ago when it was sold and a more central site procured upon which was erected the present up-to-date house, with the parsonage adjoining.

In 1845 Rev. R. J. Harp, who recently died in Shreveport, La., was the junior preacher on the Pontotoc circuit, Rev. A. C. Chisholm being the senior pastor. They were the first preachers of this writer's recollection.

The church life in Pontotoc is very good; nearly everybody belongs to either the Methodist, Baptist or Presbyterian Church. Be it said to their credit that there is no dancing or card playing among them, nor much of other worldly frivolities. May this record continue forever! During my stay in Pontotoc I was kindly entertained in the good home of my friends, W. M. Mauldin and family, to whom I am indebted for every needful comfort. Also thanks are hereby tendered to Brother and Sister Wendell and their son, William D., and the many friends who contributed by word and deed to my personal pleasure and helped me in my work. "God be with them all till we meet again." Many books and tracts and church papers were put in circulation.

If You Value Your Health

Read Every Word of This Remarkable Story

It is told by one who has himself experienced the regeneration in health which he encourages you to seek by the self-same means.

THE STORY OF A GREAT DISCOVERY.

The hardships of a traveling salesman's life had wrecked my health. My family physician diagnosed my case as chronic gastritis, brought on by disease of the liver and complicated by kidney trouble. I consulted specialists who confirmed his diagnosis. Months passed, I grew worse and was finally compelled to give up my work.

By chance I heard of some wonderful cures which had resulted from drinking the water of a little spring in the Mineral Belt of South Carolina, a picture of which spring appears on this page. In desperation I tried it. On the second day I thought that I could notice some improvement; at the end of the first week my appetite and digestion had returned and I was much stronger; at the end of the third week I felt that I was completely cured. That was six years ago and I still enjoy perfect health.

Knowing that it had restored my health and believing that it had saved my life, I bought the Spring.

I then determined to see whether the water would cure others as it had cured me. I shipped ten gallons absolutely free of charge to each of one thousand sufferers from chronic diseases. Only four reported no benefit from the use of the ten gallons. The other nine hundred and ninety-six reported decided benefit or complete cures. Many claimed that the water had saved their lives.

I realized that I had discovered one of the world's greatest mineral springs, and I decided to devote my life to it. But how could I make the world listen; how could I make them believe my story? The precious water was running to waste while thousands were suffering. I said, I will make them believe me by showing my faith in them and in the curative power of the Spring. I will tell them that the water shall cost them nothing if it fails to benefit.

The world listened!

Some wrote for proof and I sent them the letters which I had received from their fellowmen. Others accepted my offer without question. Thousands have written me reporting relief and permanent cure of a great variety of chronic diseases.

But some of the water still ran to waste for lack of belief. I determined that every drop should be used to relieve the sufferings of humanity. To this end I requested the advertising manager of the Primitive Baptist to come to see me. At my desk I opened my mail and showed him the letters from men and women from all parts of the country who had suffered and who had found relief. I gave him my letter files and induced him to spend several hours reading my past correspondence with those who were using the water. I showed him the chemical analysis and letters from physicians explaining the curative properties of the water.

He believed, and as a result he has written this announcement for me.

WILL YOU BELIEVE?

I do not ask your implicit faith; only enough to try the water for three weeks as I did. I estimate that I drank about ten gallons and I, therefore, offer gladly to ship you two five gallon demijohns on my guarantee that if you find that it does not benefit you I will promptly refund the price, which is only $2.00. You must promise to drink the water in accordance with the instructions which I will send you and return the empty demijohns. I make you the sole judge as to whether the water has benefitted you, and as the Advertising Manager of this paper has kindly consented to guarantee my guarantee to refund your money, if you are not benefitted, I hope you will feel perfectly free to accept my offer.

This offer is extended to all who suffer with any chronic disease, except cancer and consumption, but I especially recommend the water for the treatment of stomach, liver, kidney and bladder diseases and for rheumatism, gout, uric acid poisoning, gall stones, diabetes, nervous headache and general debility resulting from impure or impoverished blood. These are the diseases most frequently mentioned in the letters which I have received, but my offer is open to anyone who suffers from any chronic ailment.

Yours sincerely,

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir—As you are well aware, in 1909 I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered 10 gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months from date I began drinking it gained 29 lbs., was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportions that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely nature's remedy.

Shivar Spring, Shelton, S. C.: Gentlemen—I have suffered for years with nervous indigestion and kidney troubles. Derived more benefit from the Shivar Spring Water than from months at Hot Springs, Ark., and numerous other springs. I consider it the very best water extant.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir—I suffered with intestinal indigestion and the Shivar Spring Water has cured me. Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir—I ordered 10 gallons Shivar Spring Water especially for my teething baby who was suffering with its stomach and bowels. This water cured her disorders entirely and she is herself again. I stopped all medicine and gave her only the water. I was also run down from the heat and fatigue, and the water has restored me also. Thanking you, Very respectfully,
MRS. W. C. MCGILL.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.: Dear Sir—Until a few weeks ago my wife was a chronic sufferer from gall stones. She was stricken critically ill and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do so without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring, she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers.

ALMOST HOME.

Fannie J. Crosby (Mrs. Van Alstyne), whose many beautiful hymns are so widely used, is now in her ninety-fifth year, having been born in New York on March 24, 1820. She lost her eyesight when she was only six weeks old and wrote her first poem at the age of eight. She was for seven years a pupil and for eleven years a teacher in the Institution for the Blind in New York City. In 1858, she was married to Mr. Alexander Van Alstyne, who also was blind and an accomplished musician; but she has continued to sign her maiden name to the productions of her pen. She is a Methodist, having been converted and having united with the famous old John Street Church in 1851. Recently Mrs. Van Alstyne was very ill, her life being almost despaired of, and during the most critical period of the attack she had a very vivid and impressive vision of the heavenly world. Upon her recovery, she wrote the following lines, the last of her many contributions to the world's hymnology:

Almost in sight of the harbor,
O, what a beautiful throng
Over me lovingly bending,
Singing a lullaby song:

Almost in sight of the harbor,
Almost at home on the shore,
Only the signal to enter,
Only the stroke of the oar.

Almost in sight of the harbor,
Calm and serene was my rest,
Trusting my Christ and Redeemer,
Leaning by faith on his breast.

Almost in sight of the harbor,
Surely my spirit has been;
Yet to the friends that I cherish
Prayer has restored me again.

HAS THE RIGHT RING.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate of September 2 contained the following extract from a letter written by Bishop W. A. Candler to a Missouri preacher:

"You may be sure that I shall insist upon a spirit of evangelism prevailing in our School of Theology. We are fortunate in having a faculty which is absolutely of one mind on this subject. Every member of the faculty is a strong preacher and has had experience in bringing men to Christ."

Nothing that we have seen concerning our Atlanta theological school has pleased us more than this statement. The ideals that our young preachers form while prosecuting their courses of study in a theological seminary largely govern them in after-life and determine the direction of their ministerial efforts. If they get the notion that scholarship is the great outstanding objective toward which they should chiefly bend their energies, they are apt to become constant seekers of a selfish self-culture, apparently caring little for effectiveness in that noblest and most divine work of the Christian ministry—the seeking and saving of the lost. Learning, to be sure, is a thing worth striving for, and if laid upon the Divine altar, may vastly increase one's usefulness; but unless it is thus consecrated, it can contribute but little to the upbuilding of the spiritual Kingdom of our Lord. This truth is writ large in the history of the Methodist movement. What did John Wesley's scholarship amount to until his heart was "strangely warmed" and that mighty passion for souls which made him utterly forgetful of self possessed him? While the scholarly clergymen of the Established Church were drawing out their literary discourses to a scattered few in splendid houses of worship, the early Methodist lay preachers, largely untaught and untrained but anointed with the Holy Spirit, set all England afire with revival fire and increased by thousands the number of Christ's followers on earth.

Far be it from us to minimize the importance of the Church's endeavors to secure a well-equipped ministry. The diffusion of education among the masses is far more general now than it was a hundred years ago, and is constantly increasing. The pulpit needs, as far as may be possible, to keep step with the expanding intelligence of the people. We cannot ignore the fact that God's mightiest instruments for the extension of the work of redemption among the millions of mankind have usually been men of large equipment, such as Moses, Paul, Luther, and Wesley. Therefore, it behooves every young preacher to prepare as thoroughly as he can for his work, taking a college and theological course, if such are within his reach; and if they are not, he should be studious and do his utmost to make up for his lack of advantages.

But while all this is true, we need to keep ever in mind the fact that education for the preacher is but a means to a far loftier end. Its purpose is to make him more effective in doing the work of an ambassador of Christ. His larger knowledge should make him a stronger lifter of wrecked humanity out of the depths of sin and degradation—a more helpful toiler in behalf of every movement that would extend the reign of the Son of God upon our planet. So when, instead of giving us such men, a theological seminary turns out ministers who want at once soft places in the Church, whose faith has been shattered, whose preaching is chiefly speculative, whose dominant passion is to acquire more culture for themselves, and whose summers are spent at chautauquas instead of in revival campaigns—it fails rightly to fulfill its mission. Indeed, we doubt if we should be putting it too strongly if we were to affirm that such schools are a curse, rather than a blessing.

As we see it, and as we have said before in these columns, one of the crying needs of Southern Methodism to-day is a re-enthronement in all the departments of its work of the evangelistic ideal. We need to have constantly before us, as our fathers did, the one great aim of making true and thorough Christians of all men, and to bend every agency at our command to the achievement of this high purpose. Particularly ought every itinerant preacher to aspire to do the work of an evangelist in the truest and worthiest sense; and we may be sure that any fancied call away from such work is not from God.

Bishop Candler and the faculty of our new Theological School are on the right track in proposing to have "a spirit of evangelism prevalent" in the institution under their care; and if such an atmosphere is developed and maintained there, the whole Church will soon feel its re-vivifying influence and be blessed and strengthened by it. The world will never cease to have need of the intelligent, Spirit-filled pastor-evangelist who faithfully spends his strength in the service which the Master has commissioned him to perform. Harper's Weekly, in a recent issue, made the following comment upon the value of the work done by such a minister:

"Never will the evangelist, the soul-saver, be abolished. Never will his job be outgrown. He is the man who goes forth on the winter street and rescues the perishing. He enters the sodden slum and plucks out a battered wreck and shows him that still there is one person in the indifferent world that cares. While the rest of us are waiting for the times to be re-made, he journeys out and finds the lost remnant of the community and brings peace to the most abject. He lets the great programmes of mass-betterment drift by him. He leaves them for wiser heads to puzzle out, for scientific hands to shape with cool skill. He reaches down under their machinery and their theory, and strikes hands with the lost soul, and gives him the personal salvation which in another hundred years the social workers will have organized for the entire block and borough.

"After the misery has gone half a lifetime beyond prevention, he finds a core of human meaning in the rottenness, and speaks to that. Sometimes he will be the last friend on a lonely trail, bringing comfort after punishment and disease have worked their uttermost. He is not worried that 'souls' are no longer 'saved.' For in the sad underworld where he works, he knows that our modern wisdom has no word at all for the sick life in its bewilderment and loneliness. He knows that nothing but a message of love can reach through the body of corruption and despair to inner need. He knows that the stricken one wishes a savior, and wishes no one else. Science has no syllable of cheer for the life that is flickering out. Nothing can speak to suffering but love. There is no answer for death except some word that carries love across the cold barrier."

WHERE THE TROUBLE LIES.

Zion's Herald, in discussing the European war, raises the question as to whether Christianity has gone bankrupt. No, no! Christianity is all right; the trouble is, we haven't enough of it. As long as we have tens of thousands of saloons and brothels and gambling dens, why should we wonder at an outbreak of war? The fact is, there has never been any justification for the religious spread-eagleism which has been representing the world as nearly saved. The vast majority of the human race are still subject to sin and Satan. Take, for instance, our own nation: what right have we to call ourselves a Christian people while we are contributing annually only $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 for foreign missions and are spending $1,000,000,000 for liquor? The reign of Christ must first be established in the hearts of men before it can be expected to extend its sway into their outward affairs.

EVENING PRAYER.

For the sick and sad and sinful,
For all who are distressed,
For those who dread the morrow,
And long to be at rest;

For those who tread alone the way,
The long, long way of years,
For those who fall or stumble,
Blinded by their tears;

For them, I pray, Oh Father,
From all their fears release,
And in Thy mercy grant them
The comfort of Thy peace.

—Ellen Dunwoody.

"THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER."

Whatever may be happening in the embattled lands beyond the sea, one item that runs through the news bears the impress of truth. For we are told that the churches are crowded as they have not been within the memory of men now living; from thousands of altars go up supplications in behalf of the country and of its sons who stand in the battle line.

This phenomenon must astonish superficial observers who had come to believe that both the classes and the masses, surcharged with science and agnostic philosophy, were dead to the efficacy of prayer. There was, indeed strong reason to fear that religion had lost its hold. From all sides came complaints of the smallness of confirmation classes, of slack attendance at services, of want of candidates for the priesthood. The fortunes to be won in commercial life lured away many a youth who once would have been satisfied with spiritual things, and the inability to profess any creed with clear conscience, prevented many another from donning the sacerdotal garb.

Nevertheless, faith has survived in humanity's soul and to-day speaks forth in unmistakable tones, as it always does in such times as these. Prayer has a different meaning to different natures; to some it signifies a mere withdrawal from the clamor of the world and a consequent opportunity for introspection; to some it signifies direct appeal to a personal God and an answer as direct as the appeal; to some it signifies a vague, but mighty, yearning—a yearning not susceptible of direct response here below. From the beginning of time prayer has presented these diverse phases, and from the beginning of time all phases have faded into one when a supreme crisis came.

For in a supreme crisis humanity, thinking with the heart, is "true to the kindred points of heaven and home." Amid the thunder of the guns, the "fairy tales of science" and the refinements of philosophy are forgotten. Anxiety for a loved one is not to be appeased by the announcement of a magic serum, nor will a perfect syllogism stay the agony of a race.

Fifty years have gone since Americans were confronted with these elemental facts; during the long interim America, like Europe, has been prone to fix its main thought upon the laboratory, the mill and the exchange. From Bull Run and Shiloh to Appomattox, South and North alike had learned to pray after the primeval fashion. More than a century has passed since England had cause to dread war at her own doors; the mutiny of 1857 was a tremendous trial, but the scene of the conflict was distant, and the island itself was safe beyond dispute, whereas the fate of her central reserve now hangs in the balance, and a disaster in Belgium might pose a problem without precedent from the hour when William the Conqueror set foot on Albion's shore. So, too, the vast majority of Germans and Frenchmen have not seen a duel to the death along the frontier which was retraced in the summer of 1870. But a tempest is about to undo the work of the calm, and the churches will be full until the skies are again clear. Dogmas may perish, but religion survives, and religion cannot survive without prayer. And the efficacy of prayer is not to be doubted, though the direct answer fail.—The Times-Picayune.

LET THERE BE NO CONFUSION OF FACTS.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

The report has reached my ears that the trustees of Vanderbilt University have offered to turn over to the Church the unrestricted use of Wesley Hall, together with $300,000 of endowment, and the right to elect its own Board of Control for a theological school. I take occasion to say, therefore, that the whole story is utterly untrue. As a matter of fact, the trustees have offered nothing whatever, but have simply thrown out a vague general suggestion as to the possibility of co-operation. If anybody should come to the Annual Conferences asking them to consider the question of their holding on at Vanderbilt, he should be met on the very threshold with the demand that he show his credentials and make a definite exhibit of his authority. That the Conferences should take the initiative and solicit favors from a Board of Trust that has stripped them of their legal rights is not to be thought of for a single moment. There are some depths of abasement that lie beyond the range of possibility. It is true that the General Conference did tell the eight patronizing Conferences that if they should choose to continue the fight for their legal rights in the university it would give them financial backing, but it did not dream of telling them that it would approve their action in surrendering all rights and then begging for scant privileges. It had just as well be understood now as at any time that the Church will not for one day consent to educate her ministers in the atmosphere of an alien university that has denied her authority and trampled under foot her just, moral and legal claims. About some things there may be doubt, but about this there can be no doubt. Whoever supposes that he can sway any considerable number of our ministers or laymen from the position that they have taken on this subject is under a delusion from which he is sure to have a rude awakening. The Church has already made ample provision for her ministerial candidates. The new theological school at Atlanta will start upon its career on September 23 with a full and highly competent faculty and an equipment and endowment of at least $800,000. Other schools will be opened from time to time. Nothing will be done in a hurry. No step will be taken without due consideration. The prophets of evil, who have predicted failure, will be compelled to revise their oracles. Southern Methodism is going to show to the world such an example of courage and wisdom in dealing with the existing situation as will make glad the hearts of all earnest Christians. The issue is up for settlement whether Christian Churches have the civil and religious right to educate, and it will be settled for all time.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A BURNING QUESTION AND AN ATTEMPT TO ANSWER IT.

By Hunter Neal, Jr.

In this century of advancement along mechanical, commercial, and spiritual lines, there are some great truths that have been sadly neglected and which must be recognized and heeded by man if this world is to be redeemed from the rut into which it has fallen.

At the present time, after 1900 years of Christian teaching, possibly the world is worse morally than it was centuries ago. The many forms of vice are made so alluring to the susceptible young men of the country that it is no wonder that so many of them degrade themselves to the extent that they do. They do not stop to consider what this degradation means, or what its final result will be. If they could foresee the result of their folly as it really may be, it would be appalling to them. Yet this is the general condition of the rising generation of young men. Do not take this statement as meaning all men; there are exceptions in any number and on these exceptions must we rely.

The world is not fair by any means. Its standards of morality are not by any means just. Let a man degrade himself as low as he possibly can, and when he wishes to reform himself, he can once more mingle with the best society. To the eyes of the world he is all right, and no one questions his right to the position he has assumed. Possibly he is really a reformed man, and possibly he is not, but nevertheless society accepts him. Let a woman be degraded, whether of her own volition or not, and she is forever doomed to utter oblivion as far as society is concerned. At the same time the man, whom society fawns upon, and who is just as vile as the woman, or more so, spurns her companionship. If she makes a noble attempt to rise from the mire she meets opposition, and unless she has indomitable courage of soul she can not possibly break away from her old associations. How thoughtless the world is, and how fearful it is of becoming contaminated! It seems that mankind is ashamed, yes, afraid to help a poor struggling woman from the mire of vice to a foothold of firmer convictions.

The only ultimate hope of the world is to impress upon the rising generation the importance of true manhood and womanhood. The answer to the question, "What constitutes a true gentleman?" comes not in one voice, but many; and many are the standards the world sets up. But, in truth, there is and can be but one answer. A true man is one whose honesty, morality, and spirituality are beyond reproach. If a man is right morally and spiritually, his physical body will take care of itself. The Apostle Peter's prescription for good health is as follows: "For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil and do good; let him seek peace and ensue it." How can a truly conscientious young man expect purity and chastity of the young lady whom he intends to marry if he himself is not able to offer her likewise a pure and virtuous character? Many of the young men of to-day do not properly respect or hold in reverence the young ladies with whom they associate. Their thoughts, while in the presence of the gentler sex, are not as pure as they should be by any means. While young girls are responsible for a part of this attitude by their mode of dress and actions, the young man must take into consideration woman's weaknesses. Surely no true gentleman would take advantage of another's weakness, especially of the opposite sex.

A pure, sweet woman can accomplish wonders by her noble influence. Woman is naturally better than man. Her character and nature, if given the proper scope, will soon show a beautiful development, and man will be elevated to a higher plane of life by his associations with such a companion. Few, very few, women are so base that their influence could drag a man down to the level that they occupy. Men who are so easily lured into such vice are those who are seekers after carnal pleasures. Men, true men, will not allow such thoughts to stain their character.

Women rarely go into such a life voluntarily. The great majority who thus fall are enticed into immoral paths. A human being who would stoop to such a crime should not be honored by being called a man. Nevertheless, their success in this respect can be seen clearly in the crime, vice, and disease around us. Yet the men of this country allow such things to go on, something that is robbing their homes of the purest and noblest of God's gifts to humanity—womanhood. It is horrible to think of, but that it is true no one can deny. The bitter anguish of the parents is heartrending to all in close proximity, and the depth of their sorrow is inconceivable to one that has not felt it. To have the home robbed of its dearest possession is awful enough, but to continually have the thought of their lives before us, and to realize the hopelessness of recovery is still more overwhelming. The infamous agents of the brothels, by their clever schemes, are continually defiling all that we consider sacred.

The various Travelers' Aid Societies are doing a great work in assisting young girls to places of safety in the numerous large cities, thereby saving many unsuspecting girls from the clutches of these vipers. There is no more important question than how to combat these evils. The only practical way is to remove the cause that brings about such conditions. They are the saloon, or liquor traffic, the drug traffic, and the white slave traffic. All of these, however, are the creations of man's carnal nature. The saloon is responsible for the major portion of man's downfall, but a strong fight is on against liquor in all of the States of the Union. But such a fight can not triumph fully until it is made national, and laws are passed and enforced that will prevent the manufacture of alcoholic stimulants except for medical and mechanical purposes. Some of the professional men of this country advocate the use of liquor on a moderate scale as a great aid to health. Against such teaching, we have the unbiased opinions of men whose very statements should convince us that such a plea is utterly false.

Next we have an altogether different type—the drug fiend. Though we are not aware of it, he is right among us. He is everywhere connected with the brothel, where daily the purity and beauty of our country are being sacrificed. Only the vigilance of an uncorrupt civil system can in any way correct this evil, for the existing laws on this traffic are so rigid that, if enforced, there would be small chance for the habitues of the debasing drugs to secure them.

The white slave traffic is really largely the result of the other two. Man is not near so apt to descend to the mire if there is not the proper setting for so debasing himself. If we present to temptation an indomitable character it most assuredly will stand far less chance to successfully assail us. Therefore I repeat that the white slave traffic is largely the outgrowth of the liquor and drug traffics.

The fathers, husbands, brothers, and conscientious young men of the country must be the gladiators in the ring to combat all these evils. How can men sit back with folded hands when their sisters, brothers, and children are subjected to such an awful danger? They should arise and fight these conditions with all the power with which God has endowed them. The "straight and narrow path" is an impossibility to us unless we receive help from God and our fellow-men. We can not expect our sisters, brothers, and children to be able to combat these evils if we do not set an example and assist them to a higher plane of life. And this is only attainable by one who has a righteous conception of God and his fellow-men. Until we secure this, our effort at our own reformation and that of others will be useless. God is the source of all teaching that will help us to an understanding of the situation. He unquestionably made all things, and he will not fail us in the fight which righteous men and women are making to destroy the evils that are sapping the vitality, debasing the morals, and defiling the souls of the misguided men and women of the world. This will not be accomplished in a day; but, as for that, nothing was ever accomplished without preparation. The animal in the nature of the man is ever near the surface, and to control it we must raise our moral and spiritual standard to an exalted plane. And only by so doing can our carnal natures be brought under subjection. This reformation in society can only be effected by the elevation of our minds to higher thoughts and our bodies to a higher and cleaner plane of living; and this is only possible when we have committed our souls to God, our Creator.

McDonoghville, La.

OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

In a recent letter Bishop Wilson says of our new university:

"I want the whole Church interested in it. I am anxious to let the world know that the Church of God is equal to as large an undertaking for the good of men as any secular agency, and that it has enough of the spirit of the Lord to venture at any cost into any field that is open for the application of his gospel to the concerns of this life."

In this expression our venerated and beloved Senior Bishop speaks wisely and strongly. To make the university which is needed by our Church and our section, the whole Church must take part in the work.

Southern Methodists never had a greater opportunity in all the educational history of our Church than that which now confronts us. It brings to our people a testing also, as well as an opportunity.

The learned dean of the medical school of one of the great universities of our country said to me the other day: "The Church has been challenged to mortal combat by the secularists in education." He spoke the simple truth.

Our Church by a train of circumstances has been put in the front line of the battle. The eye of the nation is upon us. Nay, more, the eye of God is upon us! How will we behave in this crucial hour?

We have the chance to win the greatest educational victory in our history. By failing to make the most of our opportunity, we may incur the greatest disgrace by confirming all the evil things which the secularists have said of the incapacity of the Church for doing educational work. Shall we disappoint the purposes of Providence concerning us and fulfill the worst predictions of our foes?

I can not believe our people will fail to rise to the height of the great opportunity before them. Already evidence is accumulating that they mean to meet the solemn obligation of this testing time.

A laboring man, living by his daily wages, sent me $5 from Montgomery, Ala., last week. A few days afterwards a sister in Shelby, N. C., sent me $5 for the new university. The wife of a preacher in Virginia sends me a subscription of $1000, payable in a few days. A farmer in middle Georgia sends me $1000 in cash and his note for $1000 more payable next February. Several preachers have sent me, without solicitation, subscriptions ranging in value from $100 to $500.

It is worthy of mention that every subscriber, from those giving $5 to him who gave $1,000,000, make their gifts with "no strings tied to them." They make their donations unreservedly and unconditionally to the Church which they love.

This time we shall have an institution which the Church absolutely "owns and controls" so certainly that the most ingenious pettifoggery of lawyers and the most skillful quibbling of courts cannot take it from us.

God is with us in our undertaking. Let us see to it that we keep step with the Providence which is leading us so wonderfully.

AS A LAYMAN SEES IT.

One way to learn is to ask questions, but I have already answered Brother Alford in full in person, inasmuch as I was with him on each of the occasions mentioned in his article. I really believe that he is writing not so much for information as to agitate the matter, and in this he is right—it needs agitation. I know nothing about the conditions in Mississippi, and besides that is not the subject under discussion. I do know something about those in Louisiana. For all the denominations in the State, six or eight field secretaries would not be too many and the Methodists alone certainly need more than one. So I am really more in favor of our denomination having a field secretary than either Brother Ramsey or Brother Alford and join most heartily with them in insisting upon having one.

But why was Brother Lowrey discontinued? I hold that the greatest blame for such action lies with our pastors and superintendents. Many of them did not take hold of the work as they should. On the trips I made, Brother Alford was the only pastor I saw at more than one meeting, or superintendent either, for that matter, and this even while Dr. Hamill was with us. Had they all taken hold as Brother Alford did, the work would have succeeded better. Then I agree with Brother Ramsey that the five-cent assessment and Children's Day is a sickly, puny method of raising the necessary funds and it is certainly the last method I would consider. Then again we should have field secretaries, if possible, who have had a collegiate training in Sunday school pedagogy, or else many years of successful experience in the work. If the same methods were used by our denomination that are used by the interdenominational leaders, ours would also be a success.

However, as to withdrawing from the Interdenominational work, we would have nothing to gain but censure from such a course and much to lose indeed. Very little money would be diverted from the channel in which it is now used. It may be true that the Methodists raise a larger amount than the members of other denominations, but it is because they wish to. They are the leaders in this State. However, raising money and giving it are very different things. In some parishes, over half the amount raised is given by large corporations, business firms, and individuals who employ those of all denominations and therefore are in favor of interdenominational work. Some of these contributors would give very little if they could not give it in this way.

The interdenominational forces are doing a great missionary and evangelistic work and they are succeeding because they KNOW their work. The interdenominational organization began right at the start and met with instant success, and the public was not slow to recognize it and support it. It is to the denominations a strong and helpful ally. Its workers insist upon us supporting our own denominational work and upon the Sunday school pupils being brought into the Church. Rapides Parish gave several hundred dollars to this work last year, and I know that we received several thousand dollars' worth of benefit. It has changed the whole religious sentiment. One denomination acting alone could have done little of what was accomplished. Many things outside of regular Sunday school work were done.

The denominational secretary holds a meeting for only one school. The number of officers and teachers in an average school, taking the whole State, will hardly average more than seven. If half or more of these are absent, which is usually the case, it leaves only three or four to speak to. Of course pupils may hear the addresses, but they are not in a position to put the suggestions made into practice. When he is gone, they wait for the pastor or superintendent to take the initiative, which frequently he doesn't do. The interdenominational worker holds one meeting for all schools and has much larger crowds. Out of this larger number, one or more are generally found who will receive the benefits and use them. And when one starts others quickly follow. The spirit of competition if nothing else often causes this. When one adopts modern methods and gains thereby, others wish to do likewise.

Church News

The British Wesleyan Church has an invested fund of nearly $1,300,000 for the support of its retired ministers.

The official title of the Gideons is the Christian Commercial Travelers' Association. This organization now has a membership of approximately 600,000.

The late General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, held in July last, voted almost unanimously in favor of union with the United Brethren Church.

Rev. A. H. Caldwell, a highly esteemed Presbyterian minister at Senatobia, Miss., celebrated his one-hundredth birthday last July. Of his four sons, three are preachers of distinction.

It is stated that the merchants of Tokyo, Japan, have subscribed $35,000 for the entertainment of the World's Sunday School Convention which will meet in that city, October 18-26, 1916.

Dr. C. C. Pugh, of Hazelhurst, Miss., has accepted the chair of Bible History in Mississippi College (Baptist), at Clinton, Miss., succeeding Dr. H. W. Proven, who has become professor of English in Firman University, at Greenville, S. C.

The Congregational Church in the United States has 6604 congregations, of which 1067 are without pastors, and 6000 ministers, of whom 2043 are without pastoral charges. Yet there are some Methodists who long for a congregational form of government.

Such differences have arisen among the Presbyterian churches of New Orleans, that four congregations have petitioned the Synod of Louisiana to create another Presbytery and place them in it, or to transfer them to another Presbytery already in existence.

Prof. J. R. Dobyns, who for more than thirty years has been at the head of Mississippi State Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, at Jackson, Miss., has been chosen President of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, at Clarksville, Tenn. He is a leading Presbyterian layman and a native of Missouri, having been born in Johnson County in March, 1850.

Bishop E. R. Hendrix has been selected as Supervisor of the Biblical Department of the Church and School Social Service Bureau recently organized in New York, having as his associates in this work Dr. Hibben, President of Princeton University, Dr. Josiah Strong, and Dr. Edward Judson. It is stated that the service that this position will devolve upon the Bishop will not interfere with his episcopal duties.

According to report, the annual income of the Salvation Army now amounts to $30,000,000. A contemporary says: "This income accrues to this organization because of its wise and faithful combination of an earnest and definite religious faith with practical works of charity for the poor and outcast. Men sympathize with and will help a form of religion that shows its faith by its works." There is a vast amount of truth in these words.

From the Midland Methodist, we take the following: "The Roman Catholic Bishops will be required to visit the Pope in Rome every five, instead of every ten years, as formerly. This visit is for the purpose of carrying 'Peter's pence' to the Pope. This is the year for the American Bishops to go. There are 18,000 priests in the United States, who will probably give not less than $10 each, so their respective Bishops will likely have a goodly sum to transport."

It is reported that Sir William Ramsay conducted explorations some weeks ago which resulted in the discovery of the Antiochian Forum, in Pisidia. Aside from the effect of rain and decay, it is still said to be very much as it was when it felt the tread of Saint Paul. It retains the form that was given it about A. D. 14, or 18, according to an inscription engraved during the reign of Augustus on the balustrade of the great stairway, which is 66 feet broad.

The Christian Intelligencer declares that Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D. LL. D., the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society, is perhaps the world's most-traveled man. At Portland, Me., when he was as a young minister fresh from college and the theological seminary he was pastor of the Williston Congregational Church 33 years ago, he organized the first Christian Endeavor Society. To-day there are in the world 80,000 such Societies, with a membership of more than 4,000,000.

After serving as pastor of the Bellevue Baptist Church of Memphis, Tenn., for twelve years, Rev. H. P. Hurt, on account of ill health, has tendered his resignation. He himself organized this congregation, which started with 32 members, but which now numbers more than 500. Mr. Hurt is also entitled to the distinction of having begun the agitation of the question of constructing a Baptist hospital in the Bluff City, a movement that was speedily carried to a splendid consummation.

Bishop James M. Thoburn, the renowned missionary Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writing in the New York Christian Advocate, expresses the view that it would be a mistake to give the Philippine Islands their independence in the near future. He says: "The large group of islands are not like so many counties in an American State. Some are larger, some are smaller, and some differ radically. They do not have one common language, and they are not all of one common race. Considered in mass, they are not intelligent enough to assume the duties pertaining to self-government. As an independent political power, the Philippines could not defend themselves for six months."

JAMES THOMAS OTTS—AN APPRECIATION.

James Thomas Otts was born in Vienna, Lincoln Parish, La., Dec. 12, 1851, and died suddenly of apoplexy at his home in Homer, La., on July 26, 1914. He was one of the leading citizens of his city, always standing for the right and bearing his part in every good movement. He was a successful business man who carried the principles of his religion into his business; and the punctuality and ability of his business life into the work of his Church. His home was one of royal hospitality, lavished unsparingly by himself and his most excellent family upon every guest who shared its genial fellowship and Christian atmosphere.

It was the writer's good fortune to be Brother Otts' pastor for three years. No pastor ever had a more faithful steward or a truer friend. He was never absent from the services of the sanctuary, the stewards' meeting, nor the quarterly conference unless he was detained by sickness or out of the city. He had been for many years annually elected a delegate to the district conference, which he always attended. The last district conference, to which he had been elected, convened a few days after his home-going. He is survived by three sisters, two brothers, his faithful companion, Mrs. Della Allen Otts of Homer, and three sons—A. Otts of Shreveport, F. Eugene Otts of Homer, and W. C. Otts of Kansas City.

He is sadly missed, but some glorious day we shall meet him again, and the blessed fellowship so suddenly broken here will be renewed with him and other loved ones and friends in the City of our God. WM. H. COLEMAN.

TO OUR PEOPLE IN LOUISIANA AND ELSEWHERE.

Dear People: The next few months promise to be very trying times throughout the territory of our Church, owing specially to the depression caused by the great European war; the immediate effect of which is to close the markets against our chief products. The winding up of our financial year is going to reveal the fact that a great number of donors of small amounts are going to cut out their donations. This, on the whole, will make a large deficit. "Many a mickle makes a muckle." Already I see signs of the individual, following the precedent set by some governments in the present distress, declaring a moratorium as to his church obligations.

The success of our work this year, as pertaining to these matters, will depend upon the liberality of our people of larger means, whom the present depression can not affect as it does the brother of smaller means. Is there spiritual resiliency enough in them to respond to the call of the Church's need? The call to liberality comes strong to the people of means in such a time as this. The Church of the living God is in a tight place. Can we claim to be His friends and refuse to help his cause under such circumstances? "A friend in need, is a friend indeed." applies here in a sense it does not anywhere else. Let us respond to the Church's need, lest peradventure we find ourselves in the pitiable role described by the writer of Matt. xxv, 44-46. He that hath eyes to see let him see what a great and effectual door for the enlargement of his spiritual capacity is opened before him, and may he have grace to enter.

To the brothers whom God has blessed in a high degree with material things, I will not refrain from quoting the words of a great man who wrote on this subject; so with his words I close:

"Rich in all things yourselves, you will be able to show liberality to all, which, with our help, will cause thanksgiving to be offered to God. For the rendering of a public service such as this not only relieves the needs of your fellow Christians, but also results in the offering to God of many a thanksgiving. Through the evidence offered by the service thus rendered, you cause men to praise God for your fidelity to your profession of faith in the good news of the Christ, as well as for the liberality of your contributions for them and for all others. And they also, in prayers for you, express their longing to see you, because of the surpassing love of God displayed toward you." Yours truly,

BRISCOE CARTER.

NOTICE.

A meeting of the Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference will be held in Alexandria at the First Methodist Church on September 30, at 7:30 p. m. The members of the Boards of Trustees of Mansfield and Centenary Colleges, the presiding elders, the district secretaries, and others interested in our educational situation in Louisiana are earnestly and cordially invited to be present. This meeting is expected to be of vital importance to Methodism in Louisiana.

Chairman of Board of Education of La. Conf.

METHODISTS IN EARNEST.

The decision of the courts, taking the control of Vanderbilt University out of the hands of the General Conference of the Methodist Church, South, has in no way discouraged those earnest and sound brethren. It would appear that they now plan two Christian universities, one west of the Mississippi, at Dallas, Texas, and the other east of the Mississippi, at Atlanta, Georgia. The decision for this last location was immediately followed by the announcement that $1,000,000 had been given to the new university by Asa G. Candler, of Atlanta, brother of the Bishop. If some other millionaire Methodist in the West will do the same for Dallas, the trying ordeal with Vanderbilt University will prove a blessing, and show the world that Andrew Carnegie cannot control the Church in her work of education, nor make the Church see "as he sees." God bless our Methodist brethren! May their example stimulate the other brethren.—The Presbyterian.

Congressman J. W. Elder, of the Fifth Louisiana District, was defeated for renomination in the Democratic primary last week by Judge R. J. About the middle of August a man 83 years of age and said to be wealthy, married a girl of eighteen in New Orleans; as was to be expected in the case of a union so unnatural, they were apart in a little more than a week and now divorce proceedings are in progress. The law should not permit marriages between persons with such wide discrepancies in their ages.

There is no longer a city by the name of St. Petersburg in Russia. The ending "burg" is Germanic; so by an Imperial edict the name of the capital of the Czar's wide-reaching empire has been changed to Petrograd, a name thoroughly Russian. It is stated that other Russian cities with traces of the German language in their names are also asking to have them stricken out.

The New Iberia (La.) Civic League recently forwarded to President Wilson a note expressing sympathy for him in the loss of his accomplished wife, and a few days since Mrs. Emily L. United States Senator J. E. Martine, of New Jersey, favors the purchase by our Government of every available ocean liner for use in foreign trade. France, Great Britain, and Russia have protested against our acquirement of Germany's merchant marine on the ground that it would be equivalent to a large loan in its effect upon her finances. It is claimed that the buying of German vessels would not be a breach of our neutrality, but what the Washington authorities will do in regard to the matter has not been given out at this writing.

The total commerce of New Orleans with the Central and South America countries during the last fiscal year amounted to $97,842,251, the imports being about three times as large as the exports. These countries have been getting their imported manufactured articles chiefly from Europe, Great Britain and Germany supplying the larger share. With those nations now engaged in a death struggle with each other, here is a wide-open door for the extension of American trade.

The annual incomes of a number of the old-world rulers are estimated as follows: Emperor of Austria-Hungary, $4,520,000; King of Bavaria, $1,286,300; King of Denmark, $262,500, the Crown Prince also receiving $31,500; King of Belgium, $623,000; King of Greece, $260,000; King and Queen of Great Britain, $2,256,000—besides this ex-Queen Alexandra receives $336,000, others of the royal family, $412,800, the King gets the revenues of the Duchy of Lancaster amounting to $300,000, and the Prince of Wales those of the Duchy of Cornwall amounting to $400,000; King of Italy, $3,010,000; Queen of the Netherlands, $250,000, also a large revenue from domain and $62,500 for royal family, courts, and palaces; King of Norway, $185,000; German Emperor, $3,698,260, also a vast amount of private property, castles, forests, and estates out of which the court expenditures and royal family are paid; King of Roumania, $227,520; Russian Czar, 1,000,000 square miles cultivated land and forests, besides gold and other mines in Siberia, the income of which has reached as high as $12,000,000, out of which has been reduced within recent years because of the unsettled condition of the empire; King of Saxony, $881,780; King of Servia, $225,000; King of Spain, $1,344,000, besides $600,000 for family; Sultan of Turkey, $7,500,000; King of Wurtemberg, $400,000. From the foregoing figures, it is evident that Europe pays very dearly for its royalty.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

By Rev. J. T. Lewis.

In these days, when Summer is fast passing and the print of Fall's hands are about to be apparent upon the leaves of the trees, the grasses of the field and the flowers of the dale, our thoughts naturally turn to education.

What is education, anyway? The only adequate answer is, that process of drawing out, or development, of man by which the "perfection of being" is attained.

What is "perfection of being?" It is that physical, intellectual and spiritual condition of man which, when attained, marks such a one as a perfect man—AS GOD RECKONS PERFECTION. A perfect body is one in which every function and power thereof is complete—one in which life, health, strength and power to endure are manifestly present. A perfect mind is one that is capable of analytical and constructive thought, one that quickly answers to the command of the will. A perfect soul is one that has learned submission to the will of God through faith in Jesus Christ and is a pupil of the Holy Spirit, learning and appropriating the graces and ethics of the kingdom of God. No man has ever attained "perfection of being," but some are pupils in God's University, both here on earth and in heaven. That man or institution that is reaching "perfection" of body and mind only is building on a sandy foundation. The Christly education of soul is the only education that will abide forever; it is the only kind that can serve as a foundation upon which to build noble, righteous and godlike character.

In the light of the foregoing, which is the truth despite the negative that may be applied to it by some unregenerate, though worldly-wise, educated son of Adam, it is clearly evident that it is specifically and peculiarly the duty of the Church to establish and maintain educational institutions. This she must do, or prove false to her God-given commission.

But, says some one, where does Vanderbilt University come into this discussion? Just here: In the communication from Chancellor Kirkland of Vanderbilt University which was handed to the Educational Commission of the M. E. Church, South, during its meeting in Atlanta last month, these words are used by the Vanderbilt Board of Trust: "Dedicated in the beginning of its history to the union of education and religion, it proposes in the future, as it has done in the past, to make the upbuilding of character its chief task."

I submit, as a non-refutable proposition, the affirmation that the said Board of Trust of Vanderbilt is wholly unfit and incapacitated to husband and direct an institution to upbuild CHRISTIAN character. They can maintain an institution that will develop character, all right; but it will be of the worldly-wise type rather than of a Christlike nature. The basis of worldly-wise character is, "Might makes right," and "The end justifies the means," or "Technicality is righteous law." He who comes under the predominating influence of an institution like Vanderbilt, which puts into practice worldly-wise principles to gain freedom from Church control, can but develop a spirit of disloyalty to his Church, and to God, as we know him through the Bible.

Vanderbilt University to-day owes her freedom from Church and Christian control to her use of worldly-wise principles applied in behalf of and by her Trustees.

He who, as a son of Methodism, feeds out of Vanderbilt's educational trough does so after a full and complete knowledge of the course pursued by the Board of Trust, thus giving it his endorsement, or as an imbecile. If he possesses ordinary intelligence, to do this is disloyalty to Methodism and to Christian education. Especially is this true of any young Methodist minister who goes to the Vanderbilt Theological School. The issue is squarely up to Southern Methodism. The question is, Shall we, as Annual Conferences, demand of our incoming ministers that they be educated in an atmosphere that is wholesome to Methodism and Christian education, or shall we permit our people to be taught by those who are themselves guided in their education by persons disloyal to Methodism and to Christian education?

Matthew Arnold, I think it was, said: "Education is an atmosphere, a discipline, a life." Therefore, it behooves us to consider carefully the atmosphere of any institution, and the life of those at the head of it, at which we are about to educate. It is not enough to see that the discipline is good. The Vanderbilt Board of Trust was constantly declaring: "We are loyal to the Church," while at the same time they were studiously wresting the University from the Church. To continue the education of our young ministers under such influences would not only not be wise policy, but it would be suicidal.

A LETTER FROM COLORADO.

Dear Dr. Meek: Have you ever been where you had nothing to do, no responsibility resting upon you, just perfectly at ease, so that you could fold your hands and say, "I have nothing to do?" That is my condition just now, and it is the hardest job I have ever had to contend with. Often in my preaching I have warned sinners that it paid to live the right kind of a life because the day would come when they would be too old and too feeble to read the papers and keep employed to pass away the time; that they would have to sit in an easy chair and just think of the past, and that it would be awful to have to sit and reflect upon a misspent life. In the last two months I have had plenty of time for meditation and prayer and reflection upon my past life, and I am so glad it is pleasant to think of the past, not that I wish to boast of my piety or to brag on what I have accomplished in the Lord's vineyard; the thought I want to impress is that it pays to live right before God and man.

I have even gone back to my childhood days and thought of the Christian mother who taught me from my earliest recollection to "remember my Creator." I have thought of my educational advantages. Born and reared on the little island of Grand Cheniere, in Louisiana, at a time when the public school lasted only three months of the year. In three years I had gone nine months, until I went to Mrs. E. Jane A. Levy, a sister to the Whites, B. F., T. B., and H. O. A noble Christian character she was! I had the privilege of sitting at her feet for six months, which ended my schooling.

I have thought of the time when they gave me license to preach, when my mother told them, "You are putting something on my son he can never do. Why, he stammers and stutters so he can hardly talk, and how can he preach?" Brother Jno. A. Miller told her that if God had called me to preach he would help me over these difficulties. I have thought of the time when I knocked at the door of the Louisiana Conference for admission, of when I looked over the course of study that I was required to pass an examination on, and realizing my limited education, wondered if they would admit me. Oh, how happy I thought I would be if I could only be an humble itinerant Methodist preacher! I am so glad that the brethren of the Louisiana Conference allowed me to become one of their number. While it took me six years of hard study to get through, they gave me work to do, and as I think back over my ministerial life I rejoice to know that I have been instrumental in bringing over a thousand persons into the Church; that I have baptized over five hundred children, and have built five churches, besides the improvements I have made on parsonages. I give God all the glory for these things.

Now that I am here regaining my health and am having the privilege of seeing the most beautiful country in the United States, I have something to make me rejoice. I am glad that I have fallen in the hands of your friend, Dr. M. O. Shivers, a Mississippian. He has only been here three years, but has made good, and built up a fine practice. He is a Christian gentleman; he is president of the board of stewards of his church, is a regular attendant upon the services of the Church and takes a leading part in all Christian work, notwithstanding his large practice. Our church here will nearly double in membership this year. The Denver Conference meets at Denver this week, Aug. 27. Brother Barnett will go up with everything paid in full. I attended the fourth quarterly conference and heard the presiding elder say that his district would meet all of its financial obligations. Methodism is strong here. The First M. E. Church has a membership of over 3000; they have over 1000 in Sunday school. They have also a Second Church and other active organizations.

Gideon's Bible Day was observed here on Aug. 16. A thousand men took part in the service and marched to all the hotels and distributed a thousand Bibles.

A considerable snow fell upon the mountains last Sunday, and one feels right comfortable this morning with his overcoat on.

But I must close this letter. I am improving. I find great pleasure in reading the dear old Book. It has long been my constant companion. I see now why David prayed three times a day (Ps. 132:1).

Yours faithfully,

F. N. SWEENEY.

OUR METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

The recent articles in the Advocate by Brothers J. A. Alford of Vivian, La., and John W. Ramsey of Mendenhall, Miss., bring up questions with reference to our Methodist Sunday school work that are no doubt in many minds, and while we agree with them that we have too long left the training of our teachers and the enlisting of our workers to the independent nondenominational agencies, we must be slow to condemn those who have done for us what we have not been doing for ourselves.

Up to our General Conference four years ago there was scarcely an organization in the Church that was doing anything like efficient Sunday school institute work, while the Missionary Societies and Epworth Leagues from their organization have been active in this type of effort. But the 1910 General Conference added a Superintendent of the Wesley Bible Class Department to the working force of the General Sunday School Board and provided for the appointment of Field Secretaries in the several Annual Conferences, since which time new life has been awakened and the Sunday School Editor has been having regular Conferences with the Field Secretaries and Chairman of the Annual Conference Boards, as a result of which the new Discipline will show quite an advance in Sunday school activity and legislation.

Among the new provisions for the advancing of this institution of the Church is the appropriating of all the Children's Day collections to Sunday school extension work, one-half of which will be kept in the Annual Conference for local expenses and to maintain a Field Secretary, and the other half, with 10 per cent of all missionary collections in the Sunday school, being used by the General Sunday School Board for furthering the cause through the whole Church. As a result of this action, we may look for a good corps of institute conductors in the field in the near future, and the Annual Conferences will all, no doubt, have permanent and efficient Field Secretaries within a short time, and thus effectively take charge of a long-neglected department of our Church work, for the need of which we have suffered no little.

The Sunday school is our greatest educational institution, reaching its thousands, while our Church colleges reach only their hundreds, and the one needs expert leadership just as does the other. But in spite of this fact, in the past the Sunday schools have had to drag along with untrained officers and untaught teachers, and the Church has paid but little attention to the matter, and but for the zealous and consecrated efforts of the workers in the interdenominational Associations the situation would have been deplorable indeed, comparing the quality of our Sunday school work with that of the public schools, which is a joint agent in the same educational system. And while in providing for the few that have attended our Church colleges we have levied assessments on the congregations and resorted to various collecting agencies, at the same time we have not even allowed the Sunday schools to retain their own income for bettering their work, and in many cases we have, in addition, laid on them the burden of financing many of the local and connectional Church enterprises.

While the efforts of the field secretaries for the past four years were necessarily foundation work, there being nothing at the first upon which to build but the secretaries' own ingenuity, still a beginning has been made and the way is now marked out, and before the wind up of another quadrennium we may look for a revolution in our Methodist Sunday school program.

As to withdrawing from the interdenominational organizations, we consider that at present we owe a large part of the Sunday school life that we have to these agencies, it being true in the Louisiana Conference that the men who have laid down their money and given their time to maintain our cause were trained to this interest in the State Sunday School Association. When our Church takes hold of the same cause in a way that seems to mean business, these men will, just as the Mississippi laymen referred to did, give both their financial help and their moral strength to our own Sunday school work. In fact, we had a fair test of this in Louisiana when the present treasurer increased the income to the Conference Sunday School Board from about $300 the year before to over $2,000 last year, and rather than see the active propaganda that we had begun and that was taking efficient shape suspended, he and the chairman promptly agreed to assume the responsibility of guaranteeing the Board to be free of debt at the end of the year—the close of their administration. These men were both trained to this work, not in the Methodist institutes, but in these interdenominational organizations, in which they are both active leaders and to which they are liberal contributors. It would seem unwise to hinder others until we set in motion some agency that will do the work better. Let us have an active field secretary, organize our people into city, circuit, district, and State conferences, hold regularly our own institutes, and stir up our people to attend and support them, and then it will be time to talk of withdrawing from workers "who follow not us."

TWO GATES: BIRTH—DEATH.

(Written upon reading an editorial paragraph in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of August 13, in which reference was made to these two gates.)

Ye living throng, two gates behold!
Essential gates they be;
All living beings, we are told,
Are launched at one, O see!

Two gates the living mass between,
A mighty, surging throng;
Four corners of the earth are seen
To hold these gates in tong.

No one can come to earth lest he Gate Number One pass through,
And no one can depart, O see,
Only by way of Two!

O study well these gates to learn
That no mistake be made;
For know on these two gates, in turn,
Eternity is stayed.

Man liveth here by gate of birth;
All come of infant bliss;
O ye inhabitants of earth,
Have you considered this?

Into the hands of ripper years,
The charge so great is given;
Entered at birth's gate are cares
To fit for hell or heaven.

And thronging on behold them come,
And near the gate of death—
O bliss—duty—service—O home!
We hold our bated breath.

O is death's gateway open clear
To mansions in the skies?
Or does a wreck becloud the seer,
And close his vision's eyes?

THE TWO LITTLE BOYS.

The good little boy and the bad little boy
Both live in the house with me;
But it is quite strange—I can look and look,
Yet only one boy I see—
Just one little boy with sparkling eyes,
And the funniest pudgy nose,
All brimful of life from the top of his head
To the tips of ten stubby toes.

And yet there are two of him, I am sure,
For one is a bad little boy,
And I am sorry that he lives here
To bother the good little boy;
Yes, pester and bother the good little boy,
Till he sometimes drives him away;
And the bad little boy is alone with me
For the rest of the long, long day.

And I ask him to go for the good little boy
And bring him again to me;
But I take him up and I hold him close
While I talk to him lovingly;
And while I am talking, he sometimes laughs,
But oftener far he cries—
And I see that the good little boy is back
As I look in the bad boy's eyes.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

A gang of eight telephone linemen were working in a New Jersey seashore town. They took their meals at a boarding-house which occasionally harbored a few summer people, too. The conversation at the table was not especially elevating. It was a rough gang.

One day a lady came to board for a few weeks. She was a young, rather sad-faced widow, and she had with her her little girl, Lily. Lily was perhaps too vivacious in a gentle way for her name; but otherwise her name fitted her exactly. She was slight and delicate, but nevertheless full of vitality of a rare, intangible kind. She seemed scarcely of the earth at all.

The first day Lily came to the table she was quite alarmed by the big crowd of rough men and their coarse talk. Mrs. Burns, the landlady, seated her at the head of the table. As soon as her mother and she were seated, Lily bowed her head, resting her forehead on her finger tips, and in a clear, childish treble said grace. She enunciated the words very clearly and went right on, in spite of the noise of dishes and the jibes of the men at each other back and forth across the table. The men nearest to her turned toward her in wide-mouthed astonishment, and as soon as it dawned on them what she was doing, they nudged the men next to them. The talk quieted down somewhat, just as she finished her little prayer.

Lily did the same thing at supper that night. With the exception of a few at the other end of the table, who whispered, the men were all quiet while Lily said grace. It soon got so that the whole tableful of men would always sit in absolute silence while Lily asked the blessing for them. It was always the same little prayer, spoken very slowly and very clearly and with a simple, childish trust that they could not get away from.

When new men joined the gang, as they did every once in a while, some of the men would take them aside before they went into eat and say something like this: "Say, Tom, there is a little girl in there that always asks the blessing. You want to be quiet for a little bit at the start. We all are."—The Congregationalist.

HOW DAVID "PAID BACK."

"No, you can't," snapped Greta, decidedly. "It's my own swing, and I want it all to myself this afternoon. I don't want any one else in it but me."

Greta stood in the center of the new lawn swing father had sent out only that morning, and rocked teasingly back and forth.

The face of the boy standing on the other side of the fence clouded darkly.

"All right for you, Greta Morrison! You're a selfish, stingy thing! Just wait till you want to ride in my wagon again. You'll see!" he retorted.

"I don't care. I shan't want to ride in your wagon, now that I have my swing. Perhaps, after a while, I'll let you ride in it, but I want it all to myself this afternoon." Greta tossed her head, and the swing went higher and higher in the air.

"You needn't be afraid! I wouldn't ride in your old swing!"

The boy went back to the porch of his house and pretended not to see the little girl in the next yard swinging back and forth.

Greta knew she was selfish. She tried to excuse it to herself by saying that just for that afternoon she wanted to enjoy the new swing all by herself, but she knew in her heart it was stingy and it made her feel decidedly uncomfortable.

She glanced over at David several times, but he was seemingly engrossed with his tool chest on the back porch of his home and did not again look toward her.

Higher and higher she swung, but somehow it was very dull swinging back and forth all by herself. She wished very much she had let David come and swing, too, but she knew if she asked him then he would refuse. She wished she had not been so mean.

A sudden noise made her stop swinging and glance toward the front gate.

"Snowball!" she cried.

Through the gateway flew a small white kitten, panting, terrified, while close at her heels followed a big, ugly-looking dog, barking and snarling savagely.

"Oh, Snowball!" cried Greta in horror.

The dog was gaining. He reached one great paw out toward the fleeing cat. Realizing she could not escape him, she stopped, spitting and lifting her head—at bay. But she was a very small kitten, and the dog was a large, ugly one.

A second more and a boy had cleared the fence which separated the yard from the one next door. In a flash David was between the small white kitten and the great ugly dog.

"Get out!" he shouted to the dog, waving his stick and stamping his foot. The dog drew back cowering, then he tried to dodge past David after the trembling cat but in that moment Greta had bounded out of the swing, seized the kitten and run toward the house, where she disappeared through the doorway in safety.

"Go home!" thundered David at the crest-fallen dog.

The animal glared at him for a moment. He looked toward the house and saw that the kitten had vanished; then he turned and trotted sulkily out of the gate and down the road.

When the dog was quite out of sight Greta came to the door, still holding the frightened kitten, which she was stroking and petting.

"Is she all right?" asked David.

"I think so," answered Greta; then she added, earnestly, "David, I'm awfully sorry I was so mean and stingy about the swing. It was very kind and forgiving of you to save Snowball after the way I acted. I'm sorry, and I hope you'll forgive me."

"Oh, that's all right," said David, somewhat embarrassed.

"And you will swing in it, won't you, and forget that I was so stingy and selfish?" begged Greta.

"If you want me to," answered the boy, his face very red.

"Of course I do. I don't enjoy swinging by myself at all, and I want you to come in right now, and you and I and Snowball will have a good, long swing," said Greta.

For a moment David hesitated, then he joined the little girl with the kitten in her arms, and in the happy time which followed they forgot all about their disagreement and almost the danger that Snowball had been in.

"I'll never forget how good David was after the way I acted toward him," said Greta, when she told her mother later. "It was brave of him, too, for that dog might have killed Snowball."

"That shows David is a manly, generous boy," said mother, "to be ready to do a kind act after he had been treated unkindly. I hope my little girl will be as forgiving and kind if the time should ever come to test her."

"I hope I will," answered Greta, thoughtfully. "I shall always remember it about David and think more of him for it, for he saved Snowball—and he can come in my swing whenever he wants to and as often as he wants to."—Anne Guilbert Mahon, in "The Junior Herald."

HER FIRST DUTY IN THE HOME.

Good people sometimes expect too much of the minister's wife. She must take an active part in all branches of the work of the Church in which the women are active. She must be a member, if not an officer, in all the Church societies, and should she fail to respond and take part in the meetings, she may be criticised. This is scarcely just. Her first duty is in her home, and in church work her place and duty is simply that of any other devoted member of the Church who is deeply interested in its work and welfare.—Christian Observer.

Editorial

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

There are a number of things that persons sending copy to the Advocate should keep in mind:

1. See that what you write is sufficiently legible to be read without difficulty. Use either a pen and ink or a typewriter in preparing your article; we want no copy written with a lead pencil. If a typewriter is used, be certain to double-space. Closely written copy of any kind is very objectionable and gives trouble. Never abbreviate except where an abbreviation ought obviously to be retained when the article is published. In other cases, you force the Editor to trail along behind you and write out the abbreviated words; the printers do not do this, but go according to copy. Our heaviest and most taxing task is that of working over copy.

2. If the matter that you desire published is of an urgent character and needs to be printed without delay, get it to us in time. The articles for each number of the Advocate are largely selected and set up nearly a week in advance of the date it bears. The first half of each issue of the paper is put in the forms on Saturday afternoon, and the second half on Tuesday afternoon. This does not mean that we can handle copy of any length as late as Tuesday, for then we are making corrections of matter already in type and are hurrying to get the last side of the paper ready for the press. The Advocate is mailed on Wednesday.

3. When you send us a communication, other than a brief one dealing with some current important matter, do not expect its immediate publication. There may be quite a stack of contributions that have been received in advance of yours. Everybody cannot write for the Advocate at once. Realize that you must take your turn and try to be patient.

4. Do not get the idea that the Editor is under obligation to print everything that you offer him. There is a demand for twice as much space as he has at his disposal and he must make the best use of the paper's columns that he can. The mere fact that an article is well written does not necessarily mean that it is available for publication; it may be upon a subject that has already been sufficiently discussed, or upon a theme that is not considered pertinent and helpful. Of course, the Editor may be wholly wrong in his judgment, but still the responsibility of selection is his and he cannot evade it. Brief articles are far more apt to be published than long ones, both because they are preferred and because it is easier to find a place for them.

5. If you desire your copy to be returned in case it is not accepted for publication, please send postage along with it. The Editor does not feel that he is under obligation to give to any one an extended explanation as to why he does not use his contribution. He has no objection to doing so, except that he is too busy. If our friends will remember these suggestions and also act in harmony with our well-known rules as to "obituaries," etc., it will lighten our exacting labors not a little and be much better for all concerned.

THE MEMPHIS METHODIST HOSPITAL.

We printed last week a picture of the splendid property in Memphis, Tenn., recently acquired by the trustees of the Methodist Hospital, soon to be opened in that city. The cost of this property was $115,000, and it is universally conceded to be unsurpassed in its adaptability to the purpose for which it is to be used. We heartily congratulate Rev. H. M. Ellis, the Field Secretary, upon the fine progress that he has made in carrying this enterprise forward. When he took hold of it some four years ago, the outlook was far from encouraging and the outcome was quite uncertain; but by his ability and tireless activity he has managed to lift the project to a plane where its success now seems assured. For the faithful and efficient service that he has rendered in behalf of this important work, he is entitled to much praise, which we dare say the thousands of Methodists in the three States interested will have no disposition to withhold from him. It is a great achievement to make possible an institution which exists to unselfishly serve and bless mankind and which will perpetuate the influence of those establishing it to succeeding generations. Brother Ellis has had a large share in the accomplishment of such an undertaking, and in Methodist history his name will be inseparably linked with that of the Memphis Methodist Hospital for all time to come. The Mississippi Conference has a right to be proud of this worthy son who has wrought so energetically and successfully to strengthen our Church in this section at one of its weakest points.

But there is another man, without whose faith in it and devotion to it, this great enterprise would never have materialized. We refer to Mr. J. H. Sherard, of North Mississippi, in whose brain and heart it was born and who for two or three years was almost its only advocate. Though often rebuffed and pushed aside as he pleaded for this cause at various Methodist gatherings, he refused to be discouraged and kept up his preaching with an indomitable determination and persistency; and now he is at last about to be rewarded with the realization of his cherished hope. Brother Sherard is justly entitled to be called the founder of the Memphis Methodist Hospital, and if its history is correctly written such will be the place accorded him.

In conclusion, we desire to say that though we regard this enterprise as having passed the experimental stage, its need of funds was never so urgent as it is now. The payments due on the property must be promptly met, and since the hospital is to be opened in January, the work of rearranging the building and getting things in readiness must not be delayed. So let our preachers and people respond to Brother Ellis' appeals at once and give him the full measure of their assistance.

This institution, planted upon a firm foundation and rightly operated, will mean much to the Methodism of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee. We have seen enough of hospital work in New Orleans to know that this will be true. The Church that ministers to humanity in its hours of need and suffering will command its affection and support when shattered strength has been restored and pale and sunken cheeks wear again the rosy hues of health. Nor is there any richer soil (unless it be that found in childhood) in which to scatter the precious seeds of gospel truth than that furnished by the hearts of men and women softened and mellowed by the touch of physical affliction. Therein may we sow and reap a great harvest for the Master that shall finally be garnered in the sky.

THE NEW POPE.

On September 3, after several ballots, the College of Cardinals, which had been in session in Rome, Italy, since August 31, elected Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, an Italian, to the Papacy, to succeed the late Pope Pius X. The new Pontiff was born at Pegli, in the diocese of Genoa, on Nov. 21, 1864; so, as will be seen, he is sixty years of age. He was ordained a priest on December 21, 1878; has held various positions of honor in the Romish Church, and was at one time secretary to the late Cardinal Rampolla. He was made a Cardinal on May 24, 1914, and held the position of Archbishop of Bologna when chosen Pope last week. He has assumed the title of Benedictine XV.

The new Pontiff is said to be a man of studious habits, of considerable scholarship, and an administrator of ability. He is a conservative in theology and a recognized foe of the modernist movement among the Roman Catholics. In January last he issued in Bologna a pastoral letter condemning the "tango" dance—this, at least, must be set down to his credit.

HOW YOU CAN HELP.

Our Church now has in Atlanta the best endowed and most complete theological school with which it has ever had any connection. This school will open on September 23, and it is the duty of every presiding elder and pastor to exercise his influence to secure for it a large attendance. The managers of the school are offering to young ministers who are qualified to enter, but who are lacking in means, scholarships giving them assistance amounting to $50 or $100; but there are many young preachers who would like to go, and who ought to go, who cannot attend without more help than this. Two such young men have recently written us, and we have pledged assistance to one of them who has made up his mind to enter. He is a graduate of one of our best church colleges and a very promising young minister. We should like to raise for him as much as $100 at an early date. Are there not a number of our readers who would like to make a contribution to this worthy cause? We will gladly give fuller confidential information concerning this matter by private correspondence, if it is desired.

The truth is, the Church ought to see that every young man who offers himself to her for service in the ministry is properly equipped for his work. This, in our opinion, would not be difficult to do if our pastors would rightly lay this cause upon the hearts of our people. If some of our laymen of means would make a loan to these young men who desire to prepare themselves for their great life-task and let them pay it back later, they would render the Church and the cause of Christ an important service. Surely, it is high time that we were taking hold of this work of training more fully the men who are to fill our pulpits and lead our forces in the great battle for the world's salvation. This is the work to which the Master gave the largest share of his attention when he was physically present on earth.

JUDGE J. B. ECKLES DEAD.

On September 3, Brother J. S. Carlton, of Sardis, Miss., sent us the following sad note: "I write to inform you that our Church has lost another of her most valuable men in the death of Judge J. B. Eckles. He died in a hospital in Memphis yesterday at an early hour from the effects of ether administered in a surgical operation. He had been there only a few days when alarming symptoms developed, which led to surgical treatment, with the result just stated. Our Church has sustained heavy blows within the past few years by deaths and removals. We have suffered greatly, and in this instance we lose a devoted man of clean life and steady loyalty to the Church."

We are sincerely grieved by this unexpected announcement. We first learned to know Judge Eckles as a student at the University of Mississippi and for a score of years had esteemed him as a personal friend. He was in every respect a worthy man, intelligent, high-minded, sound, and upright. Both as a citizen and churchman he belonged to the best type, and his passing to the sphere invisible is an appreciable loss to his State and the cause of Christ in his community and section. In the prime of his powers, in the meridian of his usefulness, death has stricken him down, but not until he had served his day and generation well and had made a host of friends that will ever cherish his memory.

After addresses by his pastor, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, Judge J. G. McGowan of Water Valley, ex-Judge Taylor of Senatobia, District Attorney Dinkins of Charleston, and Hon. L. L. Pearson, his former law partner, the body of the deceased was laid to rest in the Rose Hill Cemetery at Sardis, in the presence of a large assemblage gathered from various parts of Mississippi and from beyond its bounds. We extend sympathy to the bereaved loved ones, and earnestly pray that the Heavenly Father may gently lay his healing hand on every heart that has been made to bleed by this sorrow.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The contract for a Y. M. C. A. building to cost more than $35,000 has been let at Laurel, Miss.

The new parsonage at Oakdale, La., is nearing completion, and Rev. B. H. Sheppard is happy over the prospect of occupying it at an early date.

A revival meeting is now in progress at Leconte, La. The pastor, Rev. A. S. J. Neill, is being assisted by Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District.

Mr. Wm. A. Brown, the well known Chicago Sunday school expert, visited Jackson, Miss., a few days since, with a view to organizing there a training school for Sabbath school workers, designed to continue for five or six weeks.

Our Church at Purvis, Miss., observed Rally Day last Sunday. An interesting program was rendered by the children, after which Rev. H. L. Norton, the pastor, made a forceful and helpful missionary address.

In a business note to our office, Rev. A. H. Williams states that he is now fully occupied with his revival meetings and that he is having success in the work. The recent series of services conducted at Troy resulted in the accomplishment of much good.

From the Lincoln County Times of September 3, we take the following: "Rev. W. H. Lewis and family are spending a few days in Lorman, Miss., at the home of their grandmother. Mr. Lewis while there is to officiate at the marriage of a cousin."

The General Board of Education will meet in Atlanta, Ga., on Sept. 30, instead of on Sept. 16, as was before announced.

Rev. J. F. Campbell, of Lorman, Miss., has our thanks for some subscriptions to the Advocate, forwarded on the 5th inst. Referring to his work, he says: "We are getting along nicely. We have had good revivals and the churches are being built up."

Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir has been transferred from Jennings, La., to the Texas Avenue Church of Shreveport, that pastorate having been made vacant by the removal of Rev. H. T. Young to Arcadia. Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir has been assigned to the Jennings charge.

Bishop W. B. Murrah will dedicate the First Methodist Church of Water Valley, Miss., next Sunday. This spacious and attractive house of worship was erected some six or seven years ago during the pastorate of Rev. W. W. Woollard. The present pastor is Rev. T. H. Dorsey.

Evangelist W. D. Bass, of Corinth, Miss., as will be seen elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, has been having considerable success in his revival work this summer. Note that he has a few open dates that he would like to give to some of the brethren who feel that they can use him.

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: "Rev. M. M. Black, Hattiesburg, Miss., 3; Rev. J. O. Bennett, Gibsland, La., 2; Rev. O. S. Lewis, Brandon, Miss., 4.

Bishop Robert McIntyre, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in the Wesley Hospital at Chicago on August 31, at the age of 62. He was distinguished as a pastor, preacher, lecturer, and poet, but was not considered a great administrator. His remains were carried to Los Angeles, Calif., for interment.

The Camp meeting on the Boyce and Lecompte charge ended successfully on the evening of August 30. The preaching was done by Rev. H. W. May, Rev. J. W. Booth, Dr. G. E. Cameron, Dr. R. H. Wynn, Rev. A. W. Turner, and the pastor, Rev. A. S. J. Neill. Rev. C. M. Morris, of Mooringsport, led the singing.

We are sorry to learn that Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, was ill with la grippe in Brookhaven, Miss., last week. We trust that he will soon recover and be fully at himself again. As a district superintendent, Brother Adams ranks with the best that can be found anywhere.

Rev. George Fox reports a successful meeting at St. Joseph, La., in which the preaching was done by Rev. W. W. Holmes of Ruston, and the singing was conducted by Brother R. N. Jeffrey, of Shreveport. His interesting account of this revival reached us too late for this issue of the Advocate, but will appear next week.

Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, Miss., has been engaged in meetings for a period of seven weeks. He assisted Brother Brisco, pastor of the Smithville charge, at Antioch Church last week, where the membership was greatly revived and there were 21 accessions. As a pastor-evangelist, Brother Young ranks with the most efficient in his Conference.

The Kosciusko (Miss.) Courier of September 3 states that Prof. G. M. Boyd has returned to his home in Kosciusko, after spending some time at Monteagle, Tenn., weak and still far from well. We regret to learn of the continued illness of this worthy educator, and we cannot but indulge the hope that his physical condition will soon take a decided turn for the better.

Rev. L. A. McKeown is making full proof of his ministry at Byhalia, Miss., as is evidenced by the fact that in a meeting recently conducted there, in which he did all the preaching himself, there were 93 additions to the Church. There are few more effective men in the itinerant ranks than this faithful worker, who knows Christ and understands how to lead others to Him.

Rev. G. G. Yeager, of Hermanville, Miss., writes: "We have just closed a fine meeting at this place. Rev. J. E. Williams of Gloster, Miss., did the preaching, and the general sentiment of our people is that he is a strong revival preacher. He did us great good. The congregations were gratifying and all the services were spiritual and helpful. The work on this circuit is moving along very well, all things considered."

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, writing from Glancy, Miss., on Sept. 1, says: "Having recently closed an effective revival for Rev. J. W. Price at Benton, resulting in a number of accessions to the Church, I am at this place with Rev. J. H. Grice in what promises to be an excellent meeting. Please state that I have an open date embracing the third Sunday in October, and that if any brother can use me in a revival at that time, I shall be glad to go to him."

Rev. D. L. Griffin, of Slidell, La., writes as follows: "We are about to begin a revival campaign that will embrace the month of September, starting first at Pearl River and going later to Slidell and Covington. Rev. W. W. Perry will be with me in the first two meetings. Please ask the Christian readers of the Advocate to pray for our success in this work." Brother Griffin's letter brought us a club of six subscriptions, for which he has our hearty thanks.

Basing it upon information gathered from some of our exchanges, we stated last week that Rev. H. H. Harris, who has been chosen to the chair of Psychology and Sunday School Pedagogy in our new School of Theology at Atlanta, was a graduate of the Wesleyan University of Connecticut. Dr. Lovett states in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate that this is an error. Mr. Harris is an alumnus of the Northwestern University, and not of the New England institution.

From the St. Helena Echo (Greensburg, La.) we take the following: "The third quarterly conference of this charge will convene to-morrow (Sept. 5) at Center Church. Our able presiding elder, Rev. H. W. Bowman, will preach both on Saturday and Sunday, and every one who can should attend. Let the official board be on hand on Saturday." From the foregoing it is evident that Brother Holland, the Editor of the Echo, is a pretty good Methodist exhorter.

A Bay Springs (Miss.) dispatch to the Times-Picayune on Sept. 6 reads as follows: "One of the most successful revival meetings held here for some time was brought to a close at the Methodist Church this morning, when the last sermon was preached by Rev. J. L. Decell, of Waynesboro. The preaching throughout the services was done by Mr. Decell and Rev. J. H. Moore, the Methodist pastor at this place. Many members were added to the Church."

Referring to the work in the Alexandria (La.) District, Rev. H. W. May, the presiding elder, says: "My fourth round will begin on September 16, and the indications are that the district will have the best year in its history. Revivals of far-reaching influence have been held in most of the charges and others are now in progress. The prospect at present is for a net gain of 500 members during the year 1914. My family is now occupying the district parsonage, which has been made almost new."

A Canton (Miss.) dispatch to the Jackson Daily News, on Sept. 1, says: "The revival services which began at the First Methodist Church last Sunday night are being largely attended by all denominations. Rev. C. N. Guice, the pastor, is being assisted by Rev. T. B. Price, an evangelist, and Mr. B. E. McCloskey, a soloist. The services will continue not less than 15 days. A large chorus choir, composed of all the churches of the city, led by Mr. McCloskey, will furnish music during the meeting."

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, of the Corinth District, who is one of the most energetic presiding elders in the Church, in forwarding his fourth round of appointments, says: "I have just closed my third round of quarterly conferences. The preachers of the district are all well except Rev. C. P. Moss, of Iuka. He found it best to take a little rest and is away for a short time. Successful meetings have been held in many of the charges. The indications now are that the district will make the best report at Conference that it has ever made."

We are publishing this week a tribute to Mr. James Otts, of Homer, La., from the pen of Rev. W. H. Coleman, one of his former pastors. In the death of this excellent layman, which occurred on July 26 as a result of a stroke of apoplexy, the Advocate lost one of its truest and most active friends. It was his invariable rule to give us every year a fine club of subscribers from his community. It pains us to chronicle the decease of one who was so useful to the Church, and we assure his bereaved family that they have our sympathy and prayers.

Mrs. Delta McLaurin, of Vicksburg, Miss., a daughter of the late United States Senator A. J. McLaurin, has recently been chosen editor-in-chief of The Silver Cross, the national official organ of the King's Daughters. She will be associated in her editorial work with Miss Morehouse, of New York, who is the managing editor. This is a high honor worthily bestowed. Mrs. McLaurin is the wife of the Hon. R. L. McLaurin and a sister of Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, who is President of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Rev. F. M. Adams writes as follows from Chicago, Ill.: "After a full two months and a half stay at the coolest place in the country, I am preparing to return to the good old sweltering Dixie's land. Please send my naner to Durham, N. C., care of Trinity College. I feel like I have had a visit home when I finish reading it every week." This means, of course, that our esteemed young brother is about to resume his studies at Trinity College. He is a son of Rev. T. W. Adams, and is one of the most promising young ministers in the Mississippi Conference.

Hon. H. H. White, of Alexandria, La., has been prominently mentioned as a successor to the late Judge Shelby on the bench of the United States Circuit Court of the Fifth District, but has discouraged his friends in pressing his claims on the ground that a division of sentiment in Louisiana as to a man for the place would likely result in the appointment of a judge from some other State. Mr. White is an able lawyer and would worthily wear the ermine, and President Wilson could not do better than to lay hands upon him for this vacancy. Grover Cleveland had a most commendable way of passing by the politicians and conscripting men of this type into the public service.

The many friends of Chaplain J. A. Randolph, of the U. S. A., who is a member of the North Mississippi Conference, will be pleased to read the following message from him: "I shall leave El Paso on August 25, having permission to be away from my regiment for a month, going first to Louisville, Ky., where I shall represent the Col. Hayden Y. Grubbs Camp at the Eleventh Annual National Encampment of the United Spanish War Veterans. The Grubbs Camp is composed almost entirely of enlisted men, many of whom have been in the regiment for years, and my unanimous election by them as their representative is an honor which I highly appreciate. I shall spend the remainder of my leave of absence in Mississippi."

Rev. W. W. Woollard, in a personal letter to the Editor, states that Mrs. H. E. High, a useful and greatly loved member of our Church at Tupelo, Miss., passed to her reward the first of last week, in the 62d year of her age. She was buried on Tuesday, September 1, with Brother Woollard and Rev. J. C. Park officiating. We dare say that this announcement will carry sorrow to the heart of every pastor and pastor's wife who has lived in Tupelo within a score or more of years. A truer and more ardent Methodist or a more faithful friend to the minister and his family than Sister High, we have never known. She left a husband, Mr. H. E. High, and a son, Mr. S. J. High, both of whom are loyal and worthy members of our church at Tupelo, to mourn her departure. May divine grace be vouchsafed to comfort and sustain them in this trying hour.

METHODISM CONDENSED.

We are indebted to the Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati) for the following:

"At one of our General Conferences many years ago Bishop Thomas A. Morris preached a sermon in which he referred to the creeds of other Churches by way of contrast, designating the Five Points of Calvinism as follows: (1) Total Depravity; (2) Limited Atonement; (3) Election; (4) Effectual Calling; (5) The Perseverance of the Saints.

"Now," said the Bishop, "as Methodists we have Five Points also: (1) All men are sinners; (2) All are redeemed; (3) All are called; (4) All who obey the call are elected; (5) All who persevere to the end will be saved."

"This is a very good condensed presentation of the essentials of our faith. It was the preaching of these points in the early days that made Methodism so effective."

So it was, and a faithful presentation of them by Spirit-filled men who believe them never fails to produce similar results in this day. The world has never seen a more Scriptural, consistent, and workable system of theology than that which makes up the sum of our Methodist teaching.

TRUST.

The clouds hang heavy round my way,
I cannot see;
But through the darkness I believe
God leadeth me.
'Tis sweet to keep my hand in His
While all is dim,
To close my weary, aching eyes,
And follow Him.

Through many a thorny path He leads
My tired feet,
Through many a path of tears I go,
But it is sweet
To know that He is close to me,
My guard, my guide;
He leadeth me; and so I walk
Quite satisfied.

—The Presbyterian.

All those feet had Corns

Watch the feet that now trip lightly. All of them had corns.

But the owners learned of Blue-jay. They applied it in a minute. There was no more pain. The corn was forgotten.
And in two days the corn came out.

Soon or late you will treat your corns in that way. You will stop the paring, stop the old-time treatments. You will deal with corns in a scientific way.

You will take them out, with no soreness, no pain, no inconvenience.

Nearly half the corns in the country are now ended by Blue-jay— a million corns a month.

Why wait? Other ways, as you well know, don't really end a corn.

Mrs. SUSAN APPLEWHITE (nee Sharhrough) was born near Columbia, Miss., on January 23, 1843, and died at the home of Mr.
Regan, one of her sons, at Jamestown, Miss., on June 6, 1914. In early life she united with the Methodist Church, and her days were spent in piety and usefulness. She delighted to attend the services of the Church, to extend hospitality to its ministers, and to visit and care for the sick. In the year 1863 she was married to Mr.
William S. Regan, and their home was established not far from Columbia.
Mr. Regan, like herself, was a member of the Church, and the earlier Methodist ministers about Columbia often found shelter and welcome with them. By the death of her husband on Sept. 27, 1891, she was left a widow; and eight years afterward she became the wife of Mr. John Applewhite. He died in September, 1899, less than three years after their marriage. Since then, Sister Applewhite has lived with her children, six of whom, if I mistake not, survive her.
Her departure was not unexpected.
She had been growing feeble for years and for months had been confined to her home. She was not only willing to go, but anxiously awaited the summons. She had lived to see all her children settled in life, and all of them members of the Church. Believing them all to be Christians, and being unable longer to help others, she felt that her work was done. She awaited her reward with hope and confidence. Her funeral sermon was preached by Rev. Charles Downer, who visited her often in her last sickness.
M. B. SHARBROUGH.

Mrs. KATE COPELAND, who was the widow of the late Rev. H. Copeland, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, died at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. J. S. Lester, in Toledo, British Honduras.

She removed with her husband and children from Madison County, Miss., to Toledo, British Honduras, in January, 1869, where the husband and father died in 1879. She was born in Tuscumbia, Ala., in 1825. She was soundly converted in her early life, and although she often felt the effect of her shortcomings, she never lost sight of the foot-prints of her Savior.
The Bible was the Book of books to her. It was her daily companion, and perhaps next to the Bible she prized the Advocates (Nashville and New Orleans). They were her daily companions. In her last long and painful illness she suffered much, but without complaining.

Oh, what must have been her joy as her spirit winged its way through the pearly gates into the new Jerusalem, there to gather round the great white throne and join in the chorus,
"Worthy is the Lamb That was Slain;" there to meet her sainted husband and little daughter who had preceded her many years, as well as her sainted mother and an innumerable company of saints and angels.

"A thousand years my own loved Zion—

'Tis the glad day so long foretold,
'Tis the glad morn whose radiant glory

Prophets foresaw in days of old."

May God help us all to meet you, mother, "where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more."
JAY B. COPELAND.

Our Church at Red Banks has suffered a severe loss within the past few weeks in the death of two of its strongest and most worthy members.
I refer to the death of Brothers H. H.
WOODS and H. E. GARDNER.

Brother Woods was born in Livingston, Ky., in April, in 1844, and was reared by his mother's sister, owing to the early death of his parents, near Victoria, Miss. He was a Confederate soldier and was wounded in the battle of Perryville, Ky. He was married to Miss Callie Malone, on Dec. 11, 1868; and died July 20, 1914. Brother Woods was a character of rare combinations. He was a man with keen interest for the material prosperity of his country; a successful, active business man, and yet in the midst of every experience he seemed to be conscious of the spirit world and the life beyond.
His spiritual fervor was not abated because of his material interests.
He was a brave soldier, a loyal citizen, a faithful friend and a devoted husband and father. His presence will be missed for many years, his influence for good will grow and multiply forever.

Brother Gardner was born on Dec.
1, 1853, near Red Banks. He professed religion in the year 1873; and he was a faithful steward in the
M. E. Church, South, for 17 years.
He was married on May 25, 1904 to Miss Ida Yarbrough; and died Aug.
5, 1914. Brother Gardner was a character of sterling worth. He not only showed this by a reputation for the same among the citizens of the surrounding country, but he proved it most nobly by the spirit of manly fortitude and courage which he maintained throughout nearly four years of the most intense and incessant suffering. From first to last he was always a man. The prayers and sympathy of the entire community arise in behalf of his faithful sisters, his devoted and well-beloved wife and bright-eyed children.

IN MEMORIAM.

(A resolution adopted by the Sunday School of the Central M. E.
Church, South, of Meridian, Miss., in session Sunday morning, August 30, 1914.)

"The Lord hath given and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

"God removes his workmen, but carries on his work."

As a Sunday school this beautiful Sabbath morning, we mourn because of the absence of our beloved co-worker, brother and friend, Charley McQueen, whom God in his wisdom has called up higher from us and the walks of men. Brother Charley will answer roll call in Heaven this morning, to work and mingle with loved ones gone on before. He worked faithfully for his Lord's Kingdom and was our efficient secretary and treasurer for over forty years. He loved his Lord and showed his faith by his works, and he has gone to meet his Savior face to face. Therefore be it resolved by the officers, teachers and scholars of the Sunday school of the Central Methodist Church:

1. That we will strive to follow his zealous devotion to duty and his righteous living before men.

2. That we commend his life as an example to our young men and boys and trust that all of them will emulate his good works and deeds.

3. That we tender his family our loving sympathy and prayers, and bid them to live as their loved one lived, that some sweet day they, with us, may meet him around the throne of God.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be given to his family, that a copy be sent to each of the daily papers and to our Church organs for publication.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

(Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of Scooba, Miss.)

Whereas it was the will of our heavenly Father to call from us our friend and most earnest co-worker, Mrs. W. T. Barnes, whose life was a benediction to all who knew her, we,
the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, wish to express our love and appreciation of the Christian character and faithful work of our beloved member, whom we miss and of whom we feel the need. She had a vigorous mind, and was capable of good service which was gladly given.

She has entered the fairer, brighter, better world where many she has helped to save will greet her joyfully.
How sweet the rest, after faithful, loving service; how great the reward with the angels in Jesus, now that the work is well done, the victory gained! Therefore be it resolved:

1. That as a Society we feel that she was one of a rare sweetness of soul, unselfish and helpful, who, has been transferred to a sphere of higher usefulness. Let the imperishable treasure of her character and works be an encouragement to us to follow her beautiful example.

2. That while we miss her from our councils, miss her sweet smile and her words of wisdom and peace, this Society will cherish her memory and strive to emulate her example.

3. That while we deeply sympathize with the husband, the loving children and brother now so he-reaved, we share with them the hope of a reunion in the better world, where there are no more partings and where bliss ineffable forbids all tears.

4. That we request the publication of these resolutions in the Kemper Herald Star, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, that they also be spread upon the minute book of our Society and a copy of them sent to the bereaved.

Signed: Mrs. J. E. J. Ferguson,
Mrs. R. W. Hare, Mrs. B. K. Redditt,
Committee.

Tidings From the Field

Corinth, Miss.

Our revival meeting at South Side, Corinth, was held, July 4-13. The preaching was done in a very able manner by Rev. L. W. Cain, of Leland, Miss. The meeting was a great success, and I feel that the Lord gave us a real victory. Our people say it was one of the best, if not the best, meeting in the history of the Church at South Side. Sixteen were added to the Church. Brother Cain did some very faithful work and we feel that the Lord blessed his efforts. He greatly endeared himself to the people, and they regretted to see the meeting close. We feel very grateful for what the Lord has done for us this year, and all during our life.—Thos. H. Mills, P. C.

Oak Ridge, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: Hallelujah! Thanksgiving and praise fill my whole heart and soul. Brother Dan Kelley came to us here a week ago yesterday, and closed last night what was perhaps the greatest revival in the history of the Oak Ridge Church. God was with us from the first and, oh, how he did bless us! For four years I have felt the need of the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit in my own life, but it seems that I needed Brother Kelly's preaching to show me my lack of the entire consecration necessary to secure this. But glory to his holy name, I have his conscious indwelling to-day. I am ready for service or sacrifice. "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through Jesus our Lord." .....One hundred and fifty conversions and reclamations and 40 accessions mark the visible results of the meeting, to say nothing of the family affairs established and the people who made renewed consecrations of themselves to the service of God. I'll tell you, Brother Meek, it was good to be here.....We are getting on splendidly over here, painting and improving our church property and building up in every way. We have received 43 members on profession of faith, 22 by certificate and have baptized 20 children during the year; and we have two more revivals to hold yet. Pray for us.—Hugh K. McKee.

Byhalla, Miss.

A protracted meeting of 9 days' duration closed here last night with glorious results. From the very beginning of the meeting, the Spirit of the Lord was in the house and continued there until the last night, with the result that the services culminated in the greatest, the most wonderful revival we have had in 25 or 30 years. Ninety-three persons joined the Church. The Bishop and his cabinet did a great thing for Byhalla in appointing Brother L. A. McKeown pastor here. When he began to visit and preach, a spiritual uplift was manifest, and as, from time to time, he preached heart-searching sermons, the interest grew, the climax being reached on Sunday night. Brother McKeown did all the preaching and the singing was conducted by Prof. I. N. Price, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Brother Price is not only a good leader in the song services, but is also a devout Christian. He assumed control of the choir and in a short while had the congregation at his command. His singing stirred the souls and brought gladness to the hearts of the listening congregation. To have such a leader of the music as Brother Price in a meeting is a source of great inspiration. Such singing as his helps one to a higher plane of Christian experience. The business men, of their own accord, suspended work for the morning service each day. The ladies organized a 4 o'clock prayer meeting and, rain or shine, each afternoon at the appointed time they were found in the church supplicating the throne of grace for the conviction and conversion of sinners during the meeting, and the result shows that their prayers were answered. May the Lord bless them. On Sunday at 3 p. m. there was a meeting for young men that proved to be an inspiration to the old men present as well. At the close of a splendid talk by the pastor a large number came forward and pledged themselves to organized work for the Master and for the moral and spiritual uplift of the people of the town. Brother McKeown left for Iuka Springs this morning, where he will join his wife, and spend a few weeks in a much needed vacation.—Marcus D. Herring. Aug. 31, 1914.

SOME GREAT REVIVALS.

Dear Brother Meek: On the fourth Sunday in June I began a meeting with Rev. J. H. Ingram, at Schlater, Miss., and continued nine days. We had a splendid revival and a nice class of additions. The pastor is a fine man, and is popular with his excellent people.

On the second Sunday in July, I began with Rev. W. D. McCullough at Ruleville. We had a great meeting, most of which was conducted under the district tent erected in the main business portion of the town. That most successful presiding elder, Rev. Ben P. Jaco, preached the opening sermon, it being the occasion of his third quarterly meeting for that charge. I think Jaco is one of the best presiding elders in Southern Methodism. We continued the services for eleven days. There were many additions to the Methodist and Baptist Churches. Ruleville has a class of people equal to the best in the State, and our Church there will soon take its place among the first charges of North Mississippi. Brother McCullough is one of the best informed pastors it has been my pleasure to assist. He is a fine preacher and able to fill any of our best appointments.

On the fourth Sunday in July I met my engagement with Rev. M. O. Beckham at Palestine, on the Houston circuit, where the meeting resulted in a great revival. There were 100 or more conversions and scores of additions to the Churches. My sister, Miss Amanda Bass, presided at the organ. The assessment this year at Palestine was only $150. The stewards now say they will pay $500 next year. This shows what a revival properly conducted means to a church financially. Brother Beckham is a promising young preacher. Next, I went to the help of Rev. Thos. E. Yancy, at Tremont, where we had at least 100 conversions and reclamations. Yancy is doing faithful work in that country among a good people.

My last meeting was with Rev. John Ritchey, at Bethlehem, on the Winona circuit. We had a great meeting in many respects and a nice class of additions. Brother Ritchey's people love him and say that he is a fine preacher.

On the first Sunday in September I will begin a meeting with Brother Spears at Cayce, Ky. I possibly could arrange dates with pastors for one or two more meetings during the fall.—W. D. Bass. Corinth, Miss.

A PROGRAM FOR THE COMING SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY.

The next important event before our schools is Rally Day, and the writer suggests that a whole week be given to this occasion, closing out, say on the first Sunday in October. A program evolved by Sunday school workers, published by Smith & Lamar, and entitled "A Sunday School Revival," outlines a program about as follows:

1. On the last Sunday in September—Missionary Sunday—have in the Sunday school a Home Mission program on the privilege and duty of bringing others to the Sunday school and into the Christian life, having the same theme discussed in the classes, and before adjournment, appoint a Rally Week membership committee to direct a house-to-house campaign and to solicit and enroll new scholars; add to this committee representatives from the Woman's Missionary Society, the Epworth Leagues, and the Church Conference and see that everybody has a chance to join during the week. Let the pastor at the eleven o'clock service preach on "The cultural and spiritual value of reverent and habitual Bible study as made possible in the modern Sunday school"—or some other suitable theme.

2. On Sunday night have the Sunday school superintendent or the Teacher-training leader give to the congregation a report on the status of the teaching force as to the present adequacy, the means used for increasing the efficiency of present teachers, and the plans for the future supply, and have an address or sermon by a local or invited speaker on "The Sunday school teacher, his character, his equipment, his work, his reward."

3. On Monday night have an experience meeting as to the part the Sunday school had in the conversion of the Christians present, with a test from the audience as to what per cent of the church members present came through the Sunday school, and an address on "Soul saving and character development: the opportunity and test of Sunday school efficiency."

4. On Tuesday night have the secretary report as to the present enrollment and organization of the Sunday school, with a statement from the superintendent as to its present greatest needs, and have an address on "The Sunday school organized, graded, classified, and managed according to modern standards." (See our Standard of Efficiency.)

5. On Wednesday night have reports from the Intermediate, Senior and Adult classes as to their enrollment, their organization, their social, and their spiritual and benevolent work, and have an address on "Enlisting, organizing, and teaching men and boys in the Sunday school."

6. On Thursday night have a report from the Beginners, the Primary, and the Junior classes as to their enrollment, methods of organizing, teaching and promotion in these classes, the home co-operation needed in lesson preparation and regularity of attendance, and have the children of this department render a brief program as a demonstration of what they are being taught, and have an address on "The strength of the Church of tomorrow determined by the children enrolled and the quality of teaching done in the Sunday school of to-day."

7. On Friday night have a report from the Missionary Committee as to the programs rendered and other forms of instruction given during the year, missionary service done by the school, and the schools prospective contributions of workers for the mission field and for the ministry; and have an address on "Missionary obligation, opportunity, and methods in Sunday school work." (See our "New Missionary policy for Sunday schools.")

8. On Saturday night have reports from the Home and Cradle Roll departments as to enrollment, programs rendered and work done for these members, and the gain to the Sunday school from these departments; and have an address on "The home helping the Sunday school and the Sunday school helping the home."

9. On the last Sunday—regular Rally Day—at the regular Sunday school session re-grade, re-classify and re-equip the school, and at the proper time promote and reward pupils, and have a Sunday school "love feast" in hear-to-heart talks from the officers, teachers, and pupils, and follow at 11 o'clock with a sermon from the pastor on "The Sunday school an opportunity for enlisting and training for the kingdom of God," followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

10. On Sunday night have a Sunday school experience meeting as to how I was enlisted in the Sunday school, what the school has meant to me, and what I now propose to do for the school; and install the officers and teachers for the year, following this with an address on "Fidelity and efficiency in Sunday school officers and teachers."

At the close of each of these services have the rally week membership committee report as to the number of people seen during the day and enroll and welcome all new scholars, putting them in charge of the teachers in whose departments they belong, and a workers' conference should follow the dismissal of each service.

As this is a "Sunday School Revival," let it be planned as thoroughly, prayed over as fervently, and worked as vigorously, as the regular church revival; but at the same time make much of special music, using outside, as well home musicians, and have the school furnish some special feature, recitations, etc., at each service. If practical have specialists make the addresses, but if they can't be secured, use the pastor and local workers, giving them ample time to prepare. See that the auditorium is tastefully decorated, and make much of mottoes suitable to the several programs, and at once write the Sunday school supply department of the Publishing House for Rally Day helps.

P. O. LOWREY.

"IS IT RIGHT?"

By Rev. Hilary Westbrook.

In some communities we have what is known as independent camp meetings, run by what is called the "Holiness Association," outside of the Church; yes, separate and distinct from the Church which our Savior sanctified, and put his seal upon. They say that the Church isn't giving to us the full, pure, and unadulterated gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. I want to say that this is untrue. Listen, under God and high heaven, what does the Church militant stand for? It stands for holiness and purity—yes, a sanctified life. Well, then, if she stands for this higher and better life of complete surrender to Almighty God, shall we, as members, who at her altars assumed the vows thereof and solemnly promised to love and stand by her with our prayers and means, boycott the Church and our pastors and run off after other organizations outside of the Church? Can we do this and still claim to be loyal to her? I say no, we cannot.

Suppose that Mr. A. a prominent member of our Church were to whip his wife, and then put her away without a cause, and run off with some other woman, what would you say ought to be done with him? Oh, brother stop and think! Is it right, to pay fifty cents to those independent camp meetings and then come back home, and pay twenty-five cents into the treasury of the Church at home and boast of our loyalty to the Church? Think it over, my brother. Oh, if we were to line up as a mighty solid phalanx against sin in our churches, and pray, cry, and entreat as we do in these meetings that are held aloof from the Church, our pastors would preach with greater power and freedom, and our churches would begin to blossom as the rose.

Some folks get the idea into their heads that when they get out of the circle of God's will and into the center of his will—that is when they enter into the experience of "perfect love"—they are to hold themselves aloof from the Church in a measure; but that isn't true, for the Church needs us then more than ever. We are not saved from the Church, but we are saved to the Church. Don't you get the idea that I am against the camp meetings, for I am not. Some of the best work that is being accomplished, and that has been accomplished, is accomplished in and around the altars at our camp meetings. But I want to say emphatically that I am opposed to these independent camps, and my reason is that it has a tendency to pull the people from the Church, and not to the Church.

Brethren, the Church is of God, and to her I intend to be loyal and true as long as I live; as for those who will not have anything to do with her, I think that we should reciprocate and have nothing at all to do with them.

"I love thy Church, O God:
Her walls before thee stand,
Dear as the apple of thine eye,
And graven on thy hand."

MARRIED.

At Alexandria, at the Rapides Hotel, on August 30, 1914, by Rev. Francis R. Power of Shreveport, Mr. W. A. ODOM and Miss FAY COFFER.

GUEYDAN AND ABBEVILLE, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: This is my third year on this charge. I suppose this is considered a difficult work and in some respect it is. The most objectionable feature of it to me is, that the Northern Methodists have a church in Gueydan, which results in disagreeable competition. I think a little more agitation by our papers of this question of the Northern Church invading the South, would do good. For example, it would doubtless be helpful to publish the resolutions on page 638 of The History of Methodism, by McTyeire. Some people are misinformed as to the conditions attending the separation of the two Methodisms. I can hardly believe that the great Northern Church intends to deliberately violate its agreement.

But I started to write about my work—a great many preachers do not stick to their subject, though. We have had two good meetings. One at Gueydan, which resulted in 27 accessions to the Church and the other at Abbeville where 22 united with our Church and one joined the Baptist Church. Brother H. N. Brown helped me at Gueydan and Rev. Paul M. Brown assisted me at Abbeville. There are some very faithful people on this work, and I think that Abbeville is now showing quite a bit of interest in the church work—perhaps more than usual.—J. D. Nesom, P. C. Gueydan, La., Sept. 4, 1914.

No stroke of honest work for God, but must some day tell.—Archbishop Davidson.

Dear Brethren: The Lord is graciously blessing us in the glorious work of his great Church. Let us show our gratitude by doing our utmost for a record-breaking report at the Fourth Quarterly Conference. Let the pastors and the officials carefully note the questions to be answered at this conference and be prepared. We have already had several hundred accessions this year: shall we not work and pray for at least one thousand by Conference? Our District headed the list on benevolent collections last year, having paid 93 per cent of the assessment: let us make it 100 per cent this year.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bed-ridden with rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-sought-for means of curing your rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Will suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

ADDITIONAL DATA FOR THE HISTORY OF THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

In collecting facts for the history of the missionary societies of the North Mississippi Conference, Mrs. Campbell found the early history of the Foreign Missionary Society rather obscure, so she wrote a number of letters to the older women who were in the work at that time, for correct data. Below is an extract from a letter from Mrs. Hargrove, which reached us after Mrs. Campbell's article had gone to press:

"Bayview, Mich., Aug. 23, 1914.

"Dear Mrs. Campbell: Your letter, after following me around, at last reached me here, where I am endeavoring to receive invigoration and strength for my work next session. "As my memory serves me now, there were two presidents of the North Mississippi Conference Foreign Missionary Society prior to Mrs. C. N. Terry—Mrs. T. C. Billups and Mrs. J. D. Bush, both of Columbus, Miss.; but neither one served for any length of time and I think there could hardly have been any annual meetings, as we afterwards had them, under their administration. So I really think that the Conference Minutes of 1887 were the first that were printed. I am glad to learn of the gathering of this early data, and I am sorry that your letter was delayed in reaching me. My deepest interest and best wishes will always be given to the missionary work of the women of North Mississippi, for tender memories are entwined with it which will never die. That God may bless and aid our noble women of North Mississippi, is my prayer. Sincerely your co-laborer for our Lord, MARY L. HARGROVE."

AMONG OUR DEACONESSSES AND MISSIONARIES.

Because of developments at the New Wesley House of Montgomery, Miss. Maybelle Marshall has been retained there, and Miss Berta Thomas is located at Louisville, Ky. Miss Helen Burr has resigned from the Avondale Wesley House, Birmingham, Ala., for family reasons, and she is substituted by Miss Edith Brittingham. Miss Sadie Davis, who has worked for us at Vashiti, and Virginia K. Johnson for so many years, spent the past year in study at Scarritt and now comes back to us for work at the Wesley House at Orangeburg, S. C.

Several missionaries are coming home this fall for rest and refreshment. Miss Hallie Buie, from the Lucy Cunningham School, Wonsan, Korea; Miss Laura Edwards, of Choru Chun, Korea; Misses Emma Christine and Helen Johnston, from Ribeirao Preto, Brazil, and Miss Henderson from Bello Horizonte, Brazil.

FROM THE NATCHITOCHES AUXILIARY.

The Woman's Missionary Society at Natchitoches enjoys the rather unique distinction of having been united from its birth. Happily, we have never had two departments, but have been one since the beginning. Whatever we have contributed in dues and pledges, has been divided equally between the claimants at home and in foreign fields, and so when we see announced in The Voice that this shall be so after 1914, we have no change to make. On the contrary, the whole of the big organization is coming to our way of doing!

The only drawback to our rejoicing over this is that it shows conclusively how young we are and how little we have gotten out of the great struggle for union. Nevertheless, although we are only four or five years old, we, too, have had our difficulties. As a missionary society we are children, but for many years the women of the Church here have borne the burden: first, as an "aid" society, one of those misnomers in the church, for, as old residents recall this society and its work, aid was rather a feeble word. It collected the pastor's salary; it built and furnished the parsonage; it ran the Sunday school, and supplied all the help the pastor received either temporal or spiritual. In fact, it did gladly and generously all those innumerable good works that faithful women have ever been rich in. And so it had a long and honorable career, as any of the former pastors here will readily testify, but there was a note of selfishness in all its life. It refused to become a missionary society, because it had so much need at home for all of its money. Finally, it dawned on a few that there was a larger life and work, and through their influence, this hazy "aid" merged into the woman's missionary society, knowing no distinction between the home and foreign departments. Has any local work suffered? On the contrary, last year, besides meeting our obligations as an auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference, we paid $720 for the windows in our new church, and the year previous, we paid a $600 debt on our parsonage. Now we wish every aid society could realize how it helps the work at home to enlarge the point of view.

Our auxiliary now numbers 42 members. We have had a few more than this, most of whom were lost by removal. We lead a rather strenuous life, as some auxiliaries would think, for we meet four times a month, every Saturday afternoon. Our work is divided as follows: the first meeting is for business; the second, we give to the program from The Voice; at the third, we have our mission study class; and the fourth is a social, at which we have a pleasant reunion, bringing sewing, etc. For the meeting last named we are divided into twelve groups, so that the social is in the hands of a few just once during the year.

During this year we have tried the circle plan for collecting our finances, and it is working admirably. We are trying to work to the ideal of every member giving fifteen cents a week to cover all our expenses. So far only a few of our number do that, but many are paying ten, while some few wish to cling to the old way of paying their dues, and giving what they choose to other claims. Gradually the Church is learning that to succeed, its finances must be directed as sensibly as those of the business world.

However, the chief value of this work of our women has not been touched upon, and that is the great effect upon the individual lives of the women themselves. In their study of this great movement in our Church, their minds have been broadened, their hearts quickened, and their souls enriched. One cannot do this work without feeling and knowing this great fact of life: our common brotherhood, and our need of the great Father. Through this work we have come to know each other better, to have greater sympathy for each other, and in this way we have come closer to Him, who is the inspiration of all our work. We wish that the women all over the Church might realize what a great privilege it is to be a working member of a working auxiliary.

L. C. McVOY,
President Natchitoches Auxiliary.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER CURRIE.

Dear Brother Meek: I recently closed a great meeting near Piedmont, S. C., where the old-time power fell upon the people and souls were converted to God. I am now working in the mountains of Tennessee. I am a guest in a Methodist home, the head of which is 84 years of age. He says that 60 years ago the Methodists used to have great meetings where sometimes there would be over 100 at the altar crying out to God for help. This old brother has the old-time power of the Lord. Last night we had a great time in our meeting. May the Lord bless the preached Word. Pray for us. W. T. CURRIE.

A WORD ABOUT SONGS.

I have been waiting for some one to speak out about the songs called new songs that we find published in the numerous cheap song books; but as I have seen little concerning them and nothing on the subject that I am so anxious to see discussed I am just going to say a few words, and if I am wrong I would be glad for some one to correct me.

I like to sing. Singing will keep the Tempter away, ward off the "blues," and will keep one happy and encouraged. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto Thy name, O most High." But there are many songs called "new songs" that are music to the ears, but have nothing for the soul, that I do not like to sing; and they are taking the place of the old soul-stirring hymns. Especially is this true in the country churches; and many of these books are not published by our Publishing House, but come to us from singing teachers who bring their books and sell them at a reduction. Not long ago I said something about the song books used in the Sunday school, and a brother remarked, "They are all right for Sunday school." Well, if they are not all right for public worship, they are not good for Sunday school; for we want the children trained for Church work, and singing is a part of it. And besides this I see several songs in these books that are erroneous as to Scriptural doctrine; but the music is fascinating, and we take the music for a good song and go on. Some of them make very good "two step" and "tango" music. I cannot appreciate the song, "My Savior First of All." Some of the words read, "I shall know him, by the prints of the nails in his hands." The Christian sentiment is "I know him," not "Shall know him." "I know whom I have believed," said Paul. And it was Thomas who was going to know him by the nail prints. I believe I will know him when I get home; but it will not be because I will see the nail prints, but it will be because I know him now. And when Jesus came in the midst of the disciples and Thomas was there, he did not wait to thrust his hand into the Savior's side, but said, "My Lord and my God." And why did Thomas know him? Because Thomas had known him before.

Another song that is very popular is the "Church in the Wildwood." It has beautiful music, and brings sweet memories of the days of our childhood when mother would take us to the little country church for divine worship; but it is not a religious song. The church of my childhood was not a "brown" church, was not in the "wildwood," nor was it in the "vale." And besides this, there is not a word in this song about God and salvation. Songs that are published for divine worship or used for Sunday school ought to be Scriptural, religious songs of Jesus and his love, for the Church is an empty shell without God.

I might mention other songs, but I think that this is enough for every one to know what I am talking about. I will now say what kind of book that I think is the best cheap book for any Methodist Church or Sunday school. It is "The Methodist Hymnal." If you cannot afford to buy enough of the note edition—so many of our people say they cannot sing without notes—get "The Little Hymn Book." Who can make them any cheaper? $12.50 per hundred? Teach the people to sing songs that will be songs as long as they live, and as long as the Church stands.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

The writer has just returned from LaSalle Parish, and found great improvement there since his visit a year ago. A Teacher-training class was organized at Good Pine a year ago and is now about ready to graduate. This was of the older people, meeting during the week, and was taught by Mrs. Rawlins. Since then a Teen Age class has been organized in the Sunday school, meeting at the regular hour, and is being taught by one of the members of the class. Brother A. O. McIntyre is an excellent superintendent. The musical feature of the school is the best I have ever seen.

On a recent Sunday afternoon, Brother W. D. Kleinschmidt, the pastor at Jena, delivered an excellent address on "The needs of the Sunday schools." The school at Jena is improving both as to numbers and interest. It includes a Home Department and Cradle Roll, though there is no Teacher-training class. Children's Day has been observed. The report shows 12 teachers and about 160 to 170 regular attendants.

Brother J. J. Kelly, of Trout, is a first-class, all round, efficient Sunday school pastor. He states that his school is an excellent one and that they have nothing to be ashamed of. It includes a Teacher-training Class.

The Maxie Sunday school, in Arcadia Parish, twelve miles from Crowley, observed Children's Day on August 23. There was a very unique and interesting program and a large attendance. The offering amounted to $7.04.

Oakdale now has a nice little church and is going to put in the Graded Course of Lessons, early in October.

The Sunday school at Sulphur, La. is taking on new life and the workers are among the most energetic to be found anywhere.

It is stated that the Felicity Street M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, is carrying out the Missionary Policy, and the Missionary Committee presents to the school on the first Sunday in each month missionary instruction, which usually comes in the closing exercises.

It is reported that Teacher-training work is taking on new life in Lake Charles.

Rev. H. W. May, of the Alexandria District, reports greater enthusiasm and a much larger Sunday school attendance than was ever before known in his district. He intends on the next round to take specially prepared blanks along and record all the special features of each school to be preserved and published in the Advocate.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of Kentwood, has submitted an excellent program for an eight days' institute on Sunday school work in his charge. It takes in all departments of the work and is one of the best yet seen. One or two other schools are already planning to do the same.

The writer will visit a few schools in Grant and Winn Parishes next week and the week after.

Visitors' Day is being observed in some of the schools and has proven a great success.

The greatest hope we have for improvement in our Sunday school now arises from the fact that the young people are taking hold, and are among the hardest workers we have. We will soon have a generation of efficient young workers, and if it is true that 95 per cent of our pastors and workers come from the Sunday school, it will not be long before we will have even presiding elders who are trained experts in the work.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick

On one of our circuits, in Mr. R. A. Tucker's fine district and under Rev. W. R. William's pastorate, four well-trained Sunday schools every year hold an interesting rally. Mt. Pleasant, New Salem, Marshall Institute and Union are the participating schools and what a crowd of fine folks they are! D. L. Lumpkin, Mrs. West, Mrs. King and Mr. W. W. Stamp formed the excellent program committee, and all the plans and details were most cleverly arranged.

The speakers were met at Collierville, Tenn., and carried swiftly out to New Salem Church. An awning was stretched in front of the church and a large, enthusiastic audience greeted them. The music was exceptionally good, the drills and recitations of the Sunday school pupils indicated skilled preparation, and the dinner was not only lavish in its plentifulness, but toothsome prepared. The real interest of the day centered in the contest for a banner awarded annually to the school whose pupils answer most nearly correctly the 50 Bible questions selected from the Uniform Lessons beginning with April 1. It was a genuine delight to hear those bright boys and girls, young people and adults as well, answer the questions. New Salem won the banner, having answered one question more than the other contesting schools. Hon. T. B. King presented this coveted trophy and already the schools are arranging to compete for it again. Union won in last year's competition.

This is a very interesting settlement. The grandfathers of many of these people lived and worked together, and the unbroken friendships, the desire that the children should be continuously better trained in the character-making virtues, the love for Bible Study and the wholeness of good living, all appeal forcefully to the one who casts his lot with them but for a day.

Mr. W. W. Stamps even had the New York-Memphis Special stop at Collierville that the Mississippi Secretary might reach home that night.

A TRIBUTE.

Sister Shipman slipped away to heaven on the night of August 11. She was at the piano singing with Smylie, their oldest boy, when she was stricken with apoplexy and lived only a few minutes. Her remains were taken to Meridian and laid away beside her father, the Rev. Mr. Smylie. Sister Shipman was Miss Lily Smylie, a sister of Rev. J. J. Smylie, who is so well known throughout the country.

When a girl she consecrated her life to the service of God, and was greatly used of him in revival work. She was gifted in prayer and, though she did not profess to be a preacher, she could hold a service of any kind.

About 21 years ago she married Rev. W. S. Shipman, and their union was blessed with five children, one of whom died in infancy. While the children were small she could not take such an active part in church work, but during those years she continued faithful, doing all in her power to make this old world better.

Sister Shipman was a strong Christian character; she was firm, but patient, with the children and their obedience was beautiful. She was a great source of strength to her husband and there was not a sweeter home anywhere. She was indeed queen of the home and was loved and appreciated by all. As a pastor's wife, she helped to look after the flock, and was ever ready to comfort and cheer those who needed help. For 19 years the writer had been closely associated with her, enjoying her fellowship, and with the passing years our friendship grew all the stronger.

She had never enjoyed good health, but was a constant sufferer. We cannot understand why one so useful should be snatched away in the prime of life; she was so much needed by her family and the Church. But we

FROM MOSCOW, MISS.

When I came to this work in June to care for it in the absence of the pastor, I found it well prepared for the revival meetings. No work was ever prepared better by house-to-house visiting. While his wife was lingering and battling against disease at the home of one of her daughters, Brother C. H. Ellis was fighting for the kingdom in this field till he was called imperatively to her bedside, where he remained until heaven was made to rejoice at the coming of a great soul. In the absence of Brother Ellis, I held the Shiloh meeting, which has been reported, and from that I went into the Mellen meeting. Here we had only three accessions, but the Church was greatly blessed of God; many within the Church were reclaimed and made promises of living for God, and old standing family heartaches were healed and some reconciliations made. . . . Our next meeting was at Hopewell, where we had Brother G. S. Harmon to do the preaching, and it is useless to say that it was well done. Under the clear gospel preaching of this good man our people were wonderfully moved toward God and heaven, though we had only three additions here. . . . At Big Oak we were again without ministerial aid, as the pastor had not reached us. We could only go to God and ask for victory. Conditions were not good when the fight was begun, but we asked God to give us results and when we closed Friday afternoon the altar conversions had reached twenty-nine, with seven accessions by baptism, two family altars started and one infant baptized. The Lord still answers prayer. . . . Now that the pastor is back on the field we expect greater things at the next two places. Brethren, pray for us and especially for the pastor here who is lonely without his long-time companion.—John W. Chisholm.

CONCERNING WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

We believe Whitworth College is entering upon a new era in her work and influence as a Christian college owned by the M. E. Church, South. The deed to the property is clear and in fee simple to certain individuals as trustees of the M. E. Church, South, and their successors in office. When we call to mind what Dr. H. F. Johnson did in the building line back in the Reconstruction days of our State, and then realize that no material improvements of much value were made for a period of twenty odd years, it does not appear to me that our Church, as represented by the Mississippi Conference has shown the interest in this institution or responsibility for its development that ought to have been manifested.

During the past twelve years Rev. I. W. Cooper, D.D. has been president of the college, and he has put his money, brains, and heart into the work. Just how long ago he began to dream of better things for Whitworth College I do not know. But as a result of his dreams and earnest efforts to make those dreams real, we have now one of the most beautiful and commodious auditoriums in our State, and a $17,000 Dormitory and Administration Building will be ready for use by the first of October. None of our girls need go elsewhere looking for better material comforts and conveniences than we can give here.

But I believe what has been done during the past three years is only the beginning of better things for the college. We must erect an "Industrial Home" to cost not less than $15,000 just as quickly as we can raise funds enough, so that the poor girl may reduce her board to a minimum; and then we must provide scholarships and endowment enough to provide free tuition for these girls who are willing to work for an education. We also need a separate building for the Music Department.

For, if the friends and patrons of Whitworth College are contented for the building work to stop at this stage, they will find that it will result in its failure in a large measure to reach the girls who most need the help and sympathy of the Church.

What has been done thus far was an absolute necessity, and should have been undertaken first, for as our Conference has been content to place the whole responsibility of administration, of financing, and of equipping for work upon one man, provision must be made to take care of the girl who is able to pay all her expenses else bankruptcy is inevitable. But why should not our Conference rally to this College now and make it a really great Methodist College for our girls? We can do it if we will, and I believe that we will.

I have presented our plans with some degree of clearness to two churches, which gave us in cash and notes $1000 each, namely, Sumrall and McComb, Miss. What these have done, I believe others will do and even more.

I hope that my work here as teacher of Bible and History will not cease until we have given every church within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference an opportunity to help in building the needed "Industrial Home" and in providing free tuition for the girl who is willing to work. This latter can be done through scholarships and an endowment. Yours in earnest,

L. E. ALFORD.

P. S.—The session will open on Sept. 24.

THE TONGUE.

By E. B. Partin, M. D.

The tongue, as described by the Apostle James in Chapter 3 of his Epistle, is an unruly member, and is capable of doing great harm in the world, when wrongly used. "For every kind of beasts and of birds and of serpents and of things in the sea is tamed and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil full of deadly poison" (Jas. III: 7, 8). Nothing but the grace of God and a liberal supply of common sense can control the tongue, and make it the great blessing in the world which it ought to be.

A story is told of a certain nobleman who invited some friends to dine with him and instructed his servant to have the best dinner for them that could be prepared. When they were seated around the table, behold there was nothing but tongue! So he said to his servant, "If this is the best dinner you can prepare for my guests, I want you to-morrow to give them the worst meal you can prepare." So, again, when they were seated around the table, behold there was nothing but tongue! On being asked to explain himself, the servant said: "Master, I did this to illustrate, how that the tongue, when rightly used is the best thing in the world; but when wrongly used, it is the worst thing in the world."

The wise man said, "A man hath joy by the answer of his mouth: and a word spoken in due season, and how good is it" (Prov. XV, 23); "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver" (Prov. XXV, 11). Paul said, "I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue, (that is, words that do no good.)" It is better to be silent, than to speak words that do harm and injure the cause of Christ and his Church. Our daily prayer should be that of the Psalmist: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

Christianity can never produce pessimism. Those who have an abiding faith in Jesus Christ are able to see visions of victory where others see only failure and disaster. All true courage and all genuine optimism are the outgrowth of Christianity and the development of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men.—Christian Observer.

OBEDIENCE THE CONDITION OF SPIRITUAL LIFE AND GROWTH.

Are you growing in grace—becoming more Christlike, as the days and years go by? Such is God's plan for you and if you are not, you are not fulfilling his divine will. As St. Peter says, the Heavenly Father "bath given us all things pertaining to life and godliness," and if we do not make use of them to transform our lives and perfect our characters, the fault is our own. The secret of a steady and beautiful growth is abiding in Christ, and the Master has told us that the only way to abide in him is to keep his commandments.

Obedience is the great key-word in the Christian life. By it we enter into it, continue in it, and advance along the shining way to a home in the skies. Without it, all knowledge of the Scriptures amounts to nothing, all professions of piety are but pretense, and every attempt at spiritual conquest is misdirected and futile. The suggestive peroration of our Lord's wonderful Sermon on the Mount needs to be thundered and re-thundered in our ears until our dull perception fully grasps its tremendous significance:

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and DOETH THEM, I will liken him to a wise man who built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine and DOETH THEM NOT, shall be likened unto a foolish man who built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it."

LET EVERY CHURCH DO ITS BEST.

It is manifest that the work of this Conference year will in our patronizing territory have to be wound up under adverse conditions. The European war has made cotton, which is our chief staple crop, a drug on the market, and if it can be sold at all it will be at a very low price. This necessarily means, unless the great war shall quickly end, that there is ahead of us a time of unusual financial stringency; and unfortunately the causes maintained by the Church are generally among the very first to feel the effect of such a period of business depression. Our pastors and people will, therefore, need to begin at once and do their utmost to take care of the important interests committed to their hands. Unless they do so, we fear that the reports at the Annual Conferences will show a great falling off in our finances and that our work, both at home and abroad, will be seriously hindered.

We should keep in mind the fact that at such a time as this the Church needs money more urgently than when things are in a normal condition. Indeed, the present situation ought to appeal strongly to our people and move them to a larger liberality, and even to the making of sacrifices to maintain the Master's work, if necessary. Ours is still of all the lands on earth the most highly favored. What are our financial troubles compared to the conditions now existing in nearly all the other leading nations of the world? Surely, we have much for which to be grateful, and, by every token, our gratitude should find a more substantial form of expression than that of mere words. Let no church member, if he can possibly avoid it, think of reducing his contribution to the maintenance of the Church, and let all who can, increase the amounts that they usually give. This is an hour in the world's history that is "big with destiny"—a time when our Lord has a right to expect every true follower to exert the full measure of his ability for the furtherance of his cause and kingdom.

BISHOP KILGO'S PERTINENT QUESTIONS.

Rev. W. A. Swift in reporting for the Central Methodist Advocate (Lexington, Ky.) the proceedings of the Kentucky Conference, held at Wilmore, a few days since, among other things, says:

"In the midst of reports of presiding elders and preachers, Bishop Kilgo asked a number of questions like these: 'Are your people religious? Do you have dancers in the choir? Are your stewards godly men? Do you have conversions?' While asking and commenting upon these questions, there was the stillness of death pervading the audience. Bishop Kilgo makes no uncertain sound when speaking of these things. We do not remember ever before to have heard a Bishop make such strong statements concerning the matter of worldliness."

This is most encouraging. There is no doubt that worldliness prevails in many of our churches to an alarming extent and that discipline, even in its most kindly forms (which are the best and most effective), has largely ceased to be exercised. We scarcely need to say that, as a result, many of our congregations have lost their spiritual vitality and power. The truth is, the Methodist Church is squarely face to face with the issue as to whether she will continue to stand out against worldly amusements and questionable practices, or take down the barriers and let her members riot in them without any real protest. The dominance of the unspiritual element in the affairs of the Church is hurtful in the extreme; prominent position in the Church ought to be a guarantee, first of all, that the person filling it knows Christ and is possessed of genuine piety. To turn over any of our arms of service, every one of which is meant to contribute to the salvation of men and the spiritual upbuilding of Zion, to people whose daily lives are out of accord with Christian teaching and who cannot rightly use them, is a betrayal of the cause of Christ.

Bishop Kilgo is striking out on the right line. He is stressing the points that need to be emphasized, and his efforts in this direction are certain to be productive of much good. It is high time that we were learning anew the lesson that was taught Israel in the days of old—that a Gideon's band of faithful men is worth more in the mighty conflict with Satan and the powers of darkness than a vast army whose hearts are not with us.

"SKEPTICAL TEACHING IN COLLEGES."

Under the above caption, The Presbyterian of the South contained last week the following editorial utterance:

"Parents will do well to think twice before selecting the college to which they will send their sons. Some of the institutions which were once strongholds of orthodoxy have become infected with the current infidelity. Recently the Professor of Biblical Literature in Princeton University has published in the Biblical World an article in which he denies two of the fundamental teachings of the New Testament, viz.: the virgin birth of our Lord and his bodily resurrection. He says that Jesus was the son of Joseph. A gentleman of our acquaintance who was preparing to send his son to Princeton, immediately abandoned this plan and is making arrangements to send the boy to another institution. This example should be followed by all parents who believe in the deity of our Savior, and who do not wish to have their sons taught infidelity. The most important thing to ascertain about any institution is what it teaches about the fundamentals of the Christian faith. Princeton University has long been cherished as a Presbyterian stronghold. At its head have been men of international reputation, such as Dr. McCosh, Dr. F. L. Patton, and President Wilson. The new regime evidently contemplates alliance with 'liberalism,' which means scouting the authority of the Scriptures as a guide to faith and a record of historical truth."

The course of the Presbyterian brother mentioned above deserves hearty commendation. He is evidently not only loyal to his Church, but what is even more important, he is loyal to the Holy Scriptures and to his Lord. May his tribe increase!

It is a lamentable fact that quite a number of leading educational institutions have become hotbeds of heretical teaching—throttlers of the faith of our youth. The Devil knows quite well how to don a cap and gown and entice with the bait of so-called "modern scholarship." But orthodoxy is beginning to awake from the sleep into which it fell in fancied security, and soon the little skirmishing that is now going on between the assailants and defenders of the faith will grow into a real battle. Then error will be beaten ignominiously from the field and the truth will gloriously triumph.

THE MOTHER.

I hear the blaring bands go by; I hear the marching feet;
All day they drum their dreadful dirge along the dusty street.

I hear the crowds give cheer on cheer of fierce and furious joy,
And wonder if they see him there—my little, little boy;

A baby only yesterday, with soft and sunny hair,
So helpless and so innocent; so fragile, and so fair!

So strong I felt to shield him then, safe sheltered in my arm,

It seemed to me the whole wide world could never do him harm.

And oh, the long, long nights I watched beside his trundle bed

To fight away the pain that racked his little fevered head.

I fought his battles for him then; he leaves my side to-day

To fight far greater ones alone, and oh, so far away!

The little dimpled hand that lay so trustingly in mine

Must grasp a rifle barrel soon along the firing line.

My baby boy I held so close I felt his fluttering breath

Has left me empty-armed and gone to see the face of death;

And never mother's voice to soothe, nor mother's arm to shield

From all the direful perils of the smoke-hung battlefield!

A CHARGE TO YOUNG MINISTERS.

(Delivered to the class of incoming preachers at the recent session of the British Wesleyan Conference by ex-President Samuel F. Collier.)

The portions of Scripture upon which I wish to base my address to you are:

1 Cor. ix. 27: "But I buffet my body and bring it into bondage; lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected."

2 Tim. iv. 7: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the Righteous Judge, shall give to me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that have loved his appearing."

Cast away—rejected—not equal to the test—like coins that do not ring true; base, false, spurious. In other passages the same word is translated "reprobate." Moffat has translated it "disqualified," a word that fits well the reference in the context to the games. There is a striking contrast to be found in the phrase from the Revelation, "a faithful and true witness."

So we read the passage: "I take my body and buffet it, and lead it about as a slave, lest, having acted as a herald laying down rules of the game for others, I myself should be utterly rejected, disqualified, from any share in the victory."

The second passage was written by Paul at the close of life. It is his triumphant shout of victory. The contest in the games is still in the Apostle's mind. The two texts present two great issues: tragic failure or glorious triumph; castaway, rejected, on God's scrap heap, or crowned—seated on God's throne. Paul dreaded the one and resolved to win the other. That he finished so triumphantly was largely due to the fact that he saw the possibility of failure, feared it, and set about the remedy. The high ideal he set before him of his calling, his knowledge of the peculiar temptations and difficulties besetting his path, made him watch diligently and strive strenuously to make full proof of his ministry. Here we have the great Apostle, the founder of important Churches, who won mighty victories for the faith, who received marvelous revelations, the writer of letters for the guidance of the Churches in all ages, telling of his severe self-discipline lest he should be rejected. Brethren, where the Apostle Paul saw reason for such vigilance, anxiety, dread, surely we must take heed to ourselves with even greater diligence, discipline, and prayer. The best way to take heed will be to follow Paul's example.

A High Ideal of the Ministry.

Keep before you that

(1) The Apostle had a high ideal of the ministry.

The figures used by St. Paul give us some conception of what he thought of his calling. Shepherd, ambassador, servant, builder of the Body of Christ, teacher of the Word, example to the people, steward of the mysteries of God.

For this great work the Apostle believed he was "called of God." He constantly lays emphasis on the fact. When his Apostleship is impugned his reply is that he is "an Apostle, not from men, neither through men, but through Jesus Christ and God the Father, who raised him from the dead—or again—"the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus"; or again, "Even as we have been approved of God to be entrusted with the Gospel."

No man will fail to realize the great opportunity and glorious privilege of his ministry if he knows he is "called of God." To the question, "Why am I a minister?" make sure you can answer, "Because I am called of God." Keep that fact before you and you will have high ideals and holy purposes. Have a clear experience on this point and it will help you, strengthen you in days of opposition, struggle, hardship, depression, seeming failure—"called of God"—called to follow, to serve, to consecrate your whole life to his special work of the ministry. Glory in your call and never lose the wonder of it.

To Paul this call meant that he became the bond-servant of Jesus Christ, and therefore the servant of his people. He appropriated the word so favored by his Lord and Master, "I am among you as he that serveth." If you have Paul's conception of the ministry you will realize that you are called to serve. You will learn from the object-lesson in the upper room that any claim to superiority ought to be justified by service. The words of the Master will find an echo in your life. He came not to be ministered unto but to minister and give his life a ransom for many. "As the father hath sent me, so send I you." Service will be the law of your life. You will never read into that work the idea of degradation but always a privilege and a joy to serve, and you will be in the ministry not for what you can get but for what you can give to it.

The Call to Preach.

The Apostle's call was a call to preach: to tell out the glad tidings of the Gospel. He could define his gospel very simply: "Christ died for our sins, and rose again according to the Scriptures." He was a living witness with a message that he himself experienced. He could say, "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus our Lord." In his own words Paul tells of the purpose of his call, "To open their eyes that they may turn from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive remission of sins and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith in me." What a glorious gospel to preach anywhere and everywhere! What a lowering of the ministry, to preach your doubts, and your speculations, to try merely to entertain, or even inform, when the greatest of all themes, is ours! Brethren, have a fear lest you fall short of your high calling to preach Jesus Christ, lest you fail to exalt him, and lest the people perish while you fail to give the remedy. Dr. Samuel Johnson used to say that the people were tired of hearing the Apostles being tried for forgery every week, "and what they needed was the living Word."

In Paul's conception of the ministry was the idea of the Shepherd. Here again he had caught the Master's spirit and word: "I am the good Shepherd." "The good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." "I know my sheep." The pastoral conception of the ministry is a vital part of the New Testament ideal of the ministry. To be a good shepherd in the light of Christ's example will claim our best. To feed, to guide, to guard the flock involves great responsibility. It calls for sympathy, kindness, tenderness, patience, wisdom, love. How anxious Paul was to fulfill this ideal is shown in many a phrase: "I have you in my heart," "speak and be spent," and in the remembrance of the individual in his greetings. We shall lose the New Testament ideal of the ministry if we neglect the pastoral. We must love people, even more than we love to preach to them. We must approach our work through the pew rather than through the pulpit. We must understand the people, their temptations, sorrows, difficulties. Dr. Dale, late in life, lamented that he had taken more interest in problems than in people. Many a man has failed to fulfill his ministry by forgetting the individual in the crowd. Failure in "real effectiveness" has been written on many a man's ministry because he has not been a shepherd of the flock. The personal note in preaching and the personal contact in visitation are vital to an effective ministry.

Let us take another word that helps to explain Paul's ideal minister. "To be an example to them that believe in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity" (1 Tim. iv. 12); or again "giving no occasion of stumbling in anything, that our ministration be not blamed, but in everything commending ourselves as ministers of God in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses (of various kinds), in pureness, in knowledge, in long-suffering, in kindness, in the Holy Ghost, in love unfeigned, in the word of truth and in the power of God," &c. (2 Cor. vi. 2-4). "In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works" (Titus xi. 7).

A Closely Watched Life.

This is a great ideal, and yet Paul dared to say (Cor. xi. 1): "Be ye imitators of me, even as I also am of Christ." You ought to be able to say, imitate me as I imitate Christ. This is a matter of vital importance. "Called of God" to the ministry, all your work is vain unless you prove an example of godliness in all things. Your life will be challenged at every step. You will be watched keenly, not only by the world's malignant gaze, but even more closely by those to whom you preach. It may well make us tremble to think of the responsibility involved in being an example in all things of what we preach. The man in the street has his ideal of what your ministry and mine ought to be. The world outside, if you ask it for its standard for your life, will speak of a high one. So you must more than ever commend your ministry by your life. In our day official pretensions are swept aside, and the force of your appeal will depend upon your life.

We cannot take up all the figures used by Paul, but we must not forget the idea of stewardship—the ministers of Christ are the stewards of the mysteries of God. These great truths are a trust in their hands. Stewardship means responsibility. For the fulfillment of the high calling every man must give account, and the result will be that he will be rejected or crowned.

Brethren, it is no ordinary vocation which you have entered, and no ordinary standard is set before us. The test is searching. Paul's ideal must be ours. To keep before us this high standard, and to strive to make "full proof" of our ministry, will be one of the surest ways of avoiding disaster and assuring triumph. You entered, no doubt, with high ideals, great hopes, and high resolves. Already you have been able to test yourselves. Have you begun to lower your ideals? Have you been so disillusioned that faith is weakened and hope is dimmed? Are you beginning to think it inevitable that you must yield where you expected to conquer, and be content with a low standard of life and work? I hope not! Take your stand with Paul as "an ambassador of Christ," keep before you his ideal, and rely on his source of strength. "Our sufficiency is of God." R. L. Stevenson used to say that men could make failure splendid by courage so that it would not differ from success. There is no failure except that of ceasing to try.

(To be concluded next week.)

"MODERN BETRAYAL OF CHRIST MAKES STRIFE POSSIBLE."

(From the Times-Picayune, we take the following report (which is not in full) of a sermon delivered by Dr. S. H. Werlein, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, to his congregation on Sunday morning, Sept. 6).

We are now witnessing perhaps the most startling event which has occurred on this planet since the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. We are seeing almost every so-called Christian nation in martial array, intent on trying to exterminate each other. A fratricidal war world-wide is now being waged—a war in which there will be no surrender. The most astonishing feature of it all is that its leaders claim that what they do is done in the name of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace.

The prayer that is reputed to have been inspired by the Tsar of Russia, in which he supplicated that his sword might be sharper, the range of his guns longer, the heat of his fire hotter, the spirit of his men braver, the endurance of his soldiers greater than those of the enemy, is simply barbaric. The congratulatory telegrams said to have passed between the two Emperors (of Germany and Austria) who stand for imperialism in its most pronounced form indicates a most perverted view of God—the all Father. The whole world is now witnessing a war made possible by the kind of Christianity which has been in existence for many centuries. The countries which are involved in this titanic struggle for supremacy represent the people and the organized Christian bodies upon whom the conversion of the world has devolved. The land of John Wesley and John Knox, the land of Bossuet and Fenelon, the land of Luther and the land of Tolstoi—these are among the nations that are waging the greatest war the world has ever seen. These nations have for centuries called themselves Christian, and yet they have been armed to the teeth, living in constant distrust of each other, and ready at any time to spring at each other. They seem to have utterly ignored the divine injunction: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," "Bless them that curse you and do good to them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

Will be Punished.

The spirit of militancy has rioted within them through all their generations. Ready to resent an insult and defending war, they have been dominated by selfishness, ambition, greed and covetousness. "Be sure your sins will find you out" is as applicable to the nation as to the individual. They have betrayed their Lord, and made a caricature of the Christ's teaching. No possible conception of Jesus Christ or of his religion could be more at variance with his real nature and teaching than that which has influenced millions who claim to represent him. The passions, hatreds, vaulting ambition and brutal tendencies so apparent in Europe to-day are not confined alone to the peoples now at war. These are common in all other so-called Christian lands, and quite as much so in the United States as in united Europe. We in this country are no better morally than our brethren across the sea. We may congratulate ourselves that we are at peace with all other nations, but no one can foresee what may occur to cause us to go to war. It is well known that many condemned the policy pursued by our pacific President and Secretary of State with reference to Mexico. Our type of religion is very much like that which obtains in other so-called Christian countries.

We are quite as vain and ostentatious; quite as proud of our Church; quite as money-loving; quite as loose morally; quite as grasping after power; quite as self-conceited as other Christians in other lands. Our church organizations are just as unfraternal, exclusive, formal, unspiritual and as unconcerned for the conversion of the world as similar organizations in other lands. We are quite as much priest-ridden and just as much handicapped by oppressive ecclesiastical officialism as in lands of more imperialistic proclivities.

Progress Slow.

And yet these are the peoples and these the institutions that have been made the custodian of the oracles of God. Into hands like these the Word of life has come. Jesus Christ declared: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Almost two thousand years ago this prophecy was made by our Lord, and yet to-day we are forced to admit that there are more than two heathen to every professed Christian on this planet. Slow progress indeed has the conversion of the world made. At the present rate of speed eternity itself would not be long enough to bring the world to Christ.

Where lies the trouble? Is it in the inferiority of the Christian religion to other religions? Is it because there is no attractiveness in Jesus Christ? The trouble is that Christ has been betrayed. Christ, the real Christ, has not been preached to any large extent. We have lifted up a Christ before the world that has made it possible for the most terrible war of all history to be waged by his followers. While Christ is the Prince of Peace, the spirit of war has been allowed to exist in the hearts of believers. While Christ taught his disciples to love their enemies, to suppress resentment and to return good for evil, Christian people have been quick to resist an insult and give blow for blow. No matter what kind of a Christ we have preached, this is the kind of a Christianity we have practiced.

As a matter of fact, this kind of Christianity has fallen short of converting the world, and will continue to be abortive as long as time shall last. We have preached the Atonement more than a living, victorious and glorified Christ. We have preached a dead Christ rather than the Christ who is alive again and alive forevermore. We have preached a Christ of definitions, doctrines, shibboleths, more than as an example for the believer. We have preached an ecclesiastical Christ more than a Christ who emancipates people from their sins. We have preached an objective rather than a subjective Christ, a Christ who has done more for us than in us. A Christ not to be followed literally, but figuratively and theoretically. We have put a very liberal interpretation on the teachings of our Lord, and declared those who have endeavored to follow him literally to be fanatics and extremists. Undoubtedly such were the early Christians and Apostles, according to these liberal and broad-minded teachers.

Call to Christians.

This war is a call to Christians the world over to study the life and teachings of Jesus Christ; to see how they have been making a travesty of real Christianity; to confess how infinitely far short of the real Christ they have been living. This war is a cry to Christendom to come back to primitive apostolic Christianity. This war is a stern rebuke to the false interpretation of the Christian religion which has been given the world since the days of the Apostles. Before Constantine placed the sword and the State at the disposal of the Church, Christianity was triumphant. It was bringing the world to its knees. But when it took the sword, when it began to depend on imperial favor, when it looked encouragingly on the heaping up of riches, when it leaned on the favor of the world, it began to cease attracting all men to Christ.

Unless Christian people all over the world heed this stern lesson, and practice as well as preach the gospel of love, forgiveness, fraternity, and beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, their efforts to bring "the uttermost parts of the earth" to Christ will prove unavailing.

CONCERNING TEMPERANCE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Brother Drake's appeal for the Anti-Saloon League in the Advocate of Sept. 3 was timely and well written. "Our friends, the enemy," taking advantage of the war cloud for a screen, are getting busy. While it is impossible to get elections called in Ouachita and Rapides (wet) Parishes, it is as easy as "falling off a log," to get an election called in a dry parish. Recently in Jeff Davis Parish, the liquor men got the required number of signers to a petition, paid a $1000 for "cost and carriage," and have called an election for December 1.

I noticed in the same issue of the Advocate, what Dr. Haw, of St. Louis, quoted from the remarks of the Westerner, who said, "The Methodists are ruining this country by driving out the saloons." Louisiana is a part of "the country," but that remark does not apply to us, if "straws show which way the wind blows."

In the early part of the year, I began sending out printed resolutions, and petitions furnished by the National W. C. T. U. to all the State Presidents, for the use of churches and Christian organizations, and I have been sending them all the year, to missionary societies, and temperance unions, as well as to individuals. Strict account is kept at headquarters, of the number signed and returned, and the number reported quarterly, to the State President.

This is a sort of family secret, but candor compels me to say that in Louisiana nearly twice as many Baptists as Methodists have responded by signing and returning these petitions for National Constitutional Prohibition, and if Louisiana is being "ruined," it seems to be by the Baptists instead of the Methodists.

We are hurt and hindered far more by the indifference of our friends than by the opposition of our enemies. The latter stimulates us to action and makes us more determined, while the former acts like the proverbial "wet blanket."

The fact that there are "so many Catholics" and "foreigners" in our midst, does not furnish an excuse that will be accepted at the Judgment bar," for setting aside the warning:

"Let none hear you idly saying,
There is nothing I can do,
While the souls of men are dying,
And the MASTER calls for YOU."

FAITH TESTED.

A jeweler gives as one of the surest tests for diamonds, the "water test." He says: "An imitation diamond is never so brilliant as a genuine stone. If your eye is not experienced enough to detect the difference, a simple test is to place the stone under water. The imitation diamond is practically extinguished, while a genuine diamond sparkles even under water, and is distinctly visible. If you place a genuine stone beside an imitation one under water, the contrast will be apparent to the least experienced eye."

Many seem confident of their faith so long as they have no trials; but when the waters of sorrow overflow them, their faith loses all its brilliancy. It is then that the true servants of God, like Job, shine forth as genuine jewels of the King.—Homiletic Review.

Church News

Bishop David H. Moore will write the life of Bishop John M. Balden, having been requested to do so by the family of the deceased Bishop.

Dr. John M. Moore, Secretary of the Board of Missions of the M. E. Church, South, for the home field, preached the opening sermon for Hendrix College, at Conway, Ark., last Sunday.

The Methodist Times (London), because of the depressing financial condition prevailing in England as a result of the European war, has been reduced to an eight-page paper—one-half of its usual size.

The new President-designate of the British Wesleyan Conference is Dr. R. Waddy Moss, who is Professor of Systematic Theology in Didsbury College, at Manchester, and also the Principal of that institution.

Referring to Bishop Mouzon's presidency over the Montana Conference, the Pacific Methodist Advocate says: "He captured the brethren with his talks in opening the Conference sessions and his great preaching."

Bishop J. H. McCoy held a conference with all the Texas presiding elders in Dallas last week. These brethren were all entertained at the Waldorf Hotel, which is only two or three doors from the Methodist Publishing House.

The South Carolina Conference by August 15 had raised $43,000 on its $50,000 assessment for missions. The low price of cotton resulting from the great war will evidently not cause much of a missionary deficit in the Palmetto State. This is another illustration of the great advantage of early collections.

It is stated that Brown University (Baptist), at Providence, R. I., will hereafter require all students to attend daily devotional exercises at its chapel. This is a cheering note in this day when so many educational institutions are given to boasting of their breadth and liberalism. Brown is one of the great American schools that Andrew Carnegie has never been able to lay his polluting hand upon.

The Western Methodist says: "The review and analysis of the decision of the Tennessee Supreme Court made by Bishop Hoss, which was published in the August Bulletin of the General Board of Education, is of such importance as to command the careful attention of every Methodist minister and layman." So it is; and it is to be hoped that every pastor will read it carefully and pass it around among the leading members of his charge.

The late International Sunday School Convention, which met in Chicago, has stimulated the Moody Bible Institute of that city to provide a new course of study for Sunday school workers covering all phases of the work. It is open to all denominations alike and will take students from any foreign country provided they have a working knowledge of English. Persons interested would do well to write the Institute for full information.

Within the past four years Canadian Methodism has had a gain of 28,901, which is an increase of 8.4 per cent. It makes us somewhat sick at heart to think of this virile branch of Methodism merging with other Churches and losing its denominational identity. We were greatly pleased with the strong denominational note that rang through the address of Dr. Dinsdale T. Young, the President, at the recent session of the British Wesleyan Conference.

Dr. Melbourne P. Boynton estimates that there are 250,000 Protestant church members in Chicago and probably 250,000 more who have come from other places and have never identified themselves with any church in the great Illinois metropolis. This is indeed a distressing condition of affairs, but the same situation on a smaller scale prevails all over the country. How to stop this leakage when members move from one locality to another, is one of our modern church problems that deserve serious consideration.

A contemporary prints as a news item the following: "There are 70 students in the University of Chicago who expect to devote their lives to Christian missions. Thirty of these are now in the Divinity School." We should like to know what kind of a gospel these missionaries will give the heathen before we feel like rejoicing over this piece of information. The University of Chicago has enough heretics in its faculty to place an interrogation mark after every minister who studies theology there. Any sort of religion, even Mormonism, can send out missionaries.

THE PRESIDENT NAMES A DAY OF PRAYER.

On September 8, President Wilson issued to the people the following proclamation:

"Whereas, Great Nations of the world have taken up arms against one another, and war now draws millions of men into battle whom the counsel of statesmen has not been able to save from the terrible sacrifice; and,

"Whereas, in this, as in all things, it is our privilege and duty to seek counsel and succor of Almighty God, humbling ourselves before him, confessing our weakness and our lack of any wisdom equal to these things; and,

"Whereas, it is the especial wish and longing of the people of the United States in prayer and counsel and all friendliness, to serve the cause of peace; therefore

"I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do designate Sunday, the fourth day of October next, as a day of prayer and supplication, and do request all God-fearing persons to repair on that day to their places of worship, there to unite their petitions to Almighty God, that, overruling the counsels of men, setting straight the things they cannot govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict, in his mercy and goodness showing a way where men can see none, he may vouchsafe his children healing peace again and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship nor any wholesome fruit of toil or thought in the world; praying also to this end, that he forgive us our sins, our ignorance of his holy will, our wilfulness and many errors, and lead us in the paths of obedience to places of vision and to thoughts and counsels that purge and make wise.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the City of Washington, this Eighth Day of September, in the Year of Our Lord One Thousand, Nine Hundred and Fourteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth.

AN APPEAL TO METHODIST LADIES.

I notice that the Ladies' Home Journal, to which, doubtless, many Methodist ladies are subscribers, has announced that with the October number it will begin a series of articles of instruction in all the latest dances. I have no way of telling how many Methodist homes this magazine enters, but no doubt there are many. The probability, therefore, is that many daughters in Methodist families will read these articles on the modern dances and perchance be influenced thereby; so I am sounding this note of warning to Methodist mothers. Furthermore, I want to appeal to every Methodist lady who reads these words to write a note of protest to the editors of the Ladies' Home Journal. Do not put it off, but do it at once. DO IT NOW. Let all our pastors do the same thing.

RALLY DAY FOR MISSIONS—SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11.

To the Pastors and Stewards of the Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: In view of the disturbed financial conditions that now prevail as the result of the terrible war in Europe, and in view of the fact that last year our Conference fell far short on our missionary assessments, it is highly important that strenuous efforts be made during the next two months by every pastor and official board to raise every dollar of our missionary assessments. In a recent appeal to the Church, Dr. W. W. Pinson, our General Secretary, rightly says: "The assessment is the base line of missionary support. It is the only fund that can be depended on to take care of the regular work of the Board of Missions. The specials do not appeal to the whole Church. Only about one church in twenty carries a special, and not one member in a hundred. Hence the assessment alone measures the interest of the rank and file."

It is a startling fact that for about twenty years the assessment on the whole Church for both home and foreign missions has averaged less than twenty-five cents per capita. While the assessments have been increased from time to time, our membership has also largely increased; and hence one advance has kept pace with the other. Notwithstanding the fact that the assessment made by our General Board represents the minimum needed to carry on the work already enterprised, our great Church has for some time been paying only eighty-seven per cent of the total assessment levied. Sad to say, our Conference, which now reports 57,367 members, last year fell short $2,605 on an assessment of $12,160 for Foreign Missions. The deficit on Home and Conference Missions was $3649 on an assessment of $13,200. Such a shortage is indeed deplorable, and ought to cause us one and all to bestir ourselves with renewed diligence for full collections for 1914. To be content with such a big deficit in this hour of marvelous opportunity would be shameful indeed.

Our people are amply able to pay every dollar assessed. It is not a question of poverty, of hard times. It is a question of willingness, and of intelligent interest in the Lord's work. The nations of Europe are not sparing either blood or treasure in the terrific struggle now going on. If the cause of Christ is really dear to us, ought we not also to manifest something of the heroic in our gifts and efforts for the extension of the Master's kingdom? If we are to reach the goal of full collections this year, we must seek to enlist the aid of every member; we must inform our people more fully concerning the great needs and opportunities in the mission field; and lastly, we must not fail to pray earnestly that God may put it into the hearts of the people of every circuit and station and mission to unite in doing their whole duty to the Church and to the Master's cause.

In order to secure concert of action, your Conference Board of Missions has deemed it advisable to name the second Sunday in October, namely, October 11, as "Rally Day for Missions." Let the slogan be: "Full collections on every assessment." Special envelopes for the offering on that day (or any other day that suits), may be had free of cost from our missionary headquarters at Nashville. While some charges no doubt have raised their missionary assessments, it is highly desirable that they also observe Rally Day, and that the collection be counted and reported as a surplus; for some weak charges are sure to fall short.

Brethren, let us labor and pray that this may be the best year in missionary offerings and effort in the history of our Conference. "We can do it if we will." Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK,
Conference Missionary Sec'y.

TO LOUISIANA METHODISTS.

I beg the attention of all our people to this brief statement:

Your Orphanage now has 94 destitute, homeless children under its care. Seventy-three of these children are attending school. It is necessary to employ six workers to care for them. Clothes must be provided, school supplies are to be bought, they must be properly fed with groceries at war-time prices. This SPELLS MONEY! Our expenses are not exorbitant or extravagant, but they are necessary! We have less than $50 in the treasury! Our children are making heroic efforts. They are maintaining a high standard of excellence in their school work and deportment. They are worthy of your loyal support! Unless you help us NOW, and help QUICK, these children must suffer. I appeal to you for immediate help.

We desire to announce that SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, is "WORK DAY," for the Orphanage, and that the Sunday following will be "Harvest Day." We ask that all Methodists give us the proceeds of one day's labor for the Orphanage, and that collections be taken in all our churches and Sunday schools for this cause. A strong, concerted effort will bring relief, and prove a God-send. Indifference and unconcern will cripple and hinder our great work. Communications and literature will be sent to our preachers and Sunday schools for distribution. We ask for your help and your prayers.

Fifty-seven papers in Great Britain devoted to trades and sports have suspended publication as a result of the great war.

An amendment to the State Constitution proposing to increase the Governor's salary from $5000 to $7500 is pending before the people of Louisiana.

There are in the United States 600 colleges, universities, and other higher institutions authorized to confer academic degrees, with a total income of more than $100,000,000.

The prohibition daily paper which is soon to be started at the National Capital has been assured 100,000 subscribers and funds amounting to $200,000 to maintain it until it gets under way.

Dr. W. L. Dudley, formerly Dean of the Vanderbilt Medical Department, died on a train near Chicago a few days since, being en route to his home in Nashville from Canada. He was about 55 years of age.

Vice President Marshall has recently given out a statement in which he declared that the Hon. Woodrow Wilson will be the only candidate for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1916.

The Daughters of the American Revolution have announced that they will co-operate with the Red Cross Society in seeking to furnish relief to the wounded and suffering in the war-stricken countries of Europe.

Nevada, which for many years has been the paradise of persons seeking divorces, now has a law forbidding the right of divorce proceedings in the courts to all who have not resided in the State for at least twelve months.

Planks favoring state-wide prohibition have been incorporated in the platforms of the Republican, Democratic and Progressive parties in the State of Idaho. The Republican platform also carries an endorsement of national prohibition.

Mr. N. A. Mott, Secretary of the People's Rule League in Mississippi, has hooked Senator R. L. Owen, of Oklahoma, for two speeches in that State before the fall election in advocacy of the initiative and referendum amendment to the State Constitution.

It is estimated that in the operations of the Churches the average cost of converting a person is $1000, while the average cost of killing a man in war is from $20,000 to $25,000. In this respect, as in all others, the ways of peace have the advantage of the ways of violence.

There have been only six deaths from the bubonic plague in New Orleans, and of these three cases were not discovered until after the patients were dead, and the other three who died were either aged patients or persons with weak constitutions. The success of the physicians here in treating this disease has been truly remarkable. The work of stamping out this malady seems to be progressing quite satisfactorily.

A committee representing a number of railroads called on President Wilson on September 9 and requested him to issue an appeal to the people of the country urging them to take a more sympathetic attitude toward the railroad companies. Whether the President will do so, he did not state. We are inclined to think that much of the prejudice existing against these great public carriers is due to the treatment accorded the people by their employees.

Russia, France, and Great Britain have entered into an agreement that no one of them shall make peace in the present European conflict without the consent of the other two. It is generally thought that this pact will tend toward the prolongation of the awful war now raging. Through Ambassador Page, the British Government last week notified the Washington authorities that the question of mediation will not be considered until Germany is decisively defeated.

Ex-President Roosevelt spent Monday and Tuesday, September 7 and 8, in Louisiana in the interest of the Progressive party of this State. On Monday evening he addressed an overflowing audience at the French Opera House in New Orleans, delivering a speech that was roundly cheered. Tuesday was devoted to a trip through the Third Congressional District where the Progressives are making a spirited contest to elect a Congressman. The ex-President was everywhere enthusiastically received and possibly Judge Martin may be sent to the National House of Representatives, but we think that there is very little prospect at present of the State of Louisiana forsaking the Democratic party.

The cotton situation in the Southern States is growing steadily more acute. The several meetings that have been held to devise ways and means for keeping a part of the crop off the market and reducing the acreage in 1915, do not seem to have accomplished any results of consequence. In many towns there is no market at all for the fleecy staple and everywhere the prices at present offered are considerably below the cost of production. Meanwhile, meat, corn, flour, and sugar—articles that Southern farmers are given to buying—are advancing in price. In view of all this, it looks as if there are days of great financial stringency ahead of the people of this section unless the European war shall soon come to a close. Still, even under present conditions, we are better off and have more to be grateful for than other people in the world.

Taking advantage of the present situation, Turkey has notified all the great Powers of the world that foreign subjects within her bounds will no longer be permitted to enjoy what are known as extra-territorial rights, through which they have been tried for any alleged offense by their own judges, consuls, or diplomatic representatives. She has also announced that hereafter she will impose custom duties and tax foreigners as she may think proper. This means, in other words, that she proposes to exercise unhampered all the autonomy and privileges claimed by the foremost nations of the globe. Upon the rights revoked has rested the legal status of Christian missionaries in Turkey, by which they have been permitted to maintain churches, hospitals, and schools in unrestricted religious freedom. It is stated that the Powers will not accept the Turkish edict concerning these matters.

A LA GRIPPE LETTER.

Dear Dr. Meek: In last week's Advocate you informed the public that I was ill of la grippe at Brookhaven. I have had, and still have, la grippe, but not altogether at Brookhaven. It began in Franklin County and I have been carrying it around with me at a lively pace for the last three weeks, as I have run over six counties.

I never stop work for such little afflictions as "carbuucles" and the "grip." If I should do such a foolish thing as that I would never cover my territory. No man should ever be appointed presiding elder except such as can and will work, sick or well.

I voted on August 18 and left on the first train for Mount Olive, on the Liberty Circuit going thence to White's, on the Woodville Circuit. On that trip it rained almost or quite every day. "Dinner-on-the-grounds" meetings on both of these occasions brought great exposure, and I preached two new sermons.

I am uncertain as to the cause of taking the "grippe"—whether it was losing in every vote I cast (even tick eradication), exposure to bad weather, or preaching two new sermons—I cannot tell. Hardin says it was preaching the new sermons. He ought to know, as he is a presiding elder. He was sick a few weeks ago and knows what disagrees with the "beloveds."

I am drenching myself with Wampole's Extract of Cod Liver Oil. My wife is very uneasy. It has seventeen per cent of alcohol. She is afraid that I may contract the habit of strong drink, and not be able to quit. Doctor, did you ever know a man to be—well, a drunkard from drinking cod liver oil? If you think there is any danger, I will quit right now.

I am closing my ninth year as District Superintendent. In all these years I have been present and presided over every quarterly conference but two—only one of these was from sickness. Of the 78 pastors serving in my three districts not one has died, nor has the wife of any one died. Only two children in all these parsonage homes have been claimed by death. The Lord has been good to me and mine. All praise to him!

Your friend,

T. W. ADAMS.

A WEEK IN THE COUNTRY.

I left home on August 28 for Baton Rouge, near which place I was announced to help Rev. S. D. Howard, of Baker, in a revival meeting which began that night. The ride over the L. R. and N. road to "Red Stick" was a very pleasant one. At one station on the way I was greeted by Rev. A.

W. Hoffpauir, pastor of the Port Vincent charge, who reported the wet weather to be interfering with his work. At Baton Rouge I had a street conversation with Dr. F. N. Parker, who has been spending the summer with relatives in the Capital City. Later I conversed with W. W. Drake, our pastor there, and learned that his work is prospering, and that he will soon be joined by Rev. Thurston B. Price in a revival meeting. It will be remembered that Brother Price held a successful meeting in Baton Rouge two years ago. Later, I called up Rev. H. W. Bowman, the capable presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, but I was informed that he was down town in the hands of an oculist.

While in Baton Rouge, I was entertained at the home of Dr. Cushman, who is the coroner of Baton Rouge Parish, and an active member of our Church there. In his home I had the pleasure of meeting his uncle, Dr. M. R. Cushman, one of South Louisiana's staunchest Methodists, formerly of Abbeville, but recently of Prairieville.

Brother C. D. Bogan, a relative of our Rev. S. S. Bogan, came after me during the afternoon and took me ten miles in the country to his home, and there in a house in the midst of many acres of land, his farm, I spent a week. Was it quiet there? My work in McDonoghville is in the midst of screaming and puffing engines, honking automobiles and hawking peddlers, and there I lived for a week without hearing so much as a single toot, save on a tin horn. I enjoyed it. I fairly reveled in the restful surroundings and listened to the rhythmic sounds that nature alone produced.

But I did not go into the Blackwater settlement to revel. I went there to preach, if any one came to listen. They came. Poor old New Orleans! I must not make the comparison. We church folk down here pretend to go to church, at Blackwater the people come for eight miles around and fill the building and then drive their buggies up to the windows and sit and listen. With such a spirit of church-going, no wonder their sons grow up and become preachers. Blackwater is the place from which S. S. Bogan came, as also did H. N. and R. M. Brown, and S. D. Craig and—oh, I've forgotten the names of the rest of them, but it is just a short distance away to where J. W. Tucker, Ollie Tucker, J. D. Nesom, W. J. Newsom, and others came from. But I am not calling the Louisiana Conference roll; I'm trying to tell about a revival meeting.

Brother Howard was at the church when I arrived, with perspiration on his brow, a fan in his hand, the taste of black coffee in his mouth, religion in his heart, and "amen" on his tongue. I do not think he materially changed during the whole meeting. S. D. Howard is a brother, and with his amens to back one up, the preacher that doesn't preach just has no "preach" in him. There are good people around Blackwater. I might mention the names of Bogan, Morgan, Smith, Dear, Hawsey, White, and then, because I didn't have printed the whole roll of church members, I would slight every name I left off. They are good people, country people, and they know what religion is and when a sermon is religious. I remember a remark made by Bishop Candler last year about preaching to country people. He said that one might preach almost anything to some folks in the city, but unless there was some meat in his sermons the country people wouldn't stand for it.

I can preach better when some have to stand up for the want of seats. I feel then that I am not the only man in the house standing up for righteousness' sake. The big crowds kept up at every service, in spite of rain and mud. We had a good meeting, a large number of conversions, and 17 accessions to the Church. I left Brother Bogan's place at 5 o'clock Saturday morning, September 5, and drove to Baton Rouge. As I climbed aboard the train I met Rev. W. W. Perry, who was on his way to Slidell to help in a meeting, and who, together with Brother T. D. Lipscomb, completed the list of preachers that I met during my week's trip to the country. But there was one other preacher that I met on the lips of dozens of people. You see, Blackwater is just about ten miles from Deerford Church, another point on the Baker charge, where Brother C. A. Battle held a meeting just two weeks before I went to Blackwater. A large number of the Deerford people came to hear and enjoy the services at Blackwater, and I think they all came up and shook hands—the Deerford people all shake hands—and mentioned Brother Battle. One man said: "Now, Brother Gearheard, I'm not trained in Church politics, but the way I look at it, Battle has the quality of voice, the proper dignity of appearance, and big enough sermons to be a Bishop, and I'm in favor of giving him the job if there's any way of doing it."

THE GERMAN BATTLE HYMN.

A great deal is being said these days in the papers and magazines about the Germans and their battle hymn, Die Wacht am Rhein. One periodical compares its effect to a rapier, keen and cutting, and another goes so far as to say, "das Schrecklichste oder Schrecken ist das Singen"—the most terrible of all is the singing. It may be of interest, therefore, to the readers of the Advocate to know just what this most terrible battle hymn is. The following is a more or less close translation:

Die Wacht am Rhein: The Guard at the Rhein.

A startled cry the silence broke
As trumpet blare or thunder bolt:
"The Rhein, the Rhein, the German Rhein,
"Where shall we a defender find?"
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

Through hundreds, thousands, ran the cry,
A hundred thousand flashing eyes;
Embattled Germans, line by line,
"Will keep the Rhein's dear waters thine."
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

With eyes uplifted to the skies,
With thoughts upon their long-gone sires,
They swear with strength and fire divine:
"Thou shalt be naught but German Rhein."
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

"And if in death our hearts lie chilled
"The German Rhein thou shalt be still;
"For Teuton heroes are by far
"More numerous than thy waters are."
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

"As long as breath of life remains,
"And markman's eye a rifle aims,
"As long as man to man can stand,
"No foeman's foot shall tread thy strand."
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

They swear their oath. On glides the tide,
And banners flutter far and wide:
"The Rhein, the Rhein, the German Rhein,
"In one and all defenders find."
"Dear Fatherland, all fear resign,
"Stands staunch and true die Wacht am Rhein."

WHY THEY WENT TO WAR.

The British and German White Papers, giving the diplomatic correspondence that preceded the war, have been made public. From these it appears that the various nations involved went to war for the following reasons (accepting each nation's statement of its own case):

Austria. Because Serbia would not permit Austrian officials to take part in investigations in Serbia into the responsibility of Servians for the murder of the Austrian Crown Prince and Princess.

Servia. Because upon her refusal to accede to this demand of Austria on the ground that she would be sacrificing her own sovereignty, and in spite of her proposal to leave the matter to arbitration, Austria attacked her.

Russia. Because Austria was making war upon Servia.

Germany. Because Russia declined to cease mobilizing her army—a mobilization which Germany believed was directed at herself as well as at her ally, Austria.

France. Because her ally Russia was attacked by Germany.

Belgium. Because her neutral territory, whose neutrality was guaranteed by a treaty signed by Germany, was invaded by German arms.

England. Because Germany had violated the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium, of which both Germany and England were signers.

Japan. Because her treaty with England bound her to join with England when the peace of the Far East was threatened.

The impartial historian will some day know how to apportion the final responsibility for the Great War among the nations that entered it. We now merely report what each nation has to say for itself.—The New York Independent.

A TRIP TO TEXAS.

Having learned that change of work is recreation, I left home August 14, over the M. K. & T. System, with Blooming Grove, Texas as my objective, to which place I had been invited to conduct a revival. For more than three hundred miles our journey lay through Missouri. With such immense fields of wheat and corn, with spacious pastures covered with lowing herds, I wondered why food prices should be so exorbitant. In this vast Mississippi Basin the hungry warring nations of Europe may find bread enough and to spare. Sweeping across the border we entered the State of Kansas, one of the granaries of the West. This enterprising, wide-awake commonwealth has clearly demonstrated to the whole world that prohibition will prohibit, and that when the infamous liquor traffic is outlawed you will find empty jails and untenanted almshouses. At Parsons we waited two and a half hours for a Kansas City train, after which we steamed into Oklahoma. This country reminds one of the plane of Jordan, which tempted Lot, because it was even as the garden of the Lord. Added to its agricultural resources are extensive oil fields whose wealth no man can compute. Our route lay through Muskogee, the home of Bishop E. E. Hoss, who is a notable exception to the rule that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country. Not only the hosts of Southern Methodism, but Christian men and women all over the land admire and love him for his godly life and his unflinching devotion to every righteous cause. Mr. Williams, a Southern University man, has been nominated for Governor of this State.

Crossing Red River we entered the Lone Star State. Passing through Denison and Greenville, we reached Dallas, one of the great cities of the West. It would seem that the Titans had been laboring there—everything is laid out and filled in with such huge proportions. Methodism is well in the lead, which could hardly be otherwise with Dr. O. F. Sensabaugh for Presiding Elder of the Dallas District and his efficient preachers to work the field. At this place is published the Texas Christian Advocate, edited by Dr. George C. Rankin, that fearless champion of righteousness—one of the best loved and worst hated men in the State. The saloon men out there look upon him with about as much consternation as London and Paris regard the war Zeppelins of Kaiser William. When Dr. Rankin's air ship drops a few bombs into the liquor camp a panic ensues equal to the old-time stampede among Texas cattle. Dallas is the seat of our new Methodist University, west of the Mississippi River, which is destined to become a potent factor in the vital work of Christian education. At many other points splendid schools are located, notably the Southwestern University at Georgetown, the Lucy Kidd Key College at Sherman, and the Polytechnic College under the leadership of Dr. Boaz.

Leaving Dallas in the afternoon of August 15, my next stop was at Hillsboro. This is a typical Texas town. Dr. Morris is stationed at our leading church; Dr. Horace Bishop is in the presiding elder's saddle, and things are moving. On a branch road of the Cotton Belt twenty-six miles away, I reached Blooming Grove about 4 p. m. I was met by Rev. Gid. J. Bryan, the pastor, and some of his laymen, who soon placed me in a good room at the hotel. Extensive preparations for the meeting had been made by Brother Bryan and his people. The revival reached many hearts and many homes. The power of God was witnessed in the saving of sinners. Forty-two joined our Church during the meeting, which closed August 26. This is a delightful town and pleasant people; they have a beautiful new church, out of debt. Brother Bryan is in his first year at this church, and is doing a magnificent work. By the by, he is a son-in-law of Dr. Alonzo Monk, and Mrs. Monk was with us in the meeting. I left Blooming Grove on August 27, over the same branch of the Cotton Belt for Corsicana, which is a thriving town of ten or twelve thousand population. The presiding elder of this District is Rev. E. A. Smith, and Brother J. W. Ford is pastor of the First Church. Rev. Neal W. Turner of the Eleventh Avenue Church, and his little son, were drowned about a week ago, and the sad event has cast a gloom over the entire community. Boarding an inter-urban car, I returned to Dallas, fifty some odd miles away, dined at the Busch Hotel, and soon made my way to Fort Worth. A good part of the afternoon was spent with my life-long friend, Dr. John R. Nelson, presiding elder of the Fort Worth District. Dr. Nelson came from Alabama, but has long since taken on Texas ways, and stands among the leaders of our Church. We were taken for an extensive ride in the auto of Dr. J. A. Rice, who is closing his quadrennium at First Church there. Judging from visible signs, I infer that he has done a good work, and is worthy of another good appointment. It was my pleasure to meet Dr. C. R. Wright, the incumbent of Central Church. These men and their co-laborers are doing things on a large scale.

Bishop McCoy, who is to hold the Texas Conference this year is already popular out there, and his shadow will not grow less as he moves among the people, administering the affairs of the Church and preaching the Word of God. Having known him all my life, I predict a forward movement under his wise superintendence.

Bishop Key, serene and happy amid the infirmities of age, enjoys the love and esteem of his brethren in all ranks.

Great is Texas—great in extent, in resources, in men; and destined to be greater still, for the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns.

When Bishop Berkeley, in his poem on the prospect of planting arts and learning in America, said "Westward the course of empire takes its way," how little did he surmise that on these western shores would rise at length the cynosure, the guiding star of liberty, equality, and the brotherhood of man; that here the experiment of democratic institutions would outstrip the Republic of Plato and the fondest Utopian dreams of ancient sages; that Protestant Christianity would build here an impregnable stronghold and occupy a strategic base from which her militant forces might go forth to conquer and regenerate a resisting world.

Leaving Fort Worth on the evening of August 27, I reached St. Louis in twenty-four hours; finding all well, and plenty of work to do, as I am within a month of my Annual Conference.

St. Louis, Mo. THEODORE COPELAND.

HELP SOME ONE!

Did you ever stop and think,
How a word of love can cheer,
Just a smile or kindly look,
From one you love so dear.

Just a friendly clasp of hand
Will cheer a lonely heart;
How much pleasure we could bring,
If we'd only do our part.

Do all you can to help some one
Along life's weary mile,
If it's just a little loving deed,
Or just a little smile.

MOTHER'S COMFORT.

I know a little girlie,
With loving eyes so blue,
And lips just made for smiling,
And heart that's kind and true.

She wears no dainty dresses,
No jewels does she own;
But the greatest of all treasures
Is her little self alone.

Her name is "Mother's Comfort,"
For all the livelong day
Her busy little fingers
Help mother's cares away.

The sunshine loves to glisten
And hide in her soft hair,
And dimples chase each other
About her cheeks so fair.

Oh, this darling little girlie,
With the diamonds in her eyes,
Makes in mother's heart a sunshine
Better far than floods the skies!

But the name that suits her better,
And makes her glad eyes shine,
Is the name of "Mother's Comfort,"
This little treasure mine.

THE LITTLE LOAF.

Many years ago there was a great famine in Germany, and the poor people suffered from hunger. A rich man who loved children sent for twenty of them and said to them: "In this basket there is a loaf of bread for each of you. Take it and come back again every day till the famine is over. I will give you a loaf each day."

The children were very hungry. They even forgot to thank the man who had been kind to them. After a few minutes of quarreling and snatching for bread, every one ran away with his loaf except one little girl named Gretchen. She stood there alone at a little distance from the gentleman. Then, smiling, she took up the last loaf, the smallest of all, and thanked him with all her heart.

Next day the children came again, and they behaved as badly as ever. Gretchen, who would not push with the rest, received only a tiny loaf, scarcely half the size of the others. But when she came home and her mother began to cut the loaf, out dropped six shining coins of silver.

"O Gretchen," exclaimed her mother, "this must be a mistake. The money does not belong to us. Run as quickly as you can and take it back to the gentleman."

So Gretchen carried it back; but when she gave the gentleman her mother's message, he said: "No, no: it was not a mistake. I had the silver baked into the smallest loaf in order to reward you. Remember that the person who is contented to have a small loaf rather than quarrel for a larger one will find blessings that are better than money baked in bread."—Ella Lyman Cabot, in Ethics for Children.

A GIRL'S ASSETS AND LIABILITIES.

"I can row, play golf and tennis, fence, dance, skate," exclaimed Sarah Miggs, in a recent sketch by Miss Baylor; "I can dress extravagantly, I can play the piano and paint atrociously on china, I can speak French and German, I can ride and drive.

"I cannot dress myself. I do not even take care of my hands. I cannot cook a thing. I have no idea how to make coffee or fry eggs, nor how much of anything to give out for any meal. I cannot sew on the machine or with my fingers. I have no idea what servants ought to do, how they ought to do it, or how soon they ought to accomplish it. I cannot take care of children. I faint in a sick room."

Facing such assets and liabilities of a fashionable education, no wonder Sarah declared it something terrifying to become the head of a family on a moment's notice! Yet, sometime in her life, the sudden call to preside over the household of a husband, a son, or a brother comes to the majority of women. What will she do about it? Will she enter upon her duties boasting of the fact that the kitchen is an undiscovered country, and confident that instinct will overbalance her ignorance? Or will she, rather, like Sarah Miggs, acknowledge her deficiencies and rise to meet them?

Sarah made a grand novitiate. What might have been learned almost unconsciously under a careful mother's eye she sought in training classes and the homes of more practical friends. Roastology, bakology, marketology, pathology, nurseology became her study and her practice. It was no easy task, and one which her wealth made apparently unnecessary.

"I am not going to be a fraud as a wife," she insisted against all remonstrances. "I am going to keep my share of the contract. I am going to take charge of Dick and his house and his children just as if I were a lawyer taking a case, or a merchant setting up a store, or a captain taking command of a ship."

The whole tenor of her future proved that she was right. To row, to play golf, to dress charmingly, to be conversant with the whole gamut of accomplishments is commendable, but no young woman who has not in some degree mastered the intricacies of domestic science is qualified to become the queen of a home, and to arbitrate the destiny of a family.—Lucy Elliott Keeler.

AVOIDING A QUARREL.

An organ grinder, we are told, appeared one day on a city street, accompanied by the usual bright little monkey. A big dog appeared at the same time and seriously objected to the presence of the monkey. The dog broke away from the children with whom he had been playing and made a dash for the stranger, growling furiously.

To the surprise of everyone, the monkey did not seem in the least afraid. He stood perfectly still in evident curiosity, waiting for the dog to come up to him. This disconcerted the dog at once, for he would much prefer to chase something that would run, and not stand its ground.

As soon as the dog was close beside the monkey, the funny little scarlet-coated creature courteously doffed his cap. Instantly there was a laugh from all the bystanders. The dog was nonplussed. His head dropped, his tail dropped between his legs, he looked like a whipped cur and not at all like the fine dog he really was. He turned and ran back home and the laughing children could not persuade him to return. As for Jocko, he climbed upon his master's organ and went peacefully on his way.

Evidently, although only a monkey, he wanted no disagreement, and he knew instinctively that it took two to make a quarrel.—American Messenger.

HIDDEN SIN.

A boy walked into a house painter's shop one day and stood looking at the different colors. The painter had gone out for something, and the boy thought he would investigate a little.

On the floor stood a keg containing fifty pounds of thick white lead, and close beside it was a small one filled with Indian red all ready for the brush. In each was a wooden paddle for stirring up the paint. The boy took hold of the paddle in the smaller keg and held it up, watching the thin red stream which flowed from the end. Something startled him, and he turned quickly and let a single drop fall into the white lead. There it lay, one little spot in the white mass.

The boy was frightened and wanted to repair the mischief which he had done, but he went at it the wrong way. The red paint had not mixed with the white, for the white was too stiff. If he had taken a little stick or the point of his pocket knife he might easily have lifted it out, and there would have been no harm done. Instead, he tried to hide it by stirring it in. At first a little red streak followed the paddle round and round; soon it disappeared, but some of the lead was stained a very light pink. The boy stirred deeper and deeper, and at last he thought that the red streak was hidden, and it seemed to him that it was all clean and pure as ever. But the first thing the painter said when he came in and looked at it was: "That keg of white lead isn't very white. I wonder what's the matter with it?"

Some of us have tried to do the same thing with the spots in our characters that the boy did with the spot in the white paint. Instead of removing them, we seek to hide them. It's a very poor way. Root a sin out, and you are rid of it; leave it there, and, no matter how well it is covered up, the Master will find it, if no one else does.—The Evangel.

TWO FRIENDS.

"In-a-Minute" is a bad friend. He makes you put off what you ought to do at once, and so he gets you into a great deal of trouble.

"Right-Away" is a good friend. He helps you to do pleasantly and quickly what you are asked to do, and he never gets you into trouble.—New York Christian Advocate.

TO OUR FRIENDS.

The Advocate is feeling appreciably the influence of the present state of financial depression. Therefore, we ask our pastors and other friends to press its claims energetically during the next few weeks. The time when you can give the paper to your people for six months for 50 cents is rapidly passing. Why not take the matter up at once and send us a club of subscribers from your charge? It would help both the Conference organ and the work for you to do so. Let us hear from you, brethren.

SHALL WE APPOINT PROFESSORS TO VANDERBILT?

We are being frequently asked the question, if the men holding chairs in Vanderbilt University who are members of Annual Conferences will be re-appointed to their present positions by authority of the Church. Our invariable answer has been that we do not know what will be done, but that we have very positive convictions as to what ought to be done. We do not hesitate to say that we are firmly convinced that it would be a serious and hurtful mistake to make such assignments. All the preachers in our Conferences are expected to be appointed to do a work that is in harmony with the plans and purposes of the Church. Therefore, over every appointment outside of the regular order two safeguards have been placed: (1) there must be a request from an Annual Conference; (2) the judgment of the presiding Bishop must concur as to its wisdom. Either of these overseers may serve as a check upon the other. The Bishop cannot make such an assignment if the Conference disapproves; neither can the Conference override the will of the Bishop in the matter. On this latter point the law of the Church is perfectly clear. In McTyeire's Manual (1910 edition) on Page 26, Section 23, is contained the following explicit statement:

"The request of a Conference that a preacher be appointed to a seminary of learning or other work to which the Discipline permits the appointment of an itinerant preacher, does not put that appointment on a different ground from other appointments, and therefore does not render a compliance with the request obligatory upon the Bishop."

So much for the law in the case. Taking up now the question of the expediency of assigning preachers to teach in any department of Vanderbilt University, we affirm that the making of such appointments would be to some extent an endorsement of that institution. This is a fact so obvious that it does not need to be argued. Are our Conferences and Bishops ready to enter to this extent, or to any extent, for that matter, into co-operation with Vanderbilt University while it has in its possession Mr. Carnegie's $800,000 that was hung up as a glittering prize for a verdict against the Church when the late lawsuit was pending in court? In view of their former course concerning that scandalous transaction, we do not see how they can afford to do anything of the kind. It looks to us as if such action upon their part would be to involve themselves and the Church in a glaring inconsistency. And are we to forget the contradictory statements and unscrupulous methods employed by the Vanderbilt Board of Trust to wrest the University from us, and now place the Church in partnership with them in the work of teaching? May we be spared such a humiliation?

There is also another thing to be considered. As we stated in a recent issue of the Advocate, there is a persistent attempt being made, notwithstanding the action of the last General Conference and the fact that the Vanderbilt Board of Trust has declared that the Church no longer has any rights in the university, to run its Theological Department as a METHODIST SCHOOL. An effort is also being made through the public prints, by ingenious misrepresentations as to the cause of the recent litigation and by appeals to our Methodist people, to secure their patronage for the other departments of the institution and to carry our young people into an environment to be educated from which they are certain to emerge poisoned against the Church. The appointment of a professor from one of our Conferences to a chair in any department of Vanderbilt University would undoubtedly give impetus to these unwarranted and harmful movements. How then can any Annual Conference or any Bishop consent to become a party to it?

But it is said that we appoint men to teach in State colleges with which the Church has no connection; then why not to Vanderbilt? We answer, The conditions are quite different. Our people are part owners of these State institutions and pay their taxes to support them; they have interests there that it is quite proper we should look after. The State colleges are on friendly terms with the Church and do not exert an influence hostile to her welfare. It is to her advantage to co-operate with them in their work of instruction. They do not endeavor to operate as Methodist schools, in defiance of the expressed will of the Church, and have never suffered their students to dance the "Bishops' squirm" or to hilariously burn their bones in a public celebration. If any State institution had borne itself toward the Church as Vanderbilt University has done and was enveloped in such an atmosphere as it is to-day, we do not believe that we would be justified in appointing ministers to its professorships, and, furthermore, we do not believe that it would be done.

But suppose a Conference should ask the Bishop under whose presidency it is being held to appoint one of its members to Vanderbilt, would it not be arbitrary and high-handed for him to refuse to do so? By no means. He would be strictly within his rights. In fact, we think it would be his duty to refuse such a request unless he thought the appointment would be for the good of the Church. If his convictions were against it, as we see it, it would be a censurable weakness for him to subordinate his will to that of the Conference.

Though under the law of the Church each case of this kind that may arise must be handled by the Conference and Bishop having specific jurisdiction, it is a matter which in reality concerns the entire Connection, and it is to be regretted that the voice of the whole Church cannot be heard in settling it. For this reason, we think it would be well for brethren who may assemble in official gatherings anywhere in the Church between now and next January to express themselves on this question. Doubtless it would be helpful to all concerned to know what the sentiment is among our people generally. Apparently this is an issue that must soon be faced, and nothing is to be gained by passing it over until the last moment.

One thing more: We desire to say that in taking this stand in regard to this important matter we have been influenced only by the principles involved and what we have conceived to be our duty. We have nothing personal against any member of the Vanderbilt faculty. We would not alter our position to the least extent if the professors of the new Atlanta School of Theology were substituted in their stead. In determining a policy of such far-reaching significance, we have no right to know any man after the flesh; on the contrary, all should strive to weigh the issue impartially and in the fear of God. The one and only question that deserves to be considered is, What is best for the Church to which we belong, whose honor and sacred interests are in our keeping?

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

The European war continues to rage with unabated fury, but happily there has recently been no addition to the list of fighting nations. Various reports to the effect that Italy, Turkey, Greece, and some of the other Balkan States were about to plunge into the conflict have been in circulation, but thus far none of them have been fulfilled. The fighting during the past week has generally been favorable to the allies. Instead of besieging Paris, as was expected, the Germans have been repulsed by the French and British forces, and at this writing what seems to be reliable news states that the Kaiser's entire army in France has been forced back sixty or sixty-five miles. The Russian invasion of Germany appears to have been checked, but the Czar's troops have won notable victories over the Austrians and the people of that country are represented to be considerably terrorized. The Belgian soldiers are again becoming active and are menacing the line of communication of the east German army with the homeland.

On the whole, it may be said that the probability of Germany's defeat has become very much stronger than it was in the outset. Indeed, we can now see no hope for her to triumph in the end. Her only chance in the beginning, as we saw it, was to quickly overwhelm France, shut England off the continent, and deal with Russia later; but the possibility of doing this now seems to have passed irrevocably.

But will the war be a long or short one? That depends, in our judgment, upon whether it is to be fought to a complete finish. If it is, it will likely take the allied powers quite a while to crush the Germans and make their way to Berlin, since the latter are undoubtedly great fighters and their country is perhaps more strongly fortified than any other in the world. But we are hopeful that all the combatants will soon have enough of bloodshed and that terms of peace can be agreed upon without continuing the struggle until one or the other side is practically destroyed. Rumors that Emperor William is already in a frame of mind to listen to proposals of mediation were so generally afloat last week that President Wilson was said to have taken informal steps to learn the true state of his feeling.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate we are publishing the President's proclamation, naming Sunday, October 4, as a day of prayer for peace by the American people. We sincerely trust all our pastors and congregations will observe this occasion in the manner that our Chief Executive has indicated.

A GOOD ONE ON THE HIGHER CRITICS.

One of the most striking characteristics of skeptical scientists and theologians is that, while trying to eliminate the supernatural from the Christian religion and the Holy Scriptures, they exhibit a credulity that far surpasses that of any adherent of the orthodox faith. As an illustration of the gullibility of the "critics" and of what weight may be safely attached to their noisily paraded views, we take the following from the Bible Champion (New York)—a periodical which all our preachers and leading laymen ought to take and read:

"Let me tell you a story. There came out in Germany a book entitled 'Romans Disserted.' It purported to have been written by one Professor McPealsham. The name suggests a Germanized Scotchman. Critical analysis shows four well-marked divisions, or sources, from which the Bible book was compiled. In one, Christ is spoken of as Jesus Christ, which would give a J C document; in another as Christ Jesus, which would give the document C J; in another he is spoken of as God, but as this was subdivided for an alleged sufficient reason, there were yielded the documents G1 and G2. Thus there were derived G1, G2, J C and C J. The evidence was presented in minute detail, and the demonstration seemed complete—as perfect as that for any Pentateuchal analysis. The 'scholars' bit. The book was hailed with delight, and it was declared to mark a great step in the progress of higher criticism. In a second edition it was translated into English, and the facts came out. And who is Professor McPealsham? He is the late Professor Charles M. Mead of the Hartford (Conn.) Theological Seminary. He wrote the book as a take off, a joke, to show the absurdity, the groundlessness, of the claims of the higher criticism. It was a real sham. His achievement was a fine exhibition of what 'learned ingenuity and a lively imagination' can do."

MANSFIELD MAKES FINE BEGINNING.

President Bobbitt sends us the following brief message by wire: "We expect to have more students by the first of October than ever before in the history of the College. Another music teacher is needed. Our art display and equipment are most superior. We are thankful to God, and grateful for the help of our friends."

This news is indeed gratifying. Brother Bobbitt is a leader who brings things to pass. There are bright days ahead for this meritorious institution.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., went to Memphis, Tenn., last week on a visit to relatives and friends.

Writing on September 8, Rev. A. H. Williams, of Shannon, Miss., says: "I held a good out-of-town meeting last week. Fourteen members were added to the Church."

In the revival meeting now in progress at Pineville, La., Rev. J. F. Dring, the pastor, is being assisted by Rev. E. B. Roy. Considerable interest is being manifested in the services.

Rev. C. C. Miller, of Monroe, La., assisted Rev. L. C. Wilson in a series of revival services at Mer Rouge, La., last week. We are not informed as to the results of the labors of these brethren at this writing.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., is assisting Rev. J. H. Moore in a meeting at Magnolia, Miss., which began on Wednesday evening, Sept. 9.

Rev. J. W. Price is having quite a successful year at Benton, Miss. He will give us an account of what has been accomplished, above his own signature, next week.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey will begin a series of revival services at Mendenhall, Miss., on the fourth Sunday in September. He will be assisted by Rev. C. W. Crisler, of Hattiesburg.

Read Rev. R. W. Vaughan's statement concerning the needs of the Louisiana Orphanage which appears on another page. Surely our people will quickly respond to such an appeal.

The Magnolia (Miss.) Gazette of September 9 says: "Rev. N. E. Aiford has returned home after an absence of several months. He has been visiting his son, Rev. J. M. Aiford, of Columbia, La."

We make grateful acknowledgment to Rev. Robert E. Selby, of Sumrall, Miss., for several trial subscriptions to the Advocate. He reports that the work is progressing favorably in his present promising field.

Rev. R. H. Harper preached an interesting sermon at the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans last Sunday morning from Philippians 2:5. He was greeted by a good congregation who gave close attention to his message.

The Rev. Mr. Stasio of Chicago, formerly assistant editor of La Flacola, an Italian religious paper, has been appointed by Bishop Thirkield pastor of the Italian Methodist Episcopal Church at Esplanade and Chartres Streets, this city, and has entered upon his work.

Rev. R. O. McClure, who for the past two years has served acceptably the St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church of this city, has been transferred to Ohio. Dr. J. E. Scott, a foreign missionary, will minister to the congregation thus left without a pastor until one is secured.

The following brethren, to whom we have not made acknowledgment elsewhere, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions to the Advocate, forwarded within the past week: Rev. J. C. Ellis, Homewood, Miss., 5; Rev. W. H. Saunders, Fernwood, Miss., 3; Rev. J. Y. Bowman, Utica, Miss., 6.

Mr. Olin P. Ader, writing of the recent Junaluska Bible Conference in the North Carolina Christian Advocate, says: "Dr. H. M. Du Bose gave us two addresses that were royally rhetorical and profoundly well-prepared—one on 'The Superiority of the Hebrew Religion to Other Faiths,' and the other on 'The Consciousness of Jesus.'"

Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Wells, of Topisaw, Miss., have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in the great sorrow which has come to them in the loss of their little son, who was transplanted to the heavenly home on August 27, 1914. At such a time how sweet are the precious promises contained in the glorious Revelation that God has given us!

A dispatch from Utica, Miss., to the New Orleans Item, hearing date of September 10, says: "A protracted meeting of ten days' duration was closed at the Methodist Church here on Wednesday, the 9th inst. The pastor, Rev. J. Y. Bowman, was assisted by Rev. J. E. Williams, of Gloster, Miss. There were several accessions to the Church."

A joint quarterly conference, in which six pastoral charges in the Aberdeen District will participate, will be held at Houston, Miss., by the presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Bell, on Monday, Sept. 21. The visiting brethren will be guests of the Houston congregation, of which Rev. R. P. Neblett, who is winding up a successful quadrennium, is the energetic pastor.

The Texas Christian Advocate of Sept. 3 contained a trenchant and interesting article from the facile pen of Mr. J. D. Barbee, Jr., of Greenville, Miss., entitled "Biblical Vivisections." This alert layman has scant patience with the higher critics and sounds a warning against having them in our Methodist theological schools which is quite timely and impressive.

Dr. Dunbar Rowland, of Jackson, Miss., Superintendent of the Mississippi State Department of Archives and History, was an appreciated caller at the Advocate office last Saturday afternoon. He and Mrs. Rowland had come to New Orleans en route to Pass Christian, Miss., where they will spend a few days resting and enjoying the refreshing breezes from the Gulf.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, of Starkville, Miss., has lately been assisting some of the near-by brethren in protracted meetings. Brother Lipscomb is one of the most promising young men in the Southern Methodist Church, scholarly, sound, and evangelistic. He ably represented the North Mississippi Conference at the recent educational meeting at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina.

We are pleased to know that, after an illness lasting four months, Rev. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, Miss., is able to resume his "loved employ." We trust that all traces of his illness will soon vanish and that this valiant soldier of the cross will have the strength to bend his bow as in the days ago. Let the brethren keep him busy, but not overwork him until his health is fully restored.

Rev. I. T. Reames, who for many years has been one of the most active and useful members of the Louisiana Conference, is now connected with the Methodist Orphanage at Ruston, La., as assistant superintendent. Brothers Reames and Vaughan are a fine team and we feel sure that this important interest of the Church will be well cared for under their joint management.

"We are moving along very well here. I think that we have everything pretty well in hand, and I am expecting to make a fairly good report when the Annual Conference meets at Columbia next December." So writes Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of the Vancleave (Miss.) charge. This faithful pastor is also remembering the Advocate in his rounds, with some success, as is attested by our subscription files.

From the St. Helena Echo (Greensburg, La.) of Sept. 11, we take the following: "The presiding elder, Rev. H. W. Bowman, held quarterly conference at Center Church, an appointment on this charge, last Saturday and Sunday, and the pastor, Rev. R. V. Fulton, has followed the occasion with a meeting, which is reported to be quite a success. He is being assisted by his brother, Rev. J. B. Fulton, of St. Francisville, La."

We acknowledge, with appreciation, the reception of the following invitation: "Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Taft will give in marriage their daughter, Lucy Alice, to Rev. Irby Fox Holland, on the evening of Thursday, the 24th of September, 1914, at 8 o'clock, at their home, 2320 Highland Avenue, Nashville, Tenn. The honor of your presence is requested." We extend in advance to the contracting parties our congratulations and best wishes.

Brother C. M. Porter, of Opelousas, La., writing on September 7, says: "We are rejoicing this evening over the arrival in the parsonage at this place of a young Bishop, little G. A. Morgan, Jr. He weighs ten pounds and is as fine as split silk." We share the joy of the happy parents and their friends over this precious gift of the Heavenly Father, and pray that a kindly Providence may watch over the little one and bring him to a worthy and useful manhood.

Rev. W. W. Woollard attended the dedicatory exercises of the First M. E. Church, South, of Water Valley, Miss., last Sunday, this fine structure having been erected during his pastorate there. The sermon of the occasion was preached by Bishop W. B. Murrah. Rev. T. H. Dorsey, the present pastor, deserves much credit for having wiped out the indebtedness on this handsome house of worship, thus making it possible to formally set it apart to sacred uses.

A postal card, written by Dr. T. B. Holloman on Sept. 10, reads as follows: "I write to tell you of the splendid opening of Port Gibson College. President O'Neill kept busy during the summer and the fruits of his labors are showing up finely. More than 70 students enrolled the first day, and others are coming. It looks as if the institution will be taxed to its full capacity." We are delighted to receive this good news, and we trust that this historic school will have the best year in its entire history.

Rev. A. W. Turner, of Shreveport, La., writes: "Rev. F. M. Freeman, our pastor at Natchitoches, has just submitted to an operation at this place for fistula, which is very painful; but he is doing well, and if he continues to improve, will be able to leave the sanitarium in Shreveport by Sept. 20th. We have a local option election on in Jeff Davis Parish and I feel sure that the 'drys' will win." We regret to be informed of Brother Freeman's illness, and we trust that his recovery will be speedy and complete.

In a business note to our office, which brought us some names for our subscription files, Rev. A. J. Bonnette, of Sulphur, La., adds the following statement: "Mrs. Bonnette and I have recently returned from a month's vacation spent at the Seashore Campground, which was made possible through the kindness of our good people at this place. We greatly appreciate this and other tokens of love and esteem that they have shown us. May the Lord bless them and prosper the work of their hands."

We have in hand a note written on September 9 from Barland, Miss., and signed by Mrs. W. H. Smith, Mrs. E. B. Barland, and others, which reads as follows: "Rev. Geo. G. Yeager has just closed here one of the most wonderful meetings ever held in this section of the State. There were probably not less than 500 or 600 people at the service last night who confessed to having been blessed during the revival. All who heard Brother Yeager believe that God has sent him forth with a message to the world. Pray for us."

Rev. George S. Sexton, pastor of our First Church at Shreveport, in a business letter to the Publisher, makes the following reference to the splendid charge which he is serving: "Our work is progressing very well here. We have had 200 accessions to our membership thus far. All the benevolences of the Church have been provided for by subscriptions, and we have $2000 over as 'a special' for missions. We hope to make a satisfactory report to the approaching Annual Conference." This is indeed a fine showing.

The Epworth League of the First M. E. Church, South, of Alexandria, La., recently conducted "a red and blue contest" to raise money for benevolent purposes, and nearly $75 was realized. As a part of the plan, the losing side will give an entertainment to the winners. This fine band of young workers is making extensive preparations for "rally day" exercises, which will be held next Sunday. Invitations to attend are being sent out to all the young people of the city who are not members of the League or any similar organization.

Rev. S. D. Howard, our pastor at Baker, La., passed through New Orleans last Friday on his way to Barnado, La., where he was booked to assist Rev. H. C. Murphy in a meeting. While waiting for his train, he brightened our sanctum with his genial presence and we greatly enjoyed his visit. Brother Howard spoke encouragingly of the work in his charge and had many kind things to say of the brethren who have lately assisted him in meetings, among whom were Rev. W. E. Thomas, Rev. C. A. Battle, and Rev. A. J. Gearheard.

Rev. N. B. Harmon, of Yazoo City, Miss., writes: "Dr. Burrus Fearn, of our China Mission, is here on a visit to his sister, Mrs. Helen Graves. Later he will visit his brother, Mr. Tom Fearn, of Flora, Miss. He looks to be somewhat heavier than he was when last in America before this visit, but the same zeal for his work inspires him. How that grand old hero, Dr. Charles Green Andrews, Dr. Fearn's uncle, if living, would rejoice to meet him in the United States again! Dr. Fearn says the Kaiser of Germany feels so certain he and God are on the same side in the European war that he fears a prolongation of the titanic struggle."

Rev. H. S. Sprague, the capable presiding elder of the Greenville (Miss.) District, states that the financial depression resulting from the cotton situation in Mississippi has stopped all the church enterprises that were under way in his "diocese." This check to the forward church movements that had been launched in the great Delta will be only temporary. That section is immensely rich in its resources, and with Brother Sprague and his faithful co-workers on the ground to care for the interests of Methodism, things will soon be proceeding with their usual swing. It doesn't hurt much to have to exercise a little patience now and then; indeed, it is often a pretty good discipline.

We take off our hat to Rev. Thor. J. Norsworthy, the well-known evangelist, who secured during the recent Bluff Creek (La.) Camp Meeting a club of 16 subscribers to the Advocate. Brother Norsworthy seldom, if ever, conducts a revival within the bounds of our patronizing territory without introducing the Conference organ into a number of homes not before receiving it. He believes that a good way to conserve the fruits of his evangelistic work is to place the church paper in the hands of those who have been spiritually quickened, and in this he is manifestly right. The news of the expanding Kingdom of our Lord is needed in order to develop an intelligent and virile type of Methodists.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle, presiding elder of the Monroe District, says: "Rev. G. D. Purcell, of Oak Grove, La., has recently had in his charge a fine meeting, in which he was assisted by a local preacher, Rev. J. A. Taylor. There were 56 additions to our Church." We have in hand from Brother Purcell a report of his labors in his present field, which shows that the Master has wonderfully blessed his efforts. It reached us too late for this issue of the Advocate, but will appear next week. It greatly rejoices us to know that our esteemed friend is having such a fruitful ministry, which is worth more than all the honors of the Church. Evidently he must have a faith and zeal akin to those of his sainted grandfather, who was a Methodist of the best type and whose ardor to extend the Kingdom of his Lord knew no abatement.

The weakest living creature, by concentrating his powers on a single object, can accomplish something; the strongest, by dispersing his over many, may fail to accomplish anything.—Carlyle.

The death angel bore away from the home of Mr. R. R. Bynum on July 27, 1914, the spirit of his sainted wife, Mrs. JANE LEWIS BYNUM.
She was 55 years of age, and was the daughter of Rev. J. E. Lewis. She was married on March 25, 1878, to Mr. R. R. Bynum, and was a faithful wife and devoted mother. She leaves a husband and 5 children to mourn their loss, besides a host of friends whose hearts are wrung with grief over her departure. Mrs. Bynum joined the Methodist Church at the age of 14 years, and ever afterwards lived a noble, exemplary life. She has gone to receive her rich reward and to live throughout eternity with Christ Jesus in that glorious city where there is no night. We tender our heartfelt sympathy to the believed ones, and can only commend their broken hearts to a loving Savior who doeth all things well. To her faithful companion, as he comes to the closing of his life, may God grant that sweet abiding peace in his soul that passeth all understanding!

A FRIEND.

J. A. WELLS, Jr., infant son of Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Wells, of Topi-saw, Miss., was born on Oct. 18, 1913, and passed from earth to heaven on Aug. 27, 1914. For 10 months and 9 days he brightened the home of the fond parents, filling their hearts with joy and glad anticipation of his development into strong and useful manhood. He was sick about two weeks when he went to be with Jesus.
It was indeed hard to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord," but God's grace and his Word of promise gave victory. A short service was held at the parsonage home for the benefit of the many sympathizing friends and the grief-stricken mother, whose physical condition made it impossible for her to go with the body of the little one to its final resting place in Newton County. It is indeed comforting to know we have a Father in heaven who cares, and who has given us his sure Word of promise to strengthen and help in hours like this. The precious little one is not dead, but is "safe in the arms of Jesus," where he awaits the home-coming of those left behind.
May his presence there make the thought of heaven more dear!

W. H. LEWIS.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT NOTES.

The presiding elder has completed three rounds of quarterly meetings, and through the blessings of God, has been able to meet every conference, and be on time at each of them. He has traveled nearly 4000 miles, has preached 151 times, has held 60 quarterly conferences, and visited and preached in 55 different churches and communities. He has not been idle. He has had quarterly communications with the 257 stewards, and likewise with the 20 pastors.

The work is moving on nicely and prosperously, under the guidance of the twenty faithful pastors, of whom none have laid off or gone on a vacation. Every man in the district has been faithful. Not a complaint from an official against a pastor has been heard thus far. This much, in general. There are some points worthy of special mention.

J. D. Harper, the faithful itinerant of many years, and the oldest in the district, knows nothing of the number of years which have gone, but he pushes his work with vigor and amid the most trying conditions, has succeeded in completing a beautiful house of worship at Zachary, to replace the one burned in the spring.

J. A. McCormack has completed a splendid two-story house for a parsonage at Franklinton; this is the best parsonage in the district, except the district parsonage built in Baton Rouge last year.

P. H. Fontaine leads the district in point of accessions, having received $9 into the Church. P. O.
Lowrey is next in accession, with 46.

S. D. Roberts, one of the youngest men in the district, is easily in lead of the circuit preachers on the amount raised for the benevolent claims, and likewise in the possession of a ten-pound Bishop at his parsonage home.

F. B. Hill, the Englishman at Wilson, has the affairs well in hand in that charge, and with his experience of 25 years in the Wesleyan Connection as a lay preacher among sailors, is getting hold of the railroad men in his town.

Mangum at Keener Memorial, Baton Rouge, is doing well. He will complete his church this fall, and this will give us a splendid second plant in this growing city. We need to branch out here, and the third church should be planned for in the near future. Drake, at the First Church, moves steadily forward, and beside the work of this large church, looks well after the missionary work of the Conference. If you want missionary information, write to Drake;
he is full of it.

Howard, at Baker, is winding up his fourth year in good shape and will be ready for the "Spiral Glide" at the annual meet. Hoffpauir, on the Port Vincent charge, is doing his part well. He is certainly faithful, but we fear his report will be short, though it will not be through any failure on his part.

J. B. Fulton, at St. Francisville, has the love, affection, and confidence of his people, and with the splendid meetings he has held (not fruitful in accessions, yet very fruitful in the building up of the Church), will report a substantial increase over last year.

R. V. Fulton, on the St. Helena charge, is doing fine work. He will report one new building at Pine Ridge, and an organization effected at another point. J. B. Williams has his work in hand at Ponchatoula, and with the gracious revival at Wesley and the one at Springfield, and with one to be held in Ponchatoula, this work will stand in the front rank.

J. F. Foster, our handsome bachelor at Amite, is doing good work in that charge, and outside of it he is helping the brethren, and good results will be accomplished. W. L. Hunter, at Hammond, has the work in hand.
No great showing can be looked for there, as the development moves slowly, but there is advancement and the outlook is more hopeful than it has been in the past.

J. W. Harper, on the Denham
Springs charge, has held all his meetings. The full results are not known now.

J. S. Rutledge, at Pine Grove, is active, and the work is progressing.
This is a hard field, but Rutledge never stops to consider the hardness;
he forges right on.

J. W. Brown, on the Tickfaw work, is doing his work faithfully. He holds class meetings with individuals, and sometimes his questions fasten deep in their consciences. He has done faithful work. Murphy, on the Mt.
Herman charge, has done fine work.
This charge is difficult. It has but little promise, but with determination.
Brother Murphy has gone forward with his work.

The whole district will show advance on all lines, and we thank God and take courage.

H. W. BOWMAN.

Baton Rouge, La.

FLORA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: My association with Brother Grice at the Pleasant Ridge Church was very helpful to me.
Brother Grice is a capital fellow and is thoughtful of the preacher who helps him. Being with him made me love him more. I also had the pleasure of spending a few hours with Mrs.
M. L. Knight, of Hazlehurst. It was sad not to meet my good friend, Dr.
Knight. My meeting at Bentonla was a success. There were 3 accessions to the Church. Brother Hunt did some very fine preaching which was helpful to me and my people.
Three children were baptized. I held a four days' meeting at the Kearney schoolhouse recently. The people were much revived, and 3 children were baptized there. On the fourth Sunday in August I held a meeting at Livingston which resulted in 2 accessions to the Church there, and was very helpful to all the members of that church. This church is famous, not only for its present loyal membership, but for the good people who have composed its membership for the past fifty years. They have splendid homes and possess the old-time hospitality. After filling my appointment at Bentonla on the 5th Sunday I was carried from Eden by good Dr. Smith in his car, being accompanied by Brothers Price and Clide Stewart. We were delayed some time by the car refusing to go, but got to Zeiglerville in time for preaching on Monday night, where Brother Price, the man who delights in the fact that he is a Tennessee animal or preacher, had all things in readiness. We had a great meeting, lasting 8 days. A number of men were converted who began at once to pray and talk in public. One infant was baptized, as were also most of the 45 persons who were received into the church. The people generally were much interested, great crowds came to the services, and further results are expected. I am indebted to many of the people for their good care while among them, especially to Dr. Smith and Brother B. C.
Stewart and family. I cannot refrain from mentioning the bachelor stewart, Brother Charlie Anderson, who goes with the preachers and cares for them; I have never seen a more loyal man to his Church and the preachers. A Sunday school was reorganized at Zeiglerville and arrangements made for the organization of a missionary society on the day after the close of the meeting. There are great possibilities in this church. I do not think I have ever seen a finer class of young people anywhere. My people had the pleasure of having Brother Sullivan, of Millsaps College, with them on last Sunday and I hear good things said of him. Next week I am to help Brother King, at Dover, and then I am done with meetings for this year, as far as I know.
The Lord is good to us and we are happy and believe that our God will see that all things work together for our good.

Tidings From the Field

Kilmichael, Miss.

We have just closed a good meeting at Kilmichael. On the last night of the meeting we gave the right hand of fellowship to 17, and 7 were received for baptism. Brother Gladney is fine help in a revival. We have received into the Church at Kilmichael 24 members up to date, and have received 40 new members on this charge. We have one more meeting to hold. Any church will be blessed to which Brother Gladney ministers. —J. J. Garner.

Pearl Circuit, Miss. Conf.

On Sunday, Sept. 6, we closed a glorious revival at Pearl Hill Church on the Pearl Circuit. Evangelist B. H. Sommers assisted me in the meeting. He preached the gospel in its purity and power, and it went to the hearts of the people. The Spirit of the Lord was consciously with us in great power. We had 25 additions to the Church by profession of faith. The Church was spiritually revived. On the last day of the meeting we organized a mid-week prayer meeting. .... We are now in the midst of a revival at Edinburg. May God's people pray mightily for the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon the minds and hearts of the people of the Pearl circuit, that it may become a power for the cause of Christ and in winning souls. —A. L. McQueen.

Myrtle, Miss.

Dear Advocate: The revivals at all of the churches on the Myrtle charge have been held with splendid results. Rev. A. M. Bennett, who has recently taken unto himself a wife, was with me last week, and he preached good, helpful sermons. He preaches much better than he did before he had a life partner. Brother Lee Lipscomb did some great preaching here at Myrtle, as also did Brothers S. B. Myers and J. D. Wroten who were with me at other points on the work. Our Conference benevolences are practically all subscribed and the work is in good condition. We are sending some of our boys to Millsaps College this week, and one young man from this charge will give himself to the foreign missionary work. —E. H. Cunningham.

Wyatt's Chapel, North Miss.

Dear Advocate: I have been anxious to see a good, long letter from our good pastor all the year. We have had a good year at Wyatt's Chapel, and have a progressive Sunday school. The Lord gave us on the fifth Sunday in May as good a Children's Day as is generally observed anywhere. It was good to be there and hear our precious children recite and sing praises to God. Our choir did its best. We had a good collection and a good dinner. July 31st was another good day. It was the occasion of the union picnic for the Main Street and Wyatt's Chapel Sunday schools. On the fourth Sunday in August our revival services began, Brother Nelson doing the preaching and giving us fine sermons. We were rained out a few times and only had 3 accessions to the Church, but we hope and pray that the good seed sown will yet bring forth an abundant harvest. These precious young people and children are very dear to us. We do want them all saved. Please pray God to ever be with me and to help me as a teacher to be a shining light, that others seeing my good deeds may be profited by my example. Let us be prayerful and press on. —"Old Mrs. Superintendent."

Pelican, La.

Mr. Editor: We have in some respects had a great year on the Pelican charge so far. Brother H. P. Young, of Shreveport, came to us at Pelican the last week in July and for 10 days preached the most powerful sermons I have ever heard. We had quite a number of conversions, but not as many as we felt there should have been. .... We were assisted at Mitchell by a young man who had just been licensed to preach, Brother Robert A. Bozeman. He is a wonderful success as a revivalist, and stirred the community as it had perhaps never been stirred before. There were 50 or 60 conversions or perhaps more. We couldn't keep up with the number. The church there has taken a forward move, and eternity can only reveal the results of this meeting. Men were converted at home, on the road, and everywhere. Such crowds I never saw, in spite of the rain that came once or twice a day. The Lord led the way with wonderful success. .... At Bethel I held my own meeting, being disappointed in my help; but the Lord was with us, and while we did not have very many in attendance, as this is a sparsely settled community, we had a fine meeting. One choice young man of this church has given himself to the ministry. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." —W. F. Henderson, Jr.

St. Joseph, La.

We have just closed a most successful revival at this place. Rev. W. W. Holmes, of Ruston, did the preaching, Mr. R. N. Jeffrey, of Shreveport, conducted the song services, and Miss Lila Hunter, of Waterproof, presided at the organ. Brother Holmes' sermons were of a scholarly, as well as a highly spiritual, order, and by his genial manner and pleasing personality he endeared himself to the whole community. Brother Jeffrey sang with much of his old-time power, and by the gospel of song lifted his hearers nearer to God. Miss Hunter played with much skill and by her faithful and efficient service added not a little to the success of the meeting. There were 14 accessions to the Church—12 by profession of faith, and 2 by certificate. Nor were these 14 names added to the church roll the largest benefit derived from this meeting. The church itself was lifted up and a new spirit created within it; professed Christians were made to form new resolutions to give more service to the Master's cause; broken friendships were restored, and the community was made to feel and appreciate the power of the Gospel. Verily, "The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save." We confidently believe that this ten days' meeting will prove to be the beginning of a new era in the church life of St. Joseph, and we ask the readers of the Advocate to join the pastor in a prayer that it may be so. —George Fox, P. C.

A PASTOR'S REPORT.

Dear Dr. Meek: I was somewhat surprised when the appointments of the Louisiana Conference were read at Crowley last December and I was read out to the Logansport charge for another year (though I suppose that I was not the only preacher who was surprised, for I judge that others expected a move and did not get it, and doubtless some did not expect to move and were moved). However, I entered upon my second year on this charge with confidence in my people and faith in God, and the work has prospered beyond my expectation.

In entering upon the work this year, I asked the Lord to give us 100 accessions on the charge, and my prayer has been more than answered. I have already given an account of our meeting at Logansport, which was held in June. On the first Sunday in August I began my meeting in Bethel, doing my own preaching. We had quite a number of conversions and reclamations, and 17 accessions to the Church on profession of faith and 2 by certificate. The meeting there closed at the end of the first week.

On Monday, after the second Sunday in August, I began my meeting at Longstreet, doing my own preaching until the following Thursday, when Rev. H. T. Young came to me and continued the preaching for nine days. We had 36 accessions on profession of faith and 2 by certificate.
